The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3175) to regulate the immigration of aliens to and the residence of aliens in the United States, and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

A joint resolution requesting the Congress of the United States to amend the 320-acre homestead law, designated and known as the Mondell bill, to include the State of South Dakota.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring): SECTION 1:

Whereas there are now in force and effect certain laws enacted by the Congress of the United States granting and giving to citizens the right to make homestead entry upon 320 and 640 acre tracts of land; and

Whereas certain Government lands situate in the State of Nebraska are affected by the 640-acre homestead law, and certain Government lands situate in the States of Wyoming, Idaho, Montana, Washington, Oregon, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico, and Colorado are affected by the 320-acre homestead law; and

Whereas Government lands in the State of South Dakota have been and are now eliminated from any law giving to citizens the right to make homestead entry upon more than 160 acres of land; and

Whereas the general classification of the Government lands in South Dakota compares with the lands in the State so affected by the laws aforesaid; and

Whereas it is just and reasonable, from the nature of conditions, that the Government lands in the State of South Dakota be included in the 320-acre homestead act: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we favor and earnestly urge the Congress of the United States by proper enactment to so amend the 320-acre homestead law, known as the Mondell bill, as to include the remaining Government lands suitable for homestead entry situate in the State of South Dakota; and be it further

A joint resolution requesting the Secretary of the Interior to take steps to revise existing rules for the leasing of allotted Indian lands, and that our Senators and Representaives in Congress assist in securing such revision.

Be it resolved by the Senate of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to take needful and necessary steps looking to an immediate revision of existing rules and regulations promulgated by him governing the right to lease and the manner of leasing allotted Indian lands, with a view to securing the more rapid development of the large areas of unoccupied land now held by Indian allottees of the various Indian tribes. To the end that such object may be speedily attained, our Senators and Representatives in Congress are earnestly requested to lend their aid in securing immediate and favorable consideration thereof.

SEC. 2. That a copy hereof be transmitted to the Secretary of the Interior and to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the State of South Dakota.

Mr. CRAWFORD presented memorials of the congregations of the Seventh-day Adventist Churches of Huron, Webster, Aberdeen, and Florence, all in the State of South Dakota, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation compelling the observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS. I present a memorial from the Cherokee Freedmen, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial of Cherokee Freedmen.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Whereas by certain articles of the treaty, made and entered into by and between the United States of America and the Cherokee Nation, proclaimed August 11, 1866, there were certain freedmen, free colored persons, and their descendants clothed with all the rights of native Cherokees; and

Whereas by certain acts of deceit, discrimination, and opposition on the part of certain classes of Cherokees and the Cherokee Nation, and by the effect of certain acts of congressional legislation, and by the acts and doings of certain agents of the Government of the United States said persons believe and feel that said rights have been limited, curtailed, abridged, and in various instances overlooked or ignored, whereby they, as a class and as individuals of a class of citizens of the Cherokee Nation, have sustained much damage and received great injury, and believe themselves entitled to some form of redress; and

Whereas said freedmen, free colored persons, and their descendants, firmly believing in the right of the people to peaceably assemble for their own good and apply to those invested with the powers of Government for redress by petition, address, or remonstrance, have organized themselves together in one band or association under the name of ———, for the enforcement and protection of all rights granted them by the aforesaid treaty, and have adopted this method of making their grievances known and praying for relief.

Our grievances are:

1. After having been given the right to elect to settle and live in certain designated parts of the Cherokee Nation by article 4 of the treaty of 1866, said right has been violated, and the enjoyment thereof entirely defeated by promises and agreements made on the part of the Cherokees, which have not been kept and performed by them.

2. The Cherokee Nation did, about the year 1867, erect large and costly school buildings, create, and for a period covering about 16 years, maintain and support, high schools for the education of their children out of the funds of the Cherokee Nation to the exclusion of our children.

3. Said nation did erect and for many years maintain and support a blind asylum and orphans' home out of the funds of said nation to the exclusion of our people.

4. The Cherokee National Council passed certain intermarriage laws, and enforced the same, the effect of which put the Indians directly in touch with the highest form of American civilization, and gave them advantages that could not have been attained in no other way, to the exclusion of our people.

5. In the matter of the payment of moneys per capita we believe and feel that we have been unjustly dealt with, in that some of our people whose names appeared upon approved rolls of citizenship in the Cherokee Nation were paid and received such payments, while others of the same class whose names appeared upon the same rolls were paid and received none.

6. And certain classes of Cherokees have been permitted, and did by various attacks, by various suits at law, attempt to and at this time have a suit at law pending calculated to defeat our property rights in the Cherokee Nation entirely, thereby putting us to great and useless expense of time and money.

7. We believe and feel that we have been unjustly dealt with in the matter of the enrollment of our people, some of the members of some of our families having been duly enrolled as citizens, while the applications for the enrollment of others of the same families having the same status have been rejected.

8. That the applications for the enrollment of many of our people were rejected because of the time limit and the hasty action of the Secretary of the Interior and the Dawes Commission in trying to obey the requirements of the time limit.

9. A large number of our people who were rejected had been theretofore enrolled by various authorities as citizens of the Cherokee Nation, had settled in said nation in good faith, made lasting and permanent improvements upon the lands, lived unmolested for from 10 to 30 years, had exercised many of the rights of citizenship, and after being rejected were ejected and dispossessed from and of said improvements, leaving their labor and improvements without compensation.

10. The restrictions upon the alienation and incumbrance of our lands, both adults and infants, have been removed, and the supervisory jurisdiction of the Government over us and our valuable inherited lands has been relinquished all in advance of those of the Indians, and our people, though comparatively lowest in point of intelligence as a class of Cherokee citizens, have been left exposed to the greed and grafts of the shrewd and unscrupulous hoarders of wealth, who would naturally be first to appear upon the scene, and left unfavorably exposed to the attacks of the disgruntled element of the Indian citizens who yet enjoy the care and protection of the United States Government.

Wherefore we, the freedmen, free colored persons, and their descendants of the late Cherokee Nation, respectfully petition that our grievances above mentioned be given due consideration, and that we be given such redress as in the wisdom of your honorable body seems meet, and your petitioners will ever pray.

ELI NAVE, President.

SIM ROGERS, Secretary.
(Through our delegation.)

Mr. TILLMAN. I send to the desk a letter which I ask may be read and referred to the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the letter was read and referred to the Committee on Claims, as follows:

2004 ELEVENTH STREET NW.,
Washington, D. C., January 23, 1913.

Hon. B. R. TILLMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

HONORED SIR: My name is Jane Steptoe. I was born in South Carolina, not far from Beaufort, and I deposited in the Freedmen's Bank $1,100. I still have a balance of $800. I am now 72 years old, not able to work to earn my living, and am dependent upon other people for my support, and you know that I do not get all that I should have in these my declining years.

We have been encouraged about this money for several years. The Presidents have asked Congress to pay us our money ever since Mr. Cleveland was President, and Congress will not pay us. I now write to ask you, as you are in Congress and one of the men who has to appropriate this money, if you will please get this appropriation through and let Congress pay us. I can not tell you how my conditions are, but just place yourself in my position, at my age, and suppose that you had no means of support, you would think it very hard; but as the Lord has blessed and prospered you, and you don't have to be dependent upon others, please remember me and others and the Lord will certainly bless you more than twofold if you will let Congress pay us the money which is our very own. We do not ask you to give us something that does not belong to us; we are simply asking in the name of the Lord for that which is our own hard-earned money.

Respectfully, yours, JANE STEPTOE.

Mr. FLETCHER. I present resolutions adopted by the Tampa Bay Pilots' Association, of Florida, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TAMPA BAY PILOTS' ASSOCIATION,
Tampa, Fla., January 17, 1913.

Resolution.

Whereas we, the undersigned pilots of the port of Tampa, Fla., do hereby protest against the various bills now pending in the Commerce Committee of the United States Senate—"A bill to provide for the further Federal regulation of pilotage," introduced by Mr. NELSON, and known as S. 7629, and "A bill relating to the anchorage of vessels in navigable waters of the United States," also introduced by Mr. NELSON, and known as S. 3619; also a bill, H. R. 20630, introduced by Mr. HARDY, entitled "A bill to provide for the further Federal regulation of pilotage," which is awaiting the action of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries; and

Whereas we view the introduction, favorable report, and passage of the said bills to be extremely detrimental, if not, indeed, absolutely destructive, to the fundamentals of the pilotage system in this country, as well as detrimental to many of the ports; and

Whereas this pilotage system has been under control of the States for over 100 years and a board selected by the persons most interested in the safety and prosperity of shipping and appointed by our governor and approved by the State senate; and

Whereas this bill proposes arbitrarily and unnecessarily to destroy this system and to take control of this important service from the hands of those most interested in its efficiency, by whom it has been brought to its present satisfactory condition, and proposes to confide it to those who, whatever ability they may have in other respects, can not be said with certainty to have had any experience whatsoever with the duties and requirements of the service; and

Whereas the Federal regulations, as they appear to us (a) would not increase the efficiency of the pilots or the pilotage system now in vogue; (b) would and could not decrease the rates of pilotage without becoming a drain on the Public Treasury; (c) would tyrannically usurp a business which has been built by time, experience, and the expenditures of large sums of money, thereby depriving many individuals of the fruits of their labor, to which they are justly entitled: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the pilots aforesaid, do hereby respectfully, and as earnestly and emphatically as in our power, memorialize and petition our United States Representatives in Congress and United States Senators from this State to use their utmost endeavors to prevent these bills from becoming a law or any antipilotage legislation of any nature.

Also, that a copy of this resolution be sent to the President of the Senate, one to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, one to the chairman of the Commerce Committee, one to the chairman of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, one to the president of American Pilots' Association, and urge them to use their influence in defeating these bills.

Mr. OWEN. I present a concurrent resolution passed by the Legislature of Oklahoma, memorializing Congress to pass a law providing for the election of Federal district judges by the people of their respective States. I ask that the concurrent resolution be read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 3.

Resolution memorializing Congress to pass a law providing for the election of Federal district judges by the people of their respective States.

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the Senate concurring therein), That—

Whereas the Federal district judges who receive their office by appointment by the President of the United States and who hold their office for life, or during good behavior, and who are not amenable to the people, and by reason of this are not always mindful of the rights and privileges of the people; and

Whereas since their creation by the American Congress their jurisdiction and powers have been enlarged until the special interest seeking classes and the wealthy can and do compel the common people of our country to go into the Federal courts oftentimes at a large expenditure of money and time, taking them away from the judges whom they, the common people, elect; and

Whereas the Federal district judges have become a refuge for the great corporations, contesting the laws passed by our State legislature and thereby having them declared unconstitutional, as in the recent case of our revenue laws, whereby the corporations were permitted to get from under the burdens of taxation and shift them upon the farmer, the merchant, and laboring classes: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Oklahoma (the Senate concurring therein), That we memorialize, request, and urge Congress to pass a law providing for the election of Federal district judges, limiting their jurisdiction and power and their tenure of office to a term of years.

That a copy of this resolution be sent to our United States Senators and Members of the National House of Representatives.

Passed by the house of representatives January 20, 1913.

Mr. OWEN. I present a concurrent resolution passed by the Legislature of Oklahoma relative to immediate provision being made for the payment to all members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians who have been endowed with the rights of citizenship of their pro rata part of all funds now held by the Government of the United States, and so forth. I ask that the concurrent resolution be read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 4.

Be it resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring therein), That—

Whereas the Government of the United States holds in trust approximately the sum of $6,500,000 for the members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians; and

Whereas under the terms of the treaty of 1866 between the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians and the United States certain lands known as the Leased District, lying between the ninety-eighth and one-hundredth meridian west longitude, were ceded to the United States for a nominal consideration of $300,000; and

Whereas the members of said tribes of Indians have, through their officials and representatives, since said treaty contended that it was the intention of the tribes to lease said lands to the United States for specific purposes and not to sell the same; and

Whereas the actual value of said Leased District was many millions of dollars in excess of said $300,000: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Oklahoma, That we respectfully memorialize the Congress of the United States—

First. That it make immediate provision for the payment of all those members of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians who have been endowed with all the rights of citizenship, including the right to alienate their lands as other citizens of the United States, of their pro rata part of all funds now held by the Government of the United States for said Indians; and

Second. That it enact such legislation as will provide for suitable and adequate payment to the members of said tribes of Indians for the reasonable value of said Leased District: And be it further

Resolved, That the Senators and Representatives from the State of Oklahoma are requested to use all honorable means to secure the enactment of the foregoing legislation.

Passed the house of representatives January 20, 1913.

Whereas it appears from an investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States, and otherwise, that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States, notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States, and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof by placing the subject under the Federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and control its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now therefore be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the application be made, and hereby is made, to Congress under the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States, for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such a prohibition by appropriate legislation.

[Memorial and joint resolution in relation to the Nebraska Territorial Militia; introduced by Robert C. Druesedow.]

Whereas the Nebraska Territorial Militia, who served four months in subduing the several raids and depredations of hostile Indians between 1862 and 1864, have never been officially recognized as entitled to all the benefits of the pension laws as other volunteer organizations for the alleged reason that they were not regularly mustered into the service of the United States; and

Whereas these volunteer soldiers were called and mustered into active service by our Territorial executive officers, appointed by the Federal Government, and when no time was given for sending the regular mustering officers on account of the sudden unprovoked acts of marauding and murdering bands of Indians, the acknowledged wards of the Government; and

Whereas the settlers of the border territory, the overland mail, and the emigrants to the Rocky Mountain district were justly entitled to the quickest and fullest protection of the Federal authorities: Be it

Resolved, That our Senators and Representatives in Congress, present and prospective, be requested to renew the best and earliest endeavors of their predecessors to procure the passage of an act similar to the one passed in February, 1895, giving the Missouri State Militia title to pension, etc.; and

Resolved, That the honorable secretary of the State of Nebraska be requested to forward a certified copy of this memorial to each of our Senators and Representatives as soon as possible after its passage and approval, as a bill for the relief of the militia of several border States is in the hands of committee on Federal relations, which ought to include the Nebraska Territorial Militia, whose services were rendered and accepted when the Government did not have sufficient troops for the common defense of our frontier.

I hereby certify that the above is a correct copy of a resolution adopted by the House of Representatives of the Nebraska Legislature on the 28th day of January, 1913.

Mr. PAGE. I present a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of Vermont, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution making application to Congress under the provisions of Article V of the Constitution of the United States for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited.

Whereas it appears from investigation recently made by the Senate of the United States, and otherwise, that polygamy still exists in certain places in the United States, notwithstanding prohibitory statutes enacted by the several States thereof; and

Whereas the practice of polygamy is generally condemned by the people of the United States and there is a demand for the more effectual prohibition thereof by placing the subject under Federal jurisdiction and control, at the same time reserving to each State the right to make and enforce its own laws relating to marriage and divorce: Now therefore

Resolved by the senate and house of representatives, That the application be made, and hereby is made, to Congress, under the provisions of Article V, of the Constitution of the United States, for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, and Congress shall be given power to enforce such prohibition by appropriate legislation.

Resolved, That the legislatures of all other States of the United States now in session or when next convened be, and they hereby are, respectfully requested to join in this application by the adoption of this or an equivalent resolution.

Resolved further, That the secretary of state be, and he hereby is, directed to transmit copies of this application to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, and to the several Members of said bodies representing this State therein; also, to transmit copies hereof to the legislatures of all other States of the United States.

FRANK E. HOWE,
President of the Senate.
CHARLES A. PLUMLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved December 18, 1912.

ALLEN M. FLETCHER, Governor.

STATE OF VERMONT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a joint resolution making application to Congress, under the provision of Article V of the Constitution of the United States for the calling of a convention to propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, whereby polygamy and polygamous cohabitation shall be prohibited, approved December 18, 1912, as appears by the files and records of this office.

Witness my signature and the seal of this office, at Montpelier, this 10th day of January, 1913.

[SEAL.] GUY W. BAILEY,
Secretary of State.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have in my hand a joint resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina ratifying the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, providing for the election of United States Senators by the people. North Carolina was the first State to ratify the amendment, and as the resolution directs that a copy of it shall be sent to the two Houses of Congress, I ask that this resolution lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution ratifying the seventeenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

Whereas both the Houses of the Sixty-second Congress of the United States of America, at its second session, by a constitutional majority of two-thirds thereof, made the following proposition to amend the Constitution of the United States of America, in the following words, to wit:

"Resolved that the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That in lieu of the first paragraph of section

2 of Article I of the Constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, the following be proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the States:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

"When vacancies happen in the representation of any State in the Senate, the executive authority of such State shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies: Provided, That the legislature of any State may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

"This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any Senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the Constitution."

Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of North Carolina, That the said proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States be, and the same is hereby, ratified by the General Assembly of the State of North Carolina; and further be it

Resolved, That certified copies of this joint resolution be forwarded by the governor of this State to the Secretary of State at Washington and the presiding officers of each House of the National Congress.

In the general assembly, read three times, and ratified this 25th day of January, 1913.

APPOINTMENT OF GENERAL COURTS-MARTIAL.

Mr. DU PONT. From the Committee on Military Affairs I report favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 8272) regulating the appointment of general courts-martial in the Armies of the United States, including all persons belonging thereto and all persons now or hereafter made subject to military law, and I submit a report (No. 1182) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I trust that there may be no objection made, for the reason that the legislation embodied in it has been and is most urgently and pressingly needed for the proper discipline and efficiency of the Army.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware makes a report from the Committee on Military Affairs. The matter is not in order for debate unless permission for the present consideration of the bill is granted, and the question has not yet been submitted to the Senate.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, the few words I am going to say are of an explanatory nature.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. DU PONT. I repeat that the few remarks I am going to make are simply of an explanatory nature, so that Senators may understand the importance of the measure. The administration of military justice is seriously hampered by certain provisions of existing laws which were framed many years ago and are entirely out of touch with present conditions.

In the first place, the delays incident to trials by general courts-martial are excessive. The report of the Judge Advocate General for the past year shows that the average period between the preferment of charges and the official announcement of acquittal or conviction is nearly seven weeks, and, this being the average period, it goes without saying that in very many cases the time is as long as three or four months; during which period, if officers, the accused remain in arrest, and, if enlisted men, in confinement, and in either case are unable in consequence to perform their appropriate military duties. This is a very poor showing, as the fundamental principle of a code of military punishment is the enforcement of prompt obedience by prompt punishment.

Another consideration, perhaps even more important, is that whenever troops are assembled in any considerable numbers, under existing conditions, for instruction or other purposes, there is no provision of law by which military offenses can be punished, and I can best illustrate this by citing the state of things which existed when a division of troops was assembled on the Mexican frontier about a year ago. The commander of that division had no authority to convene a general court-martial for the trial of offenders, and discipline could only be preserved by the convening of general courts-martial under the fiction of law, by one of his subordinate officers who happened to be in command of the Department of Texas.

The Military Committee has made careful examination into this state of affairs and believes that it is imperative that some legislation should be passed at once to promote the proper discipline and efficiency of the Army; and I am informed that the House Committee on Military Affairs has already examined and approved of the legislation embodied in this bill in connection with the proposed revision of the Articles of War. I hope, therefore, that it may pass the Senate, to the end that it may be incorporated in the Army appropriation bill and put into effect on the 1st of July next.

It is to be observed that the greater part of the provisions embodied in the bill are those now on the statute book. The changes proposed enable general courts-martial to be convened with greater facility and promptitude, as well as to more effectively guard the rights of the accused, both of which considerations are of the highest importance. The special courts-martial herein provided for take the place of the old garrison and regimental courts-martial, with authority to impose sentences of somewhat more severity, which will enable these tribunals to deal with many offenses which heretofore had to be brought before general courts-martial, and will greatly expedite the administration of military justice. The provisions in regard to summary courts-martial are practically those which are now on the statute book, with one proviso, which is believed to be more just to the enlisted men who are brought before these courts.

In this connection I will send to the Secretary's desk, and ask that it be read, a communication to the Secretary of War from nearly all of the general officers of the Army enlarging upon the necessities of the prompt passage of the legislation referred to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the letter, as follows:

WASHINGTON, January 13, 1913.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

SIR: In response to your verbal request for an expression of opinion upon the "proposed new articles of war," now being considered by Congress with a view to their enactment into law as a military code for the armies of the United States, we, the undersigned general officers of the Army, after a deliberate study of the proposed new articles, are pleased to state as follows:

1. That we, and we believe all other older officers of the Army, have long been impressed with the fact that the present Articles of War are archaic in character, ill adapted to the prompt and efficient administration of military justice in the Army under modern service conditions, and therefore badly in need of revision.

2. That we consider the revision of present articles, as set forth in the "proposed new articles," has been thoroughly and carefully made, obsolete articles in the present code having been omitted, the remaining articles carefully revised, new and badly needed articles added, and the whole so systematically and scientifically arranged as to form a military code admirably adapted to the needs of military justice both in peace and in war in the Army not only as at present organized but also under the proposed reorganization.

3. That we are therefore of the opinion that the "proposed new articles of war" are in every way a great and a much-needed improvement upon the present articles, and that the sooner they are enacted into law the better it will be for the interests of prompt and efficient administration of military justice in the Army.

Arthur Murray, major general, United States Army; Thomas H. Barry, major general, United States Army; Wm. H. Carter, major general, United States Army; Tasker H. Bliss, brigadier general, United States Army; E. Z. Steever, brigadier general, United States Army; R. K. Evans, brigadier general, United States Army; C. R. Edwards, brigadier general, United States Army; Fred. A. Smith, brigadier general, United States Army; R. W. Hoyt, brigadier general, United States Army; W. S. Schuyler, brigadier general, United States Army; M. M. Macomb, brigadier general, United States Army; Marion P. Maus, brigadier general, United States Army.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I only desire to say at this time that I heartily concur with the chairman of the committee [Mr. DU PONT] that this proposed legislation is of great importance to the administration of the affairs of the Army. Especially has the measure commended itself to those of us who have seen service in either of the armies during the Civil War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on Military Affairs the Senator from Delaware reports Senate bill 8272, and asks unanimous consent for its present consideration. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That courts-martial shall be of three kinds, namely: First, general courts-martial; second, special courts-martial; and third, summary courts-martial.

SEC. 2. General courts-martial may consist of any number of officers from 5 to 13, inclusive.

SEC. 8. General courts-martial shall have power to try any person subject to military law for any crime or offense made punishable by the Articles of War, and any other person who by statute or by the law of war is subject to trial by military tribunals: Provided, That no officer shall be brought to trial before a general court-martial appointed by the Superintendent of the Military Academy.

Summary courts-martial shall have power to try any soldier, except one who is holding the privileges of a certificate of eligibility to promotion, for any crime or offense not capital made punishable by the Articles of War: Provided, That noncommissioned officers shall not, if they object thereto, be brought to trial before a summary court-martial without the authority of the officer competent to bring them to trial before a general court-martial.

Summary courts-martial shall have power to adjudge punishment not to exceed confinement at hard labor for three months or forfeiture of three months' pay, or both, and in addition thereto reduction to the ranks in the cases of noncommissioned officers and reduction in classification in the cases of first-class privates: Provided, That when the summary-court officer is also commanding officer no sentence of such summary court-martial adjudging confinement at hard labor or forfeiture of pay, or both, for a period in excess of one month, shall be carried into execution until the same shall have been approved by superior authority.

SEC. 11. Articles 72, 73, 75, 81, 82, and 83 of section 1342 of the Revised Statutes; the first section of an act entitled "An act to promote the administration of justice in the Army," approved October 1, 1890, as amended by the first section of an act approved June 18, 1898 (30 Stat., 483, 484), are hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. That this act shall take effect on July 1, 1913.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill regulating the constitution, composition, and jurisdiction of courts-martial in the armies of the United States, and for other purposes."

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR DISTRICT OF CONNECTICUT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report favorably, with an amendment, the bill (S. 8058) providing for an increase of salary of the United States attorney for the district of Connecticut, and I submit a report (No. 1179) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, in line 5, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$3,500," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States attorney for the district of Connecticut shall be at the rate of $3,500 a year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAWS RELATING TO ALASKA.

Mr. SMOOT. From the Committee on Printing I report with amendments Senate concurrent resolution No. 38, to print the laws of the United States applicable to the Territory of Alaska. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The amendments were, in line 2, before the word "thousand," to insert "four"; in line 7, before the word "copies," to strike out "thousand" and insert "1,500"; in line 8, before the word "copies," to strike out "thousand" and insert "and 2,500"; and in line 9, after the words "House of Representatives," to strike out "and ——— copies for each of the Committees on Territories of the Senate and the House of Representatives," so as to make the concurrent resolution read:

The amendments were agreed to.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

SEIZURES OF COTTON.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on the Judiciary I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 16314) to amend section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, and I submit a report (No. 1181) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill which I send to the desk is a House print, and the motion in italics should be read as part of the bill. The Senate committee has submitted no amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator that according to the recognized practice of the Senate it is necessary that it should be the Senate print.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It has been printed; but the clerk, by mistake, sent me the wrong print.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can be read, if the Senator desires.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 162 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1911, be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 162. The Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction of any claim therefor filed prior to January 1, 1915, of those whose property was taken subsequent to June 1, 1865, under the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 12, 1863, entitled 'An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in insurrectionary districts within the United States,' and acts amendatory thereof where the property so taken was sold and the net proceeds thereof were placed in the Treasury of the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall return said net proceeds to the owners thereof, on the judgment of said court, and full jurisdiction is given to said court to adjudge said claims, any statutes of limitations to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That no allegation or proof of loyalty shall be required in the presentation or adjudication of such claims."

Mr. CRAWFORD. I shall be obliged to ask to have the bill go over.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think the Senator from South Dakota will not ask that, if he will allow me to make a very brief statement in regard to the measure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Utah will proceed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The only change the bill proposes to make in existing law is to add the proviso which dispenses with the allegation and proof of loyalty in this particular class of claims. These are claims that originated after the close of the war, as a result of the seizure of certain cotton by the Government of the United States. The general rule stated by the statute is that in the case of claims brought in the Court of Claims there shall be an allegation and proof of loyalty; but it occurred to the House, which passed the bill, and to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, which considered it, that that ought to be dispensed with in cases of this kind, where the seizure was made and the claim arose after the conclusion of the war.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I should like to ask the Senator if the limitation as to time, 1915, is the present law?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No. That, however, is a limitation upon the existing law and not an extension of it, because under the existing law no time is fixed within which the claims are to be presented, and this limits their presentation to the time stated, 1915.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the omnibus claims bill we inserted a provision that barred the sending of these war claims to the Court of Claims upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. If I may interrupt the Senator, these are cases that do not come to Congress at all. They are presented under the general provision that allows a person to go to the Court of Claims if he has a claim of this sort. They will never come before Congress.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What class of claims are they?

Mr. OVERMAN. They are claims where cotton was seized as abandoned property after June 1, 1865, the proceeds of the sale of which, the Supreme Court of the United States held, have been held in the Treasury as a trust fund, as after Lincoln's and Johnson's proclamations everybody was loyal.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then this is a class of cases where the money is actually in the United States Treasury?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Precisely.

Mr. OVERMAN. Exactly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The money is in the Treasury.

Mr. OVERMAN. We do not have to give any authority to the claimants to go to the Court of Claims.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is not a class of claims that comes to Congress, then?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Not at all. I thought the Senator did not realize that these claims are not of that class.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if they are not claims, however, that have been before the Claims Committee for many, many years past?

Mr. OVERMAN. Claims of this sort have been before Congress; but the Senator will remember a few years ago Congress passed a general statute allowing anybody having a claim of this sort to go directly to the Court of Claims, and this is intended to remove the necessity for pleading and establishing loyalty. It will allow anyone who has a just claim to go before the Court of Claims.

The Senator will remember that I had published a list of the claims where the property seized was held by the person as the bailee for the Southern Confederacy. That was done to keep anybody from going to the Court of Claims in such a case, because where it was held by him as bailee for the Southern Confederacy of course he could not recover.

Any person who has a just claim arising after June 1, 1865, for property seized after that date, of course under Lincoln's and Johnson's amnesty proclamations, is not required to prove loyalty. But in the statute the words were not sufficient, and the court has held that they must plead loyalty. This bill removes that bar. It has twice passed the House of Representatives unanimously.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the bill apply simply to the $4,000,000 held in the Treasury?

Mr. OVERMAN. It will not be $4,000,000; it wil not be $1,000,000. It covers all those claims where property was seized after June 1, 1865, in the hands of an owner who had been pardoned by Abraham Lincoln and Andrew Johnson. That is the truth about it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It applies to the fund of $4,000,000, which will not be increased.

Mr. OVERMAN. It applies to that fund. It will not be one-third of it or one-fourth of it or one-fifth of it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. I ought to say to the Senator from Utah that there is a contention that a good deal of the cotton had been previously sold to the Confederate Government. That, of course, is an issue that is not involved in this bill at all. The Government claimed, of course, that where the original owner had sold the cotton to the Confederate Government he could not then claim compensation for it from the United States. But that does not apply to these cases where the cotton was sold, and the name of the claimant reported to the Government, and the money placed in the Treasury. It merely allows the real owners at the time of the seizure to put in their claim.

Mr. OVERMAN. The bill simply removes that bar of disloyalty.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to mean to say that if a man was disloyal before the 1st of June, 1865, and was the owner of the cotton, and after June 1, 1865, it was taken by the Government of the United States, the bill removes that bar of disloyalty?

Mr. OVERMAN. It does. Of course, they were all disloyal prior to April, 1865, but then when Lincoln and Johnson issued their amnesty proclamations and they were received back into the Union they were loyal citizens, and the Supreme Court in the Klein case—Thirteenth Wallace—has already held that they were loyal.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the bill provide any way to take care of cases, like many that I believe exist, where the Southern Confederacy had taken the cotton but it was held in the hands of private individuals?

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not affect that class of cases. In these cases the Government gave a receipt and the fund was placed in the Treasury.

Mr. SMOOT. The pending bill does not touch that class of claims.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not touch any claim except where the person was the real bona fide owner of the cotton after June, 1865, where the cotton was seized and the money put into the Treasury and held in trust; and the Supreme Court has said twice that it is a trust fund.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It simply applies to this one class of claims.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I was on the committee that framed the code of which that provision is one of the sections. The purpose of it was to remove the bar of the statute of limitations. For six years after 1869, I think it was, the owners of this cotton had the right to go before what was known as the Southern Claims Commission to assert their ownership. The cotton was taken under the authority of an act of Congress known as the captured and abandoned property act, which was subsequently held to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The result of that action of the Supreme Court was to leave no authority whatever for the seizure of the cotton. It left the taking wholly unauthorized. The question of loyalty or disloyalty had nothing to do with it. The special agents of the Government found a number of persons in the South in possession of cotton, and seized it under the supposed authority of the act of Congress which was afterwards decided to be invalid.

This bill is intended to so change the law as to give a cause of action to those whose property was thus taken and afterwards sold and the proceeds placed in the Treasury to the credit of the persons in whose possession it was at the time of seizure. It does not propose to enlarge the provisions of law so as to create a cause of action in favor of those whose cotton was taken and sold and the proceeds not placed in the Treasury. This latter class of taking constitutes about 50 per cent of the cotton that was taken under the authority of that supposed act. A very limited part of the seizures made under the authority of that act resulted in the proceeds being actually placed in the Treasury. The entire fund now in the Treasury and subject to be claimed under the provisions of this bill, I think, represents less than $4,000,000.

Before the owners of the cotton were advised by the claim agents, who stir up such things as this, that they were the owners of this money and there was a cause of action in their favor for its recovery, the statute of limitations had in many cases run against the claims. Thus the matter stood for some 25 years, until we incorporated certain provisions in the new code of practice in that chapter relating to the organization and jurisdiction of the courts of the United States. In dealing with that part of the chapter which related to the practice and jurisdiction of the Court of Claims it was thought to be an appropriate place to insert a provision of this kind. The effect of the passage of this act will be, therefore, to renew, in favor of those who owned the cotton at the time of seizure, provided this took place after the 1st of June, 1865, a cause of action, and their recovery in such a proceeding is limited to the funds that are now on deposit in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of that particular claimant. It does not enlarge, as I said before, the scope of the proceeding so as to include those whose property was seized and the proceeds thereof never accounted for in the form of a deposit in the Treasury.

I think that this provision for dispensing with proof of loyalty of the claimant, now sought to be incorporated in the law, was taken for granted when we framed the code. The Court of Claims has recently worked out the result, though, that another provision of the law which related to claims for damages to property seized and destroyed during the war should apply, and that in this class of cases it should be a condition precedent that the owner should be able to show that he was loyal at the date of the taking.

This class of claims is to be differentiated altogether from that class of claims, because the seizure in these cases was made after the war had ceased, and whether the owners of the cotton seized were disloyal or loyal, the agents of the Government were not entitled to seize it, because it was not the policy of the victorious army nor the Government of the United States to take from the vanquished in the Civil War such property as they rightfully owned in their individual right.

Therefore I say I think there is no great mystery about the matter when it is somewhat well understood, as it can be well understood by a very short examination.

It is now sought to introduce a limitation of time, which, in my opinion, is wholly unnecessary, since there is a limitation of the amount and identity of fund to be recovered. The right of action is confined to those who have money on deposit in the Treasury and which fact is shown by the public record. If that provision limiting the time for presenting claims to January 1, 1915, is inserted now, it will be necessary to change it again if some claim agent at any time after 1915 shall discover that some one has not presented his claim. But the question of loyalty was a minor one, and really ought not to arise in the controversy, because the fact is that this was property taken from private custody and after the war ceased.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the fact that this report was just handed in this morning and has not been printed, and these claims may have relation in some form—I am not sure that they do or do not—to other claims, or may establish some precedent with reference to the extension of time that is serious, I feel disposed to insist that the matter shall go over until the report is printed. It can not delay the measure much, and I think it is a better procedure than to act immediately upon these reports without having them printed and having an opportunity to examine them.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the matter goes over under that objection, I trust the Senator from South Dakota will look into it also with a view to inserting a provision affirmatively, if not there now, that will prevent a recovery for cotton that was sold to the Confederate Government and subsequently seized by other persons under some claim that it had been abandoned by the Confederacy and that these therefore became entitled to it by mere act of taking it. I should limit the relief to persons whose cotton was taken from them personally and from their ownership. There exist many claims growing out of the seizure of cotton that was bought by the Confederate Government and because of inadequate transportation facilities was not shipped to the centers where it was converted into money or supplies by the Confederate Government. There are doubtless a number of persons who have that sort of pretended title and who may come in under this bill with claims unless specifically excluded. I do not think there is anything in the bill that includes what the Senator from South Dakota has in mind, and it is a feature worthy of adoption.

Mr. OVERMAN. The courts have held in numerous cases that they can not recover.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. This is a general act giving to everybody the right, but I think it ought to be limited.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from South Dakota desires that the bill may go over I have no objection to that. I am satisfied if he will examine it he will favor it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will go over.

STANLEY MITCHELL.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7622) for the relief of Stanley Mitchell (S. Rept. 1180). I call the attention of the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], who introduced the bill, to this report.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill. It will take only a minute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let it be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I think it should be read before the question of consideration is put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint Stanley Mitchell, midshipman, United States Navy, an ensign in the United States Navy, and place him upon the retired list as such with three-quarters pay of his grade: Provided, That the said Stanley Mitchell shall not, by the passage of this act, be entitled to back pay or allowances.

Mr. GALLINGER. I should like to have a brief statement made concerning this matter. It is a little irregular.

Mr. OVERMAN. This man was a cadet at Annapolis. He stood his mental examination for graduation and stood very high in his class, but failed on the physical examination, on account of tuberculosis. Three doctors and the Army surgeon said he had contracted the disease while a student at Annapolis.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am now reminded of the fact. I am familiar with the case, and I think it is a very just one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONNECTICUT RIVER DAM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, on Saturday last, just before adjournment, I asked unanimous consent for the fixing of a day for the consideration of an important bill on the calendar, authorizing the construction of a dam across the Connecticut River. At the request of the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], the matter was deferred until to-day. I now send to the desk a proposed unanimous-consent agreement relating to that bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its adoption.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut asks unanimous consent for the adoption of the order which he has sent to the desk, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Thursday, February 6, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 8033, calendar No. 1001, authorizing the construction of a dam across the Connecticut River, and before adjournment on that legislative day will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, all amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill through regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

This agreement shall not interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on January 11, 1913, concerning Senate bill 4043, to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases nor with appropriation bills, conference reports, or the consideration of the commemorative resolutions which are on the calendar for Saturday, February 8.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this bill, as I said upon Saturday, is apparently one of local concern only, but, upon examination of the bill, I conceive it to be one of very general concern. I do not want to be placed in the position of opposing the proper consideration of the bill, and I am perfectly willing that the bill shall, for instance, be made the unfinished business, so that it may come up from day to day and we may discuss it; but I do not feel this morning that I am willing to consent, at this late hour in the session, that a bill, which is of vast importance to the country, and to our part of the country particularly, shall be crowded in and considered under the compulsion of a unanimous-consent agreement. If the bill should pass without certain amendments, judging the future by the past, the President would undoubtedly veto the bill, and therefore nothing would be gained. If the bill should pass with certain amendments, then it is the entering wedge, Mr. President, to the establishment of a policy in this country with reference to power sites than which there is no more important subject before the country. Whether I agree with the bill or whether I disagree with it in its present form would make very little difference, for the reason that there is not sufficient time to work out and amplify and make efficient a power-site measure which will be what it ought to be when it is finally adopted. What I object to, however, is the adoption of that which will be cited as a precedent and the initiation of a policy without carrying with it all those things which a policy of that kind should have.

Step by step, rather quietly and inoffensively and modestly, they are fastening upon our part of the country a system which is not entirely agreeable to all parties. While this measure may be a proper one, I think anyone must concede that there are many other things which ought to go with it, and that many things should be done with reference to the matter of conservation on the other side of the question, in order to make conservation something aside from that of reservation. What I want is to take up this whole question and formulate a policy of conservation which will make our natural resources available to the people. As it is now our coal, our power sites, our agricultural lands are locked up, and it does seem to me that we ought to formulate a policy which while conserving these resources against monopoly permits them to be available to the people. I am opposed to this piecemeal, slipshod, incomplete, and ineffective method of dealing with the subject.

Mr. President, just a word further. I am perfectly willing, as I have said, to meet with all those who are in favor of establishing a policy with reference to our water-power sites, such a policy as will prevent their being taken possession of by a few corporations and monopolies; but, at the same time, I should want a policy which would be of some service to the people in the community in which the power sites are established. If we are going to push this bill with these amendments in it, I feel that the entire subject should be fought out and a policy as broad as the country established, because this will be cited as a precedent.

I ask the Senator from Connecticut if he is not willing that this bill should be made the unfinished business, so that we may work out around this proposition a measure commensurate with the importance of the subject with which it deals?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, replying to the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho, I have this to observe: Of course I understand that what he has said is tantamount to an objection if I should persist in the application for unanimous consent to vote on the bill on the legislative day named. Am I not correct?

Mr. BORAH. Permit me to say, Mr. President, that I would say that it is tantamount to that only for to-day. I would have to object to it for to-day for the reason that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who is absent, asked that the matter be not disposed of to-day, and, so far as to-day is concerned, I would have to object. I am very anxious—just as anxious as anyone else can be—that this matter be worked out; but I am sure that only one side of it is being worked out by this bill; and while I do not say that I would object to a unanimous-consent agreement, I would object to it taking effect in so short a time that we could not have sufficient opportunity to properly debate the measure. I would want a longer time than the 6th of February.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The 6th of February, of course, was only the time of the legislative day upon which the bill would be acted upon. The legislative day might run on for any number of calendar days after that, as it would if the bill were the unfinished business.

Mr. BORAH. But it might require a vast amount of physical energy to run it on.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The only objection to making the bill the unfinished business, Mr. President, would be that it might then be displaced at any time if the Senate should get tired of hearing the advocates of the bill discuss it. The Senate might then proceed to the consideration of something else, when the bill would be swept from its preferred position and relegated to the calendar.

So far as the discussion of the measure is concerned, of course, it could be proceeded with any day as the unfinished business, exactly as well as though the unanimous consent was granted; but there was no agreement for a disposition of the bill if it were made the unfinished business. I had offered the unanimous-consent proposition after conference with the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]; with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], who drew the views of the minority; and with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], under whose immediate charge the bill is. It was satisfactory to all of us, and I had hoped that the unanimous consent might be granted. I think I should hardly feel justified in agreeing to another course of procedure unless there was actual objection made to this request for unanimous consent.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I have said, I shall have to object to the request for the day, but if the Senator from Colorado returns to-morrow perhaps we can agree upon it. I do not want to prevent the Senator from Connecticut getting his bill passed at this session, but I am very anxious that a proper time be given for its consideration, because there are extraneous matters in the bill, as I look at it—there are matters in it which ought to be in a separate bill—so that we could work out a policy with reference to power sites without having the extreme pressure of a local situation forcing us to the subject.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Idaho will not proceed to the discussion of the bill now. I do not want to take up so much of the time of the Senate in asking for a unanimous-consent agreement. I admit there are many things in the bill about which Senators have different ideas, and I agree with the Senator from Idaho that time enough ought to be taken in the discussion of the provisions of the bill so that a proper bill may be worked out, if this is not a proper bill, and that a proper policy should be adopted; but my view has been, and still is, that that result, much to be desired, could be attained under a unanimous-consent agreement—a proposition which could run on for any number of calendar days—to finally dispose of it in some way upon the legislative day. That simply means that, without interfering with appropriation bills, conference reports, and the funeral exercises, the bill will be kept before the Senate until it is acted upon. It might be passed, it might be rejected, it might be amended, or it might be indefinitely postponed or laid upon the table; but the mere agreement to dispose of it does not at all deprive anybody of any rights, so far as I can see.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, as I have said, I will have to object to the request for to-day; but I do not desire to be understood, if the Senator wishes to consider the matter, as objecting further than to-day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator does not object in a captious spirit at all, but in order that my own record may be clean and that I may not have waived any right or violated any understanding I had with the chairman of the committee, I wanted the objection to be made for the day. I will then confer with all these gentlemen again and propose some other course to-morrow. I give notice, however, that each day, until some program is agreed upon, I shall ask the Senate to attempt to agree upon a program for the early consideration of this bill.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I merely desire to suggest to the Senator that it seems to me a rather unusual course to ask for unanimous consent to consider a bill through all the stages to its final passage, involving a matter of this importance, when it has not been discussed at all and no consideration has been given to the measure in the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why, Mr. President, the procedure is not at all unusual.

Mr. JONES. I do not remember——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The discussion may go on, as I have said, all the rest of the session, if Senators want to keep the matter before the Senate——

Mr. JONES. So I understand; but the bill——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And if they do not so desire, they can indefinitely postpone the bill at any time.

Mr. JONES. That, of course, is entirely plain; but I do not remember of any time in my short service here where a bill of any importance has been put down by unanimous consent for consideration and disposal on a legislative day when no discussion has been had on it at all during the session.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do not care to discuss that now, because objection was made and the matter is not before the Senate.

Mr. JONES. I simply wanted to suggest that for the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, apropos of the discussion which has just taken place, I send to the Secretary's desk, and ask to have read for the information of the Senate, some telegrams bearing upon the Connecticut River improvement measure.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, the bill (S. 223) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce, and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, being Calendar No. 870, is a bill in which the producers of cereals and grains in the Northwest are very much interested. I give notice that at the conclusion of the consideration of Senate bill No. 1, which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] has given notice he would call up for consideration, I shall ask the Senate to consider Senate bill 223.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, on January 30 I gave notice that to-day, after the morning business was disposed of, I should move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1, a bill providing for the establishment of a department of health.

It has been three years since a bill was introduced for the purpose of establishing a department of health substantially of like purpose with that which is now before the Senate, on the calendar as Senate bill No. 1, providing for a department of health. This bill was very thoroughly and carefully considered by the committee; many hearings were given; and it was reported on April 13, 1912, now nearly one year ago.

The Republican Party has committed itself to the policy of improving the processes for caring for the public health. The Democratic Party has declared in favor of it in terms most explicit. The question has been referred to the President's Commission on Efficiency, and a favorable report made by that commission.

I do not think the bill now needs debate. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate to go into any prolonged debate. I should like merely to state, as a brief——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that he has not yet moved to take up the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I am now submitting a few preliminary observations, and will then make the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. OWEN. The bill merely provides for the consolidation of an independent health service with our present health service, combined with the bureaus having charge of the enforcement of the pure-food act and the collection of vital statistics. The matter is before the Senate, and I think it is well understood by every Senator. I trust the matter may be disposed of without any extended debate. I shall be very glad to answer any questions with regard to it that may be asked.

I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not take up this bill for consideration at this time. This is what is generally known as the Owen medical bill. It is perhaps one of the most generally discussed bills outside of Congress, and it is one of the most earnestly opposed bills that has ever been before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN in the chair). Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going to discuss this question and to vote upon it, I believe we ought to have a quorum of the Senate present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cullom	Lea	Shively
Bacon	Cummins	Lippitt	Simmons
Bourne	Curtis	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Dillingham	McLean	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Md.
Brown	Gallinger	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Gamble	Oliver	Smoot
Burnham	Gardner	Owen	Stephenson
Burton	Gore	Page	Thornton
Catron	Gronna	Paynter	Warren
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Percy	Watson
Clapp	Jackson	Perkins	Webb
Clark, Wyo.	Johnson, Me.	Perky	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	Jones	Pomerene	Williams
Crane	Kenyon	Richardson	Works
Culberson	La Follette	Sheppard

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, upon my motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, when I was interrupted I was saying that this is what is generally known as the Owen medical bill——

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. HITCHCOCK addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield, and to whom?

Mr. WORKS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest to the Senator from California, if he will permit me, that under our rules the motion is not debatable. It is true the Senator from Oklahoma debated it before making the motion, but I think we ought not to violate our rule. We will have plenty of debate if the bill comes up.

Mr. WORKS. I am certainly not disposed to violate any of the rules of the Senate. If there is objection——

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course, I do not object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Shall the Senate take up Senate bill No. 1 for consideration?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. GALLINGER. To which there is objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire objects.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. I have a right, I believe, under the parliamentary rule, to have the voice of the Senate upon that question. I ask that the yeas and nays be taken, if the motion is not agreed to by a viva voce vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Undoubtedly the Senator has a right to a vote upon whether or not the Senate will take up the bill. But the Senator has not a right to the yeas and nays, unless a fifth of the Senators present demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senate has declined to order the yeas and nays.

Mr. OWEN. I wish to suggest that there has not been submitted to the Senate the question whether or not the bill shall be taken up.

Mr. WORKS. I ask unanimous consent that I may make an explanation with reference to the matter, for the purpose of showing why I, personally, am not prepared at the present time to take up the discussion of the bill, and to give my reasons therefor in a very few words.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California asks unanimous consent that he may proceed to discuss the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WORKS. Not to discuss the bill; I am not asking that. I do not expect to do that.

Mr. OWEN. The request of the Senator from California, I understand, is that the bill be not now considered because he is not prepared to discuss it.

Mr. WORKS. That is all.

Mr. OWEN. To that I am constrained to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. The question is whether the Senate shall take up Senate bill No. 1, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from California be allowed to submit certain remarks in explanation of the reasons why he does not care to have the bill considered at this time. That is all he asks.

Mr. WORKS. That is all I ask.

Mr. OWEN. I have no objection to that.

Mr. GALLINGER. I rise to correct a statement by the Chair. I did not object to the bill coming up. The Senator from Oklahoma moved that it should be taken up, and on that motion he asked for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were denied; and the only objection I made was, the yeas and nays having been denied, that the Senator could not renew his request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from New Hampshire to object. Is there objection to the request that the Senator from California may proceed to make an explanation as to his attitude upon the bill, or a personal explanation, as the Chair understands the request? The Chair hears none. The Senator from California will proceed.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, one of the very important questions that will arise in the discussion of this bill is as to whether or not it is necessary legislation. On the 6th day of January I offered a resolution here, which was passed by the Senate, calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to furnish to the Senate information as to the medical activities of the Government, and the amount of money that has been expended during the last year for that purpose. That report has not yet come to the Senate. I expect it to disclose fully the different bureaus and branches of the medical service as they now exist and the amount of money that the Government has paid out in sustaining the medical activities of the Government.

The delay in receiving this report has not been upon my part. I have inquired about it on one or two occasions. I wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury a private letter, saying to him that it was important that that information should be had by the Senate before this bill was taken up. This morning, after I learned that the Senator from Oklahoma desired to take up the bill, I telephoned to the Treasury Department to ascertain when that information could be had, and was informed that two of the bureaus had not yet furnished the necessary information, and that it would take a day or two, or perhaps a little longer, to get that information.

I very much desire, and I think the Senate will desire, to have that important information before the Senate before the bill is taken up for discussion. It is one that necessarily will be discussed at considerable length. I expect to make some extended remarks upon it myself, and I desire to have this information and data before the bill is taken up for discussion.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. OWEN. I make the point of order that my motion is before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Utah, however, has precedence.

Mr. OWEN. Then I move a recess until 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. That motion is not in order, Mr. President.

Mr. OWEN. That motion takes precedence of a motion to go into executive session, as I understand the rules of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Not a motion for a recess; a motion to adjourn is the only motion that would take precedence.

Mr. OWEN. I make a motion that the Senate adjourn and reassemble at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMOOT. That motion is not in order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will hear from the Senator from Oklahoma upon that motion.

Mr. JOHNSTON of Alabama. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Curtis	McLean	Smith, Md.
Bacon	Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Bourne	Gallinger	Myers	Stephenson
Brandegee	Gardner	O'Gorman	Sutherland
Bristow	Gore	Oliver	Swanson
Brown	Gronna	Owen	Thornton
Bryan	Hitchcock	Page	Tillman
Burnham	Johnson, Me.	Percy	Townsend
Catron	Johnston, Ala.	Perkins	Warren
Chamberlain	Kavanaugh	Perky	Watson
Clapp	Kenyon	Pomerene	Webb
Clark, Wyo.	La Follette	Richardson	Wetmore
Clarke, Ark.	Lea	Sheppard	Williams
Cullom	Lippitt	Shively	Works
Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine Senators have responded to their names, and a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senate will pardon a statement. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma would take precedence, but the time having arrived to which he moved a recess the motion becomes inoperative. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. I transfer that pair for the day to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MASSEY]. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and therefore withhold my vote. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. KERN] is temporarily absent from the Chamber on important public business.

Mr. WARREN. As I stated before, I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER]. I make a transfer so that that Senator will stand paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON]. I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. DU PONT (after having voted in the affirmative). I should like to inquire whether the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that that Senator has not voted.

Mr. DU PONT. Under those circumstances, as I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas, I will withdraw my vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will transfer my pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] is paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. JONES. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. POINDEXTER] is detained from the Chamber on important business.

The result was announced—yeas 37, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—37.

Bourne	Crawford	Lippitt	Smoot
Brandegee	Cummins	Lodge	Stephenson
Bristow	Curtis	McCumber	Sutherland

Briggs	Fall	Nelson	Thomas
Chilton	Foster	Penrose

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 1. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. OWEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. As he is absent from the Chamber, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. RICHARDSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], so that he will stand paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. JACKSON]. I vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS] to my colleague [Mr. CHILTON], and I vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). With the same explanation that I made upon the last roll call, I desire to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I will inquire whether the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That Senator has not voted, the Chair is informed.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Then I withdraw my vote, having a general pair with that Senator.

YEAS—33.

Ashurst	Gore	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.

HARRIET PIERSON PORTER.

The bill (S. 118) granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter was announced as next in order.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President, if there is no objection to that bill, I should be very glad to have it taken up.

Mr. McCUMBER. There will be some discussion on it, if that is done, but I do not desire to object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. DU PONT. My request is that the bill be taken up; it has been on the calendar a very long time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No one has objected to its consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No one has objected to the consideration of the bill so far. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Pensions with amendments, on page 1, line 7, before the word "general," to strike out "brevet brigadier" and insert "major"; in line 7, after the name "United States," to strike out "Army" and insert "Volunteers"; and in line 8, after the words "rate of," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harriet Pierson Porter, widow of Fitz John Porter, late major general, United States Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask for the reading both of the favorable and the adverse reports in this case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. DU PONT April 10, 1912, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 118) granting an increase of pension to Harriet P. Porter, have examined the same and report:

This bill as amended proposes to increase from $12 to $50 per month the pension of Harriet P. Porter, widow of Fitz John Porter, late major general, United States Volunteers.

The military history of Gen. Fitz John Porter shows that he was a cadet at the United States Military Academy from July 1, 1841, to July 1, 1845, when graduated and appointed brevet second lieutenant, Fourth Artillery. He was promoted full second lieutenant June 18, 1846; first lieutenant May 29, 1847; and was breveted assistant adjutant general June 27, 1856. He was commissioned as colonel, Fifteenth Infantry, May 14, 1861, and a few days later was appointed brigadier general of Volunteers. He was promoted major general of Volunteers July 14, 1862, and was cashiered and dismissed from the Army January 21, 1863. By act of Congress, approved July 1, 1886, he was restored as colonel of Infantry, to rank from May 14, 1861, and was retired from active service August 7, 1886. He served in the War with Mexico from September 6, 1846, to September, 1847, when wounded at the storming of Chapultepec. Gen. Porter died May 21, 1901, at the ripe old age of 80 years.

A similar bill, S. 5593, was introduced in the Sixty-first Congress and referred to a subcommittee. The following report made by that subcommittee in the third session of the Sixty-first Congress sets out in detail the services of Gen. Porter and the peculiar circumstances in his case:

"Your subcommittee, to whom was referred S. 5593, granting a pension to Harriet Pierson Porter, reports the same favorably with the following amendment, viz:

"Amend the title so as to read: 'Granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter.'"

"In line 8 strike out the period and insert a comma and the words 'in lieu of that she is now receiving.'

"Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, to whose widow the bill gives an increase of pension, entered the United States Military Academy in 1841, graduated in 1845, and took part with the greatest distinction in all the battles of our Army under Gen. Scott in the Mexican War. He was wounded in the desperate assault upon the Belen Gate of the City of Mexico, the 2 other officers of his battery being killed, and 27 out of 30 enlisted men of the battery being killed or wounded.

"He served with honor in the Regular Army until the breaking out of the Civil War, when he was appointed colonel of one of the new regiments of Infantry, and soon afterwards major general of Volunteers, being assigned to the command of a division and afterwards the Fifth Corps of the Army of the Potomac under Gen. McClellan. Detached with his corps from that Army and ordered to join Gen. John Pope in front of Washington, he took part in the second Battle of Bull Run in August, 1862, where the Fifth Corps lost in about an hour's time 2,151 men, being one-third of its force present. Not long after a successful attempt was set on foot to unjustly make Gen. Porter the scapegoat of the disastrous defeat of the Union forces in that battle. Charges were preferred against him, and notwithstanding his indignant assertions of entire innocence he was tried by a general court-martial, which, after hearing a great deal of conflicting testimony, found him guilty and sentenced him to be cashiered and not allowed to hold any office of trust or profit under the United States Government.

"Conscious of his innocence, Gen. Porter used every effort for years to have his case reopened, and, after many unsuccessful attempts, in 1878 President Hayes at last ordered a board of inquiry to make a thorough investigation of his case. Various original dispatches and other important papers which had not been presented at the court-martial were laid before this board, together with the testimony of many Confederate general officers as to the exact location and strength of the southern troops opposed to Porter at the second Battle of Bull Run, upon which were based some of the chief allegations in support of the original charges, all of which conclusively showed that the previous evidence against him was absolutely false and misleading.

"The members of the board of inquiry, consisting of Gens. Schofield, Terry, and Getty, after a most searching investigation lasting over 12 months, reported that 'the original charges and specifications bore no discernible resemblance to the actual facts in the case. That the judgment of the original court-martial upon Gen. Porter's conduct was based upon totally erroneous impressions, not only respecting what his conduct really was, but respecting all the circumstances under which he acted, and that not one of all the gallant soldiers who took part in the occurrences under consideration was less deserving of such condemnation than he.'

"They further reported that, in their opinion, 'justice requires at his hands such action as may be necessary to annul and set aside the findings and sentence of the court-martial in the case of Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, and restore him to the positions of which that sentence deprived him, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service.'

"President Hayes submitted this report to Congress 'for such action as shall seem expedient and just,' and although Gen. Grant, in a printed article in the North American Review made a very strong appeal that justice be done to Gen. Porter, no action was taken by Congress until June 25, 1885, when the bill was passed restoring him to the Regular Army with the rank of colonel as of the date of his dismissal, coupled with the proviso that he was to receive no pay or emoluments during the time he was out of service.

"Gen. Porter, upon his complete vindication and restoration to the Army, did not receive the back pay and emoluments, amounting to $97,310.18, to which he would have been entitled had he not been most unjustly deprived of his commission, and which he should have received under every principle of justice and equity and in conformity with the precedents established by several analogous cases. In the opinion of your subcommittee this is a sufficient reason for excluding from consideration the fact that Mrs. Porter, who owns no real estate whatever, has an income of a little over $1,700 a year upon which she has to support herself and an unmarried daughter.

"Attention is called to the statement of account hereto appended in the case of Gen. Fitz-John Porter, and also to a statement of analogous cases in which back pay and allowances were granted to officers who were restored to the Army as of the dates of their original commissions.

"H. A. DU PONT."

Statement of account in the case of Maj. Gen. Fitz-John Porter, showing the amount which would be due him on the assumption that he remained in the service as a major general of Volunteers until Dec. 1, 1865, and that from that date up to Aug. 6, 1886, he held the grade of colonel on the active list.

STATEMENT OF ANALOGOUS CASES.

"The act of February 24, 1903 (33 Stat. L., 806), contains the following provision:

"'That the proper accounting officers be, and they are hereby, directed to settle and adjust to Sarah K. McLean, widow of the late Lieut. Col. Nathaniel H. McLean, all back pay and emoluments that would have been due and payable to the said Nathaniel H. McLean as a major from July 28, 1864, to the date of his reinstatement, March 3, 1875, and that the amount due by said adjustment is hereby appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.'

"NOTE.—This officer resigned from the service July 23, 1864, on account of having been ordered to Oregon for duty. The order sending him to Oregon was the result of his activity in unearthing frauds in the Quartermaster Department and his resignation was in the nature of a protest against the treatment which was accorded him. The full circumstances relating to the matter will be found in House Report No. 279, Forty-third Congress, second session, and Senate Report No. 126, Fifty-third Congress, second session.

"Attention is called to the case of Collins v. United States (14 C. Cls., 568; and 15 C. Cls., 22).

"In this case the officer was restored to the Army and judgment was rendered in his favor for back pay amounting to $17,987.83.

"In the case of Kilburn v. United States (15 C. Cls., 41, 46) the court used this language:

"'In all the cases referred to the parties to whom back pay has been allowed have been considered by Congress to have been illegally or unjustly or inadvertently dismissed the service. In order to remedy the wrong or repair the injustice of such dismissal, it has been considered both just and humane that its revocation should be complete, and should relate back to the day of the order of dismissal, so as to make the party entitled to full pay, as though no such order had ever been made. (Winters v. The United States, 3 C. Cls. R., 136; Smith v. United States, 2 C. Cls. R., 206.) But such arrearages of pay have in every instance been allowed only under the acts of Congress authorizing the beneficiaries under them to assume a definite rank from a past date. This doctrine is fully expounded in the case of Maj. Collins (ante, p. 22).'"

Mrs. Porter now receives a pension of $12 per month, provided by the acts of January 29, 1887, and April 19, 1908, on account of her distinguished husband's service in the Mexican War. She was married to the deceased officer March 19, 1857, and is now over 72 years of age and in very poor health.

In a sworn statement accompanying the bill she declares that her average income from railroad bonds, etc., is about $1,700 per year.

In view of the statements set forth in the foregoing a majority of your committee recommend the passage of the bill when amended as follows: On line 8 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fifty."

On line 7 strike out the words "brevet brigadier" and insert in lieu thereof the word "major," and in the same line strike out the word "Army" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Volunteers."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The views of the minority will now be read, as requested by the Senator from North Dakota.

The Secretary read as follows:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

Mr. MCCUMBER, on the part of the minority of the committee, submits the following views:

The minority of the Committee on Pensions, feeling that the claim for a special bill in this case is wholly unjustified from any standpoint, submit the following reasons for their refusal to concur with the majority of the committee in reporting this bill favorably:

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS CREATED TO RELIEVE CASES OF DESTITUTION ONLY.

Preceding the rules which have governed the committee for many years is a note, which reads as follows:

"NOTE.—The Pension Committees of the two Houses of Congress were created to consider a very few claims in which, from their peculiar circumstances of extreme disability and destitution, adequate relief could not be obtained from the bureau, * * *. Nor is it the policy of the Government to provide full support for soldiers or their widows, but solely to prevent absolute want, and it is believed, therefore, that private pension legislation should be restricted to cases of such extreme destitution as render assistance imperative."

Rule 7 provides:

"Where the widow of an officer is pensioned under the act of April 19, 1908, an increase will not be recommended in excess of the general-law rating for his rank; in cases where the circumstances suggest that a lower rate would be proper such lower rate only will be recommended."

Rule 7 also provides:

"No increase of pension to widows will be recommended above the general-law rating except in cases of destitution, to be substantiated by competent testimony; and the word 'destitution' will be held to mean the same when applied to an officer or his widow as when applied to a private or his widow; it will not be contracted or expanded to meet particular cases."

These rules are recited, first, to show the purposes of private pension legislation, and, second, to show wherein the particular case in question should be governed by those rules.

In a sworn statement accompanying the bill, Mrs. Porter declares that her average income from railroad bonds, etc., is about $1,700 per year. In addition to this she is receiving $144 per year pension, making her total income $1,844 per year, or over $150 per month.

This is not a case of destitution. And if it is not a case of destitution, what is it? Favoritism, pure and simple.

If Mrs. Porter should be entitled to $600 per year pension, in addition to her present income from other sources, then the widow of every other officer of similar rank should receive the same, and she should receive it under a general law. It is not the proper province of either the committee or Congress to single out anyone for special favor. If the general law does not grant sufficient pension to the widows of officers, then the general law should be changed and made applicable to all cases.

By granting this special favor to one who is not in need of it we are committing a rank injustice to the hundreds who are refused and who are in need of it.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President I wish to say a few words on this matter.

The views of the minority, after citing the rules of the Pension Committee, which I have already discussed in the case of Mrs. Hawkins, states that Mrs. Porter's case is not a case of destitution but of "favoritism, pure and simple," and that if she should be entitled to $600 per year, as provided in the bill, in addition to her present income from other sources, "then the widow of every other officer of similar rank should receive the same," and that by granting this "special favor" we are committing a "rank injustice" to others.

I take issue with these statements. Mrs. Porter's case has nothing in common with the hundreds of other cases that have come before Congress. It is unique. Nothing like it has ever occurred before and probably will never occur again. Gen. Porter belonged to the Regular Army for almost 22 years, his service including both the Mexican and Civil Wars. During the former war he was wounded in the heroic assault upon the Belen Gate of the City of Mexico, the other two officers of his battery being killed, and 27 of the 30 enlisted men which composed it being killed or wounded. In the latter war he served with great distinction and gallantry until the autumn of 1862, when he was unjustly court-martialed and dismissed from the Army. In 1878, by direction of President Hayes, a searching reinvestigation as to the real facts in the case was made by a court of inquiry, which vindicated Gen. Porter in the most handsome manner, and reported that the judgment of the original court-martial was based upon totally erroneous impressions not only respecting what his conduct really was, but respecting all the circumstances under which he acted, and added that justice required that the findings and sentence of the original court-martial be annulled and set aside, and that he be restored to the position of which he had been deprived, such restoration to take effect from the date of his dismissal from the service. It was not until 1885 that Congress took action and restored him to his rank in the Regular Army, but under the influence of party prejudice denied him the pay or emoluments during the time that he was unjustly deprived of his commission, which amounted to a large sum of money. This latter stipulation was contrary to all precedents and in violation of every principle of equity and justice.

Mrs. Porter is over 70 years of age and has a daughter dependent upon her for support. It is submitted that the granting of the pension provided for in the bill is not by any means an act of "favoritism," but a proper recognition of the long, faithful, and distinguished service which Gen. Porter had rendered to his country in two wars. I trust that the bill for her relief may be favorably considered by the Senate, which would thus make indirectly, but in a very meager and inadequate way, some compensation for the pay and emoluments of which her husband was so unjustly deprived.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I remember aright, another bill which had a place on the calendar just preceding the pending measure was considered by the Senate at the last session. I refer to the bill granting an increase of pension to the widow of Gen. Hawkins. The evidence in that case showed that the claimant was in receipt, as I now remember, of an income in the neighborhood of $1,400 per annum. It differs from this bill only in the matter of the amount. In this particular case the claimant is now in receipt of a general income amounting to $1,844 a year, or about $150 per month.

Mr. President, this brings clearly before the Senate the danger of passing these special bills without consideration and without any general rule that would apply to all cases. Suppose, now, that we were to pass this bill in favor of Mrs. Porter, and should grant her this extra sum of $600 per year as is provided in this bill, giving her something over $2,000 a year, what answer could we make to the claim of Mrs. Hawkins that she has not been justly treated? What reply could we give to hundreds of other widows who are exactly in the same position, namely, whose claims have been rejected because they did not bring their cases within the very salient rule of the committee, which indicates the very purpose for which the committee was created, or, at least, the main purpose which it is conserving to the public, and that is, to grant relief only in cases of destitution.

I confess that I know very little about the merits of the controversy which resulted in the dismissal of Gen. Porter and his reinstatement in his position; but I do know that if he was unjustly removed by court-martial, then certainly his widow ought to be entitled to present a bill to the Committee on Claims, and if there was anything due to the general that was unjustly taken from him the Committee on Claims ought to investigate that question and grant such relief as would be proper and just in that particular case.

I would be in favor of that course; but I am not in favor of trying the question whether or not the general was unjustly deprived of his salary and emoluments for a number of years in connection with an application for the benefit of Mrs. Porter which, if allowed, would take her case entirely out of the general range of cases that have been considered by the Committee on Pensions.

I have said time and again, Mr. President, that the Senate, by allowing a spirit of sympathy or of favoritism or of friendship in some particular case to govern them, will necessarily put the committee in a position that will be extremely embarrassing. I again call attention to that portion of the report which I submitted as the views of the minority as to the very object of the creation of this committee. It was created, in the first instance, Senators, for the purpose of considering general pension legislation. Its functions were increased so that it should consider special legislation for what purpose? Not for the purpose of taking up particular cases in which any Senator would desire to have a pension increased, but for the sole and only purpose that, sitting as a quasi court of equity, it might do justice to those cases which could not be reached by the general law. We ought not to extend the function of that committee; we ought not to extend the power of that committee so that it will go beyond this and take up any case without reference to any rule and grant such pension as the momentary impulse of either the committee or the Senate may dictate.

As I have stated in this report, the very purpose of the committee—its operation, at least—is indicated in the little note preceding our rules, which reads:

The Pension Committees of the two Houses of Congress were created to consider a very few claims—

Those "few claims" have increased very materially—in which, from their peculiar circumstances of extreme disability and destitution, adequate relief could not be obtained from the bureau.

I want to call attention to the fact that in every case the question of disability and destitution becomes a leading question.

Nor is it the policy of the Government to provide full support for soldiers or their widows, but solely to prevent absolute want, and it is believed, therefore, that private pension legislation should be restricted to cases of such extreme destitution as render assistance imperative.

Following out this very object, the very soul and spirit of the power which was given to the committee to consider special pension legislation, the rules further provide:

No increase of pension to widows will be recommended above the general-law rating except in cases of destitution, to be substantiated by competent testimony—

Mark this part of a proper rule—and the word "destitution" will be held to mean the same when applied to an officer or his widow as when applied to a private or his widow; it will not be contracted or expanded to meet particular cases.

Mr. President, we are now asked to expand it enormously to meet a particular case. The income of Mrs. Porter to-day is about $1,844 per year. It is asked by this bill to increase it $600 more, so that it will be $2,444 per year.

I object to this; I oppose it because it does an injustice to the hundreds of widows whose cases we have turned down in the past, and because it forces upon us a precedent that we can hardly escape in the consideration of future cases that may come before the committee.

Since I have been chairman of the Committee on Pensions my main efforts have been directed toward the preventing that committee ever being used for the purpose of favoritism. I think we have been eminently successful in that endeavor. We have an established rule that in no case will we recommend a pension above $50 per month. The Senate itself has overruled that sort of unwritten law of the committee on two or three occasions—I think two within the last two years—where $100 a month has been granted.

We are now brought face to face with a condition that we ought to meet, and ought to meet fairly. If, as a matter of fact, Mrs. Porter is entitled to $50 per month without reference to the amount of her income, then there are at least 200 widows, whose husbands were of the same rank, who are entitled to the same amount. If they are entitled to that, then we ought to have the courage to stand up here and vote through a general bill, so that we will not be forced to take up one bill and grant fifty or one hundred dollars a month and then take up another bill and grant twelve or fifteen dollars per month.

Mr. DU PONT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. DU PONT. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. He spoke of some 200 or 250 widows whose husbands were of the same rank as Gen. Porter. I should like to ask him if there are any of those 250 widows whose husbands were unjustly driven out of the service and lost for a long period of years the pay and emoluments to which they were entitled and were deprived of them in this way? That is what differentiates this case from the others.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, undoubtedly no two cases are alike. I again assert that if the widow of Gen. Fitz John Porter has any just claim against the Government for the deprivation of the general during his life of certain salaries that should have been received by him during that time the remedy is and ought to be by a bill which would refer that matter to the Court of Claims or the Committee on Claims. The Senate Committee on Pensions did not investigate that matter. It was not necessary for them to investigate that matter. So I simply ask the Senate to stand with that rule of the committee, which was designed to secure the doing of equal justice in respect to every claim brought before them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, Gen. Fitz John Porter was a New Hampshire man. At the time when passions were heated there were many people in New Hampshire who believed that Gen. Porter had not done his entire duty as an officer of the Army of the United States. That time has passed, and a monument has been erected in the city of Portsmouth to the memory of Gen. Porter.

When this matter was under discussion before the House of Representatives a Member of that House from New Hampshire, who served under Gen. Porter, made a speech that cleared up, in my mind, every thought that I ever had entertained—and I confess I had entertained some doubts—as to Gen. Porter's loyalty and as to his conduct while he represented the Government on the field of battle.

The record of this man is a remarkable record. It goes back to the War with Mexico, where he performed distinguished service and where he received a very severe wound. To my mind, in dealing with this particular case, the fact is worthy of consideration that this man, because of the unjust accusations made against him—and beyond a doubt they were unjust—was deprived of some $60,000 that he otherwise would have received. I understand, in fact, that it is a much larger amount than that.

Mr. DU PONT. Nearly $90,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Nearly $90,000, that he otherwise would have received, had not those accusations been made against him. He died in comparative poverty. During all the long years that he served the Government he had accumulated in bonds, I believe, enough to give his widow an income of $1,700 a year. That $1,700 a year went to support the widow and an unmarried daughter whom she is supporting at the present time.

Congress gave this widow a pension of $12 a month, which she is now receiving. To my mind it is a most extraordinary thing that any member of the Committee on Pensions should haggle about this proposed increase to $50 per month. I hesitate to say a word on this subject, because for a number of years I served as chairman of the Committee on Pensions, and the very rule that the Senator from North Dakota has invoked—or a portion of it, at least—was written by me. But that rule never was used to debar worthy widows whose husbands had served with great distinction as officers of the United States.

If I remember correctly—and I do not say this at all in a controversial spirit—the Senator from North Dakota has declared over and over again that he did not believe the widow of a general officer was entitled to any more pension than the widow of a private soldier. I think I am not incorrect in making that statement.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator can assert that as my statement on prior occasions and as my statement to-day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Of course I take issue with that, Mr. President, because I think it is a most extraordinary position for a Senator to take.

I do not know how many widows of general officers holding the rank of major general, without any reference to the great injustice that was done Gen. Fitz John Porter, are receiving less than $50 per month, but I know that a great many of them are receiving that amount and some of them a much larger amount.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Has the Senator in his mind the idea that the committee has refused to recommend a pension of $50 per month in this case?

Mr. GALLINGER. I have that in mind; yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that the bill provides $50 a month pension for the widow of Gen. Porter.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; the committee has so reported, but the chairman of the committee insists that the bill ought not to pass. That is what I am addressing myself to—the attitude of the chairman of the committee. The chairman of the committee wants this woman to remain on the pension roll at $12 per month.

I have a little list here, to which I will refer in a moment. I remember that the Senate in its wisdom—and it was an act of wisdom, notwithstanding the Senator from North Dakota took precisely the position he does now, in opposition to it—voted $50 a month to the widow of Admiral Schley. I voted for it. I believed it was right, notwithstanding the rule that the Senator then invoked, which he argued ought to debar her from receiving more than $12 per month, I suppose.

We are not granting such large pensions now as we did shortly after the war, and I am glad we are not. We then voted $2,000 a year, in one case, to the widow of an officer not more distinguished than was Gen. Fitz John Porter. I think in several instances pensions of as much as $2,000 per year were granted—to the widows of Gen. Thomas, Gen. Logan, Gen. Blair, and others—and a pension of $2,500 was granted to the widow of Gen. Sheridan. In running over the list I have found a number of cases which I want to put in the RECORD, because they are illuminating. They may not have been wisdom, but they were the action of Congress.

Sallie R. Alexander, widow of Lieut. Col. Thomas L. Alexander, is getting $50 a month. She is the widow of a lieutenant colonel.

Emily L., widow of Gen. Benjamin Alvord, is getting $50 a month.

Eliza B., widow of Gen. Robert Anderson, was given $50 a month, and it was afterwards increased to $100.

Abby P., widow of Gen. Richard Arnold, is getting $50 a month.

Juliet Opie H., widow of Col. Romeyn B. Ayers, is getting $75 a month.

Margaret T., widow of Commander Samuel H. Baker, United States Navy, $50 a month.

Mary A., widow of Gen. Edward D. Baker, $50 a month.

Mrs. Mary Palmer Banks, widow of Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks, is getting $100 a month.

Mary T., widow of Gen. Joseph K. Barnes, $50 a month.

Elizabeth T. Beall, $50 a month.

Fannie S., widow of Admiral John C. Beaumont, $50 a month.

Mary A. Bedel, $50 a month.

Margaret C., widow of Admiral Henry H. Bell, $50 a month.

Mrs. Henry A. Benham, widow of Gen. Henry A. Benham, $50 a month.

Eliza Berry, widow of Gen. Hiram G. Berry, $50 a month.

Emily B., widow of Gen. Daniel D. Bidwell, $50 a month.

Maria A., widow of Gen. David B. Birney, $50 a month.

Sarah M. Bissell, widow of Commodore Simon B. Bissell, $50 a month.

Sarah R., widow of Paymaster John V. B. Bleecker, $50 a month—a paymaster in the Navy, I suppose.

Elise Blenker, $50 a month.

Nancy Carson Blunt, $75 a month.

Ellen M., widow of Pay Director William Benton Boggs, $50 a month—I presume a pay director in the Navy.

Henrietta E., widow of Rear Admiral Charles S. Boggs, $50 a month.

Celestia A., widow of Horace Boughton, $50 a month.

Leonora A. Boyden, $50 a month.

Jane D., widow of Capt. Thomas L. Brent, $50 a month.

Martha C., widow of Capt. Kidder Randolph Breese, $50—a captain, not a major general.

F. Selina Buchanan, $50 a month.

Priscilla R. Burns, $50 a month.

Mrs. Rochie Brien Buell, widow of Gen. George P. Buell, $50 a month.

Hattie A., widow of Gen. Ward B. Burnett, $50 a month.

Mr. President, I happen to have information that some of those widows have quite as much property, and in some instances I know more property, than has the widow of Gen. Fitz John Porter. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] reminds me that the widow of Gen. John M. Palmer is receiving $50 a month, and I recall that fact; and the widow of Gen. McClellan, and a great many others I have not named. I have simply selected a few.

It is sometimes a good thing to break rules. The Senate broke rules when I was chairman of the Committee on Pensions, in many instances overruling me, and I did not find any fault. I wanted to keep down these special pension bills as much as possible. I think they ought to be kept down, and there ought to be great discrimination exercised. But it is a little different when we come to consider a case like this, where a man performed the remarkable services that Gen. Fitz John Porter did in two wars, and left his widow, accustomed to some of the luxuries of life, at least, with a mere pittance, because it is a pittance. Her income is less than girls are receiving as stenographers in the Capitol to-day, and half of what some young men are receiving as clerks to committees in the Capitol to-day.

I submit, Mr. President, that it is hardly worth while for the Senate to spend a great deal of time in coming to the conclusion that this bill, amended as it has been, should be passed. I should have opposed a pension of $100 a month. But this bill, amended as it has been to $50 a month, ought not to be opposed by any Senator, and certainly ought not to be defeated by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I am constrained to believe that it is always worth while for the Senate to prevent injustice being done; that it is always worth while for the Senate, as nearly as it can, to insist that equal justice shall be done to all persons.

The Senator has read the names of a large number of people who receive pensions of $50 a month. As is well known, this system of granting private pensions is a system that has been followed for more than half a century. Immediately after the close of the war, when, it seems to me, that perhaps we were swayed more by impulse than we are to-day, but very little attention was paid to the needs of the claimants. Those pensions were voted upon the record of the officer, and upon that record alone.

I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he knows of a single case in the last quarter of a century in which a private pension bill carrying $50 per month has been passed for the benefit of a widow who had an income of over $150 per month?

Mr. GALLINGER. I call the Senator's attention to the bill which I hand to him.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator refers to the case of the widow of Admiral Schley. I do not remember now just what her income was. I stated but a short time ago that that was one of the cases in which the Senate had made an exception and had granted a pension in a case where I thought it ought not to be granted, on account of the income that was being received.

Mr. President, the Senate has that power. It has the power to make any kind of precedent it sees fit to make. If it desires by its vote that the widow of Gen. Hawkins, who has an income of $1,400 a year, shall receive no additional pension, but that the widow of Gen. Porter, who has an income of over $1,800 a year, shall receive a pension of $50 a month, the Senate can do that. There will be at least one vote against that inconsistency and that injustice.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Harriet Pierson Porter."

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC HEALTH.

The bill (S. 1) to establish a bureau of health, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

PONCA INDIANS OF OKLAHOMA AND NEBRASKA.

The bill (S. 5169) authorizing the Ponca Tribe of Indians to intervene in the suit of the Omaha Indians in the Court of Claims, and for other purposes, was considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 2, line 6, after the word "authorities," to insert "under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of existing law"; and on line 13 to strike out "to decree the fees to be paid to the attorney employed by the Ponca Indians to represent them therein and his associates, such fees to be paid out of any funds of the tribe in the Treasury of the United States," and insert "said court shall decree the amount of the fee to be paid the attorney for the claimant Indians, such amount to be deducted from any money which may be found to be due said Indians: Provided, That the amount of the attorney's fee shall not be greater than that named in the approved contract," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Ponca Tribe of Indians, residing in the States of Oklahoma and Nebraska, is hereby authorized and empowered to appear in and be made parties to any suit or suits in the Court of Claims heretofore instituted or which may hereafter be begun under and by virtue of an act of Congress approved June 22, 1910, entitled "An act of Congress authorizing the Omaha Tribe of Indians to submit claims to the Court of Claims," with full rights of appeal as therein provided for other tribes.

In such suits the Ponca Tribe may file such petitions, interventions, answers, or other pleadings as they may be advised are necessary or proper, which pleadings shall be verified by their attorney selected and employed by their tribal authorities under contract approved by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the provisions of existing law, to represent the tribe therein; and the Court of Claims shall have full jurisdiction, legal and equitable, in such suits to hear and determine the rights of the Ponca Indians against the United States and against any other tribe or band of Indians parties thereto; and upon final determination of any such suit said court shall decree the amount of the fee to be paid the attorney for the claimant Indians, such amount to be deducted from any money which may be found to be due said Indians: Provided, That the amount of the attorney's fee shall not be greater than that named in the approved contract.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was about to inquire, but I see the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is not in his seat, as to what the fees ordinarily are that are named in the approved contracts. But the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests that the bill is all right; and as I know very little about Indian affairs, I will not oppose it at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I took up the question with the department, and the department approves this bill, with the amendments that have just been made.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, my colleague is absent from the Senate at this time. Personally, I am not familiar with the bill. I have no information in regard to it. I should like to see it reasonably limited, however; but I do not know enough about the measure to propose a proper amendment, if one is necessary.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Let me say——

Mr. CRAWFORD. I was going to ask that some day certain be fixed when we might take up this bill.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I have no objection to its being taken up at any time. I was requested to interpose an objection on behalf of the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. Whenever he is present I will be very glad to turn the matter over to him.

FIRST LIEUTENANT SYDNEY SMITH.

The bill (S. 7288) to authorize the transfer of First Lieut. Sydney Smith from retired to the active list of the Army was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator reporting that bill is present I should like to have some explanation as to the reason for it. I do not see that Senator in the Chamber. I ask that the bill may go over.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a bill in which some friends of mine are interested. I do not rise to ask for action on it. It was reported without a written report, which is unfortunate, and I am going to move that it be recommitted to the committee. We never will pass it in its present form without a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire moves that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS, ETC., PASSED OVER.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being objected to, the bill goes over.

PROTECTION OF WATER SUPPLY IN COLORADO.

The bill (H. R. 23293) for the protection of the water supply of the city of Colorado Springs and the town of Manitou, Colo., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] is not in the Chamber, and I understand that he desires to make a statement before the bill shall pass.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I have not been informed by the Senator from Wyoming that he objects to the bill. The fact is that the Senator from Wyoming is upon the Committee on Public Lands. If I remember correctly, I attended the meeting, and that Senator at that time voted in favor of this bill. I do not think, therefore, the Senator from Utah is justified in bringing up the question at this time.

Mr. SMOOT. I am justified in bringing up the question if there are a number of Senators who have stated that they wish to express their views on the bill when it comes before the Senate. While they voted to report it to the Senate many of them thought that the land ought to be given directly to the cities, rather than have a joint administration of the cities and the Government. The Senator from Colorado was at the committee meeting, and I suppose he remembers very well that that was the position of a great many Senators there.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. My recollection is that there was one Senator who objected at the time, and he has since withdrawn his objection. I should like very much to have the bill considered. It has been on the calendar for some time. It has passed the House, and is a very meritorious and a very just bill. I feel constrained to move, notwithstanding the objection of the Senator from Utah, that the bill be taken up.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator can not make that motion.

Mr SMOOT. Of course, not under the rule we are proceeding, but I am not going to object to the consideration of the bill, after listening to the statement of the Senator from Colorado, any further than to say that I believe it was a very bad practice to establish to grant certain lands in any forest reserve for the protection of a watershed unless you grant it directly to the city and allow the city or cities, as the case may be, to control it.

In this bill we provide that there shall be a joint control between the city of Manitou and the city of Colorado Springs with the Forest Service. I think myself that it is rather a bad practice.

Now, that is all I want to say in relation to the bill, and I am not going to object to the present consideration of it.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. Mr. President, the mayor of the city of Colorado Springs was in the city and appeared before the committee in reference to this bill. It received the support of that gentleman and also of the department. There is a very exhaustive report with the bill, and from what I can see it is a very meritorious measure. I trust that it may pass.

Mr. SMOOT. The mayor of the city would be more than pleased if the lands were given outright to the city and allow them to control them and patrol them in the future. There is not any question about that. But they did not think it could be passed in the House in that shape, and therefore the bill is here giving joint control to the cities and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GRONNA. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah a question. Has it been the policy of the department to administer lands in this way?

Mr. SMOOT. This is the first measure I remember passing the Senate where there was joint control of a watershed between cities and the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. GRONNA. The Senator from Utah is chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. Of course, he knows what the policy of the department is in this respect. May I ask him if it is the policy of the department to give the lands outright to the cities where needed for a watershed?

Mr. SMOOT. Time and again we have passed bills here for different cities within Colorado allowing the cities to buy the land at $1.25 an acre, but this bill provides that there shall be certain lands, I forget how many thousand acres, set aside for the purpose of the protection of watersheds at Colorado Springs and in Manitou, but it does not provide for the purchase of the lands. The lands are set apart for that purpose, and the joint control and patrol of them is to be in the future between the two cities and the Department of Agriculture.

I want to say to the Senator from Colorado, I am in sympathy with the idea and with what is to be accomplished by this bill, but to get it through Congress the mayor of Colorado Springs thinks that the bill provides now the only way of doing so at the present session of Congress.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. This bill has passed the House of Representatives.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; it passed the House of Representatives, but if it went into conference with any other provision they were afraid the House would not agree to it, and therefore we could not get it through at this session.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. I should think that the Senator from Utah would permit the Senator from Colorado to take that chance.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not objecting to the consideration of the bill now. I have made my statement, and it shall pass as far as I am concerned. I was only answering the question of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I observe that the department recommends the passage of the bill with an amendment which has been incorporated in the bill, and that the Interior Department says that consultation has been had with the Secretary of Agriculture, and he likewise approves of it.

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. Both the departments approve of it—the Agricultural Department and the Interior Department. As I have said, it is a very meritorious bill, and it is of a local nature.

Mr. GRONNA. May I ask the Senator from Colorado if the bill as it passed the House is, in substance, the same as the bill we now have before us?

Mr. GUGGENHEIM. This is the House bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, page 6, line 19, after the word "by," to strike out "the Secretary of Agriculture in cooperation with" and to insert "and at the expense of," and in line 21, after the word "Manitou," to insert "under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the lands heretofore described and reserved for municipal water-supply purposes shall be administered by and at the expense of the city of Colorado Springs and the town of Manitou, under the supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, for the purpose of storing and conserving the water supply, protecting them from pollution, and preserving the timber on said lands to more fully accomplish such purposes, and to that end said city and town shall each have the right, subject to approval by the Secretary of Agriculture, to the use of any and all parts of the lands reserved for them, respectively, for the storage and conveying of water, and the construction and maintenance thereon of reservoirs, pipes, mains, conduits, and other like improvements.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 7, line 24, after the word "heretofore," to insert "or hereafter"; in the same line, after the word "any," to insert "municipality"; and on page 8, line 1, after the word "thereof," to strike out "and now existing under and by virtue of the laws of the United States or of the State of Colorado" and to insert "or the water thereof," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That this act shall be subject to all legal rights heretofore or hereafter acquired by any municipality, person, or persons in or to the above-described premises, or any part thereof, or the water thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

INCOME TAX.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I am pleased to inform the Senate that advices from the States of Wyoming and Delaware to-day are to the effect that the income-tax amendment has been ratified by both States. The joint resolution originated in the Senate, and I congratulate the Senate on the part it played. The joint resolution having been favored by a special message by the President of the United States, I congratulate him, and I congratulate the American people on having ratified this, the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution.

SWAMP LAND IN NEVADA.

The bill (S. 4994) to authorize the inclosure of certain lands in the State of Nevada containing dangerous quagmires was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

HARRY S. WADE.

The bill (H. R. 15181) for the relief of Harry S. Wade was announced as the next in order.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. President, I wish to say that is a very appealing case of personal injury. A laborer on the Government works out on one of the coast rivers lost his sight entirely and is almost totally deaf because of an explosion in some dredging operations there in which there was negligence on the part of some of the employees above him.

This bill passed the House and came to the Senate and was reported to the Senate before the close of the last session in August. It was amended there by reducing the amount, and afterwards when a more complete statement of the facts was reported they appealed so strongly to the members of the committee that it was recalled after having been passed with this amendment, for the purpose of having it reconsidered so that the Senate might have an opportunity to pass it just as the House passed it.

A motion to reconsider has never in form been made, and I now move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted and the bill passed by the Senate at the last session, so that we may have it before the Senate for the purpose of passing it in the same form in which it passed the House. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the motion the Senator makes?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Pursuant to a notice which I gave some time ago, I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amended the bill H. R. 15181.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator that it is necessary to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Very well; I put it, then, in that form. I want to put it in the right way, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Dakota that the Senate reconsider the votes by which the bill was read the third time and passed by the Senate.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and the question is, the Chair presumes, upon the motion the Senator now makes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What I desire is to abandon the amendment by which the amount was reduced from $2,500 to $1,500. This is a workingman who, as a result of the explosion, lost his sight, both eyes absolutely, and his hearing is also practically destroyed, and the physicians so report. It comes to us through the department.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was adopted.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I ask that the amendment be rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The affirmative is always put. The question is on the amendment which was proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now I ask that the bill be put upon its passage as it came from the House.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONNECTICUT RIVER DAM.

The bill (S. 8033) to authorize the Connecticut River Co. to relocate and construct a dam across the Connecticut River above the village of Windsor Locks, in the State of Connecticut, was announced as next in order on the calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over on objection.

PROTECTION OF INTERSTATE SHIPMENTS.

The bill (H. R. 16450) to punish the unlawful breaking of seals of railroad cars containing interstate or foreign shipments, the unlawful entering of such cars, the stealing of freight and express packages or baggage or articles in process of transportation in interstate shipment, and the felonious asportation of such freight or express packages or baggage or articles therefrom into another district of the United States, and the felonious possession or reception of the same, was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate when the calendar was considered I objected to this bill, not because I did not recognize the fact that it covered a subject matter which needed legislation, but because of my scruples against leaving to the Federal Government any more doubtful authority. In respect to the constitutionality of this bill it falls within the so-called twilight zone, which is gradually disappearing by surrender to the National Government in response to a demand for effective remedies for developed evils with which the State authorities seem wholly incompetent to deal.

It is said to be a fact by those whose investigations have covered the subject somewhat comprehensively that the breaking into interstate cars has become an evil of such magnitude that the State authorities are either unwilling or unable to deal with it, and that some remedy ought to be extended against a gang, band, or association of persons in existence who depredate upon property of that character. My whole trend of thought is in the direction of an effective Government. I am in favor of a Government that will govern, and I am in favor of an effective remedy wherever there is a developed evil that can not be successfully coped with. My scruples therefore are somewhat elastic, and in this particular case I am disposed to yield to the evident justice of the case and permit this bill to pass, and I intend to vote for it.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments.

The amendments were, on page 3, line 13, after the word "judgment," to strike out "or" and insert "of," and, in line 14, after the word "conviction," to insert "or acquittal on the merits," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever shall unlawfully break the seal of any railroad car containing interstate or foreign shipments of freight or express, or shall enter any such car with intent, in either case, to commit larceny therein; or whoever shall steal or unlawfully take, carry away, or conceal, or by fraud or deception obtain from any railroad car, station house, platform, depot, steamboat, vessel, or wharf, with intent to convert to his own use any goods or chattels moving as, or which are a part of or which constitute, an interstate or foreign shipment of freight or express, or shall buy, or receive, or have in his possession any such goods or chattels, knowing the same to have been stolen; or whoever shall steal or shall unlawfully take, carry away, or by fraud or deception obtain, with intent to convert to his own use, any baggage which shall have come into the possession of any common carrier for transportation from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia to another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or to a foreign country, or from a foreign country to any State or Territory or the District of Columbia, or shall break into, steal, take, carry away, or conceal any of the contents of such baggage, or shall buy, receive, or have in his possession any such baggage or any article therefrom of whatsoever nature, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall in each case be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 10 years, or both, and prosecutions therefor may be instituted in any district wherein the crime shall have been committed. The carrying or transporting of any such freight, express, baggage, goods, or chattels from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into another State or Territory or the District of Columbia, knowing the same to have been stolen, shall constitute a separate offense and subject the offender to the penalties above described for unlawful taking, and prosecutions therefor may be instituted in any district into which such freight, express, baggage, goods, or chattels shall have been removed or into which they shall have been brought by such offender.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall be held to take away or impair the jurisdiction of the courts of the several States under the laws thereof; and a judgment of conviction or acquittal on the merits under the laws of any State shall be a bar to any prosecution hereunder for the same act or acts.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

LANDS IN MONTANA.

The bill (S. 3130) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit the Conrad-Stanford Co. to use certain lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that bill may, perhaps, give rise to some discussion. I object to its consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over under objection.

Mr. MYERS. I realize that Senators are probably not prepared to-day to discuss the bill, but if it does not meet with any objection I should like to have the bill set down for consideration on some certain day in the future.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know that I would object to that, but I am pretty sure that the discussion will take a very wide range.

Mr. MYERS. That is my object in asking to have the bill set down for consideration on some certain day, so that those who wish to express their views may have time to do so, which they probably would not have to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It occurs to me, Mr. President, that unanimous consent, perhaps, could not well be given while the Senate is so thin as it is at present.

Mr. MYERS. I must say I do not hear what the Senator says.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think I shall object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming objects.

CIGARS FURNISHED EMPLOYEES BY MANUFACTURERS.

Mr. BRYAN. When Calendar No. 949, being House bill 25741, was called, I understood the Chair to say that objection was made, but I am informed that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] did not object to that calendar number, so I make the request that it be again called.

Mr. KENYON. My objection was intended to apply to Order of Business No. 942 and not to Order of Business No. 949.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection having been made inadvertently, the Secretary will again state Order of Business No. 949.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 25741) amending section 3392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 32 of the act of August 5, 1900.

Mr. ROOT. I think that bill had better go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, under objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to make an appeal to have that objection withdrawn. All that the great mass of this bill does it to merely reenact existing law. The only thing it does is to permit the continuance of a custom which is as old as the trade. The workmen are allowed to have one or two cigars that are spoiled, that are not perfectly rolled. They are known as "smokers." This is to permit the workmen to have those cigars without tax. The law has been recently interpreted that those "smokers" should be taxed, and this is to exempt them from taxation. I believe it is a thoroughly just bill. The committee considered it very carefully and I hope it may be allowed to go through.

Mr. PENROSE. I wish to add, Mr. President, to what the Senator from Massachusetts has said, that such cigars are taken for the consumption of the workmen; they are not sold.

Mr. LODGE. That is entirely right. They are not taken for sale; they are taken only for the consumption of the workmen.

Mr. PENROSE. It seems to me to be a good standard for a cigar when the maker smokes it and can stand it. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ROOT. I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 3392 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended by section 32 of the act of August 5, 1909, to read as follows:

SEC. 3392. All cigars weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand shall be packed in boxes not before used for that purpose containing, respectively, 5, 10, 12, 13, 25, 50, 100, 200, 250, or 500 cigars each; and every person who sells, or offers for sale, or delivers, or offers to deliver, any cigars in any other form than in new boxes as above described, or who packs in any box any cigars in excess of or less than the number provided by law to be put in each box, respectively, or who falsely brands any box, or affixes a stamp on any box denoting a less amount of tax than that required by law, shall be fined for each offense not more than $1,000, and be imprisoned not more than two years: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed as preventing the sale of cigars at retail by retail dealers from boxes packed, stamped, and branded in the manner prescribed by law: Provided further, That each employee of a manufacturer of cigars shall be permitted to use, for personal consumption and for experimental purposes, not to exceed 21 cigars per week without the manufacturer of cigars being required to pack the same in boxes or to stamp or pay any internal-revenue tax thereon, such exemption to be allowed under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: And provided further, That every manufacturer of cigarettes shall put up all the cigarettes that he manufactures or has manufactured for him and sells or removes for consumption or use in packages or parcels containing 5, 8, 10, 15, 20, 50, or 100 cigarettes each, and shall securely affix to each of said packages or parcels a suitable stamp denoting the tax thereon, and shall properly cancel the same prior to such sale or removal for consumption or use, under such regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe; and all cigarettes imported from a foreign country shall be packed, stamped, and the stamps canceled in like manner, in addition to the import stamp indicating inspection of the customhouse before they are withdrawn therefrom.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF SAMUEL SCHIFFER.

The bill (H. R. 8861) for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Schiffer was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the claim of the legal representatives of Samuel Schiffer, growing out of the purchase by the late firm of J. Schiffer & Co., of New York, of certain lots of cotton registered as turned over to or seized by the United States authorities at Savannah, Ga., about January, February, and March, 1865, in the names of Kesiah Hall, M. Rich, Mrs. John (Catherine) Ruckert, A. Fawcett, Mary Haley, John Elkan, A. B. Wessolowsky, Lewis Levi, Raphael Cohen, Simon (or Solomon) Cotner, L. Hohenstein, S. W. Silverhill, Mrs. H. M. Kenney, and Mrs. Henry (Hannah) Fowler, be, and the same is hereby, referred with all accompanying papers to the Court of Claims, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on said court to hear and determine the same, and to enter judgment for any amount found to be due as the net proceeds of the sale of said cotton or any part thereof. Said court is hereby authorized to consider said claim under the provision of section 162 of the act of March 3, 1911 (36 Stats., 1135, the Judicial Code), and to adjudge said claim, the act of July 2, 1864 (13 Stat. L., 376), and all other nonintercourse laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill if the amendment simply allows the claim to be referred to the Court of Claims, or does it give the Court of Claims any authority whatever to enter a judgment, to be paid by the Government without an act of Congress?

Mr. OLIVER. It does, Mr. President. It allows the Court of Claims to pass upon the merits of the claims, to make an award, and to enter judgment against the Government, to be paid without further action of Congress.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does it allow an appeal to the Supreme Court?

Mr. OLIVER. Of course, at least it does not prevent it, and I assume that an appeal would lie in any event.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I presume it would.

Mr. OLIVER. If not, the bill can be so amended as to provide that an appeal will lie to the Supreme Court.

Mr. President, I may say that the bill as passed by the other House provided for the payment of $62,158.34; but when the bill was referred to me by the Committee on Claims, upon examination of the matter, while I was thoroughly satisfied of the justice of the claim, it seemed to me there were certain facts in connection with some of the claims, but only a small part of the claims, that ought to be inquired into by a court. I therefore reported to the committee that instead of providing for the direct payment of the claim it should be referred to the Court of Claims for consideration.

I will state that this claim has been before four different Congresses, has passed the Senate once or twice, and has passed the other House in the present Congress, and it now rests with us. The money has actually been in the Treasury of the Government ever since 1865, and the claim ought to be paid. It is a just claim; but in order to be absolutely certain about it, I thought it was better to refer the matter to the Court of Claims than for Congress to take the responsibility of withdrawing the money directly from the Treasury.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator to say that the House bill provides for direct payment of the claim?

Mr. OLIVER. The House bill provides for direct payment of the claim without qualification. My amendment substitutes for that a provision for reference to the Court of Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator if the claim has ever been before the Court of Claims?

Mr. OLIVER. A part of this claim was before the Court of Claims and judgment awarded. It was appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States solely upon the question of the nonintercourse law which prevailed at that time, and it was reversed by the Supreme Court.

This cotton, Mr. President, was purchased somewhat under color of the authority of President Lincoln himself. The more I investigated the claim the better I became satisfied of its justice, except perhaps as to certain items of it. It may be that, upon inquiry by the Court of Claims, some of the items will be thrown out and the award will be for not so great a sum as is provided by the House bill. That is the only doubt that I have upon the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to say, Mr. President, that if the claim has already been before the Court of Claims and judgment has been awarded there, if sent back to the Court of Claims, perhaps the same judgment will be rendered. It seems to me that as the amendment is framed it would preclude the Government from appealing to the Supreme Court of the United States, for it reads:

And the same is hereby referred with all accompanying papers to the Court of Claims, and jurisdiction is hereby conferred on said court to hear and determine the same, and to enter judgment for any amount found to be due as the net proceeds of the sale of said cotton or any part thereof.

Mr. OLIVER. I would suggest that at the end of that clause there be inserted an additional amendment providing for an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. There is no objection to that.

Mr. SMOOT. If that be put in so that there will be no doubt as to right of appeal, I will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. Then, Mr. President, I move that the committee amendment be amended by inserting after the word "thereof," in line 15, on page 2, the words:

The said judgment to be subject to an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

MOTOR BOAT FOR CUSTOMS SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 26549) to provide for the construction or purchase of motor boat for customs service was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to construct or purchase one gasoline motor boat for service in the customs collection district of Corpus Christi, Tex., at a cost not to exceed $6,000, but the Secretary of the Treasury may use the boat elsewhere than at Corpus Christi, as the exigencies of the service may require.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE L. THOMAS.

The bill (S. 7488) for the relief of George L. Thomas was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Postmaster General to credit to the accounts of George L. Thomas, postmaster at New Bethlehem, Pa., $5,711.93, and to certify the said credit to the Auditor for the Post Office Department, that being the amount of money-order funds embezzled by Ella E. Latimer, an employee in the post office, without fault or negligence on the part of George L. Thomas, and appropriates $5,711.93 for the payment of the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN AID OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The bill (S. 6507) to further assure title to lands granted the several States, in place, in aid of public schools was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that where a grant of lands in place has heretofore been made or may hereafter be made to any State in aid of public schools the governor of any such State may cause to be listed with the Secretary of the Interior any sections or parts of sections so granted, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to examine such lists, and if the lands are found to be of the character so granted and free from valid adverse claim, initiated prior to the survey of the township in which they are situated, to certify them to the State entitled thereto in further assurance of title; but no such list shall be certified until the State shall have published, for a period of 30 days in a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of the land, a notice of the filing thereof, and as to lands hereafter surveyed such publication shall not be made until after the expiration of three months from the filing of the township plat of survey in the district land office. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to postpone the time of the attachment of the grant of such lands under existing law.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LODGE the title was amended so as to read: "A bill further to assure title to lands granted the several States, in place, in aid of public schools."

CORVALLIS AND YAQUINA BAY MILITARY WAGON ROAD.

The bill (H. R. 8151) providing for the adjustment of the grant of lands in aid of the construction of the Corvallis and Yaquina Bay military wagon road, and of conflicting claims to lands within the limits of said grant, was announced as next in order.

Mr. BURTON. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over on the objection of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, I trust the Senator will withdraw the objection. There is no adverse report on the bill, and it is merely a local measure.

Mr. BURTON. My objection was based on the portion of the report made by the Secretary of the Interior on the bill, in which he says:

> In conclusion the department must report adversely upon a bill which would permit selection of more than 9,000 acres, and suggests that if legislation is to be had relative to the adjustment of this grant any further measure of relief extended should not permit of selection in excess of 1,848.84 acres, and such selections should be restricted to the unreserved, unoccupied, nonmineral, surveyed public lands of the United States in the State of Oregon subject to homestead entry.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will look at the bill further he will find that it has been amended to conform exactly to the report of the Secretary of the Interior. There is no question about it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will allow me a moment, the first section of the bill provides:

> That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause patents to be issued conveying to the administrator of the estate of T. Egenton Hogg 1,848.84 acres.

That is the number of acres, as the Senator from Ohio will notice, which the Secretary says should be allowed to be selected.

Mr. BURTON. Do the Senator from Oregon and the Senator from Utah state that this bill is now in the form approved by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. If it is not, I will be very glad to withdraw my approval of it at any time.

Mr. BURTON. Then, I will make no further objection.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGES AT MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The bill (S. 8248) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, Minn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to extend the time for commencing and completing the construction of the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved January 27, 1912, to be built across the Mississippi River, from the intersection of Nineteenth Avenue south and Bluff Street to the intersection of Tenth and University Avenues southeast, in the city of Minneapolis, Minn., to one year and three years, respectively.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I suggest that the next three bills are precisely the same as the bill just passed, providing for extending the time for the construction of bridges at Minneapolis at different points, and I ask unanimous consent that all three bills may be read the third time and passed. As I have said, they are exactly the same, except as to the location of the bridges.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will have to object to that, Mr. President. Let the bills be taken up in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will have to be considered in their order.

which mount and equipments were used by him in connection with progressive military-map work in the Department of the Gulf, to which he had been detailed by proper authority.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds with an amendment, in section 2, page 2, line 15, after the word "damages," to strike out:

Provided, however, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said condemnation proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be taken in said condemnation proceeding herein authorized, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury as benefits against those lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying, or being within an assessment area hereby created, which assessment area shall embrace all of the area lying within the distance of 1 mile from any point of said park and connecting highway: Provided further, That all land owned by the United States or the District of Columbia lying within said assessment area shall be exempt from assessment; which benefits, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated, one-half from the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half from any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated, an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of said condemnation proceeding taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages.

The amendment was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER RAILWAY BRIDGE.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that is the bill which was called up this morning by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. An understanding was reached that the bill was not to be considered until we have an opportunity to examine it. Therefore I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under objection.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

The bill (H. R. 25002) to amend sections 73 and 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I ask that that bill go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over under objection.

Mr. CUMMINS subsequently said: Mr. President, while the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is here, I desire to give notice that I shall call up for consideration to-morrow morning, after the routine morning business, House bill 25002, being Order of Business 1021. It is a very important measure, and it is thought by those who have proposed it and those who have considered it to be so important that it should be promptly considered. I desired to make that statement before the Senator from Maryland left the Chamber.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I will say to the Senator that I do not know that I shall offer any objection whatever to the bill. My object in asking to have it go over was, inasmuch as I had received some letters from constituents calling my attention to it, that I wanted to make some inquiry in regard to the measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want to call it up before the Senator from Maryland has had full opportunity to examine it; but there is a real and immediate demand for the legislation. I hope the Senator from Maryland will be able to examine it by to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I merely desire to make some inquiry about it. I do not know that I shall object to it at all, and I do not know just whether the inquiries that I have will have any effect at all upon my mind. I merely wanted to ascertain about some features of it.

PROOF OF SIGNATURES AND HANDWRITING.

The bill (H. R. 20102) relating to proof of signatures and handwriting was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under objection.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what is the objection to this bill.

Mr. LODGE. I made objection under a misapprehension. I thought the bill read was Order of Business 1025. It was my mistake. I have no objection whatever to Order of Business 1029, being House bill 20102.

Mr. JONES. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that Order of Business No. 1025 has already been passed, and should not be on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been informed that Order of Business 1025, being Senate resolution 418, and Order of Business 1028 have heretofore been disposed of, and should not now be on the calendar.

Mr. LODGE. I find there are a number of bills on the calendar that have been previously passed, such as the agricultural extension bill. I do not know why they are kept on the calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those which have been passed are not, of course, being laid before the Senate. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his objection to the consideration of House bill 20102.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, in line 3, before the word "officer," to insert "judicial," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in any proceeding before a court or judicial officer of the United States where the genuineness of the handwriting of any person may be involved, any admitted or proved handwriting of such person shall be competent evidence as a basis for comparison by witnesses, or by the jury, court, or officer conducting such proceeding, to prove or disprove such genuineness.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, was objection made to the consideration of House bill 27475? I did not hear it.

Mr. BRYAN. I objected to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, under objection.

The bill (S. 4241) to encourage rifle practice and promote a patriotic spirit among the citizens and youth of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I object to the consideration of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be passed over, under objection.

The bill (S. 8188) to amend section 113 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, approved March 3, 1912, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. I object to that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 110) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in Todd and Bennett Counties, in Rosebud Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over for the day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill goes over, under objection.

The bill (S. 8297) to transfer the Pacific Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the War Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. JONES. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] was uncertain in committee whether he was in favor of that bill or not. As he is not present, I ask that it go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will go over under objection.

CONFEDERATE CEMETERY AT LITTLE ROCK, ARK.

The bill (H. R. 24365) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the Confederate cemetery at Little Rock, Ark., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arkansas what special reason there is for the United States Government to take over the Confederate cemetery at Little Rock, Ark.?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. The reasons are largely sentimental. The fact is that the National Government maintains quite a considerable cemetery at that particular point. Near there, or just adjoining there, on a small tract of land 400 by 200 feet, or possibly larger than that, are buried the remains of quite a number of Confederate soldiers. It was thought to be in accordance with the progress of reconciliation which has already taken place that those cemeteries be under one control, something after the fashion of that adopted at Springfield, Ill. The expense is a nominal one. I personally had thought that possibly the ex-Confederates might keep it up. But it was deemed to be the sentiment of the community that there should be no longer two managements of that particular resting place of those who had distinguished themselves upon that occasion which has now become a memory so dear to all of us.

There is much to be said, or nothing to be said, on the subject one way or the other. If it is intended to be debated, there would be much to be said upon it. If the propriety of it does not occur to the Senator immediately upon the statement, it probably would require some elaborate argument to convince him.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked the Senator the question because of the fact that I thought perhaps there was some special reason for this. I notice that he says that they are adjoining each other.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. They are immediately adjoining. There is just a stone wall between them.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the question whether the same help that takes care of the national cemetery at Little Rock of the Federal soldiers will take care of the Confederate cemetery?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is the understanding. The expense will be nominal.

Mr. SMOOT. The only expense would be $2,125 a year?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. No, sir; that would be the entire expense of making the opening in the wall and making such repairs as may be required. The entire expense now of maintaining the cemetery there is probably $2,000 a year. The understanding is that it will not add materially to the expense of maintaining the cemetery.

Mr. SMOOT. I see that the Quartermaster General states that there is no objection on the part of his office to the favorable consideration of the bill, but if it becomes a law it will be necessary to make provision for placing it in the proper repair by increasing the appropriation for the care and maintenance of national cemeteries for the fiscal year 1914.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. At present the Confederate cemetery is not kept up as well as the national cemetery adjoining, and the probabilities are that the walks would be improved and a variety of little improvements would be made that would be necessary to make it conform to the general appearance of the other cemetery.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as the two cemeteries adjoin, I shall not object.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, with the Senator's permission, I beg to say that it was my privilege when at Little Rock a few months or weeks ago to visit this spot. Immediately the question was raised in my mind, and I so expressed it, that it seemed a bit of dire neglect that the soldiers' graves on one side were so beautifully taken care of and the others were in a most chaotic and neglected state; and I recall having suggested to the gentlemen who were with me that it seemed sad and unfortunate——

Mr. GALLINGER. That did not reflect on the Government, however.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Not at all, sir—that 50 years had passed since that horrid strife, and God's green grass grew alike over them both, and did its best to obliterate the horrid thoughts and memories of the past. It seemed to me ungenerous, to say no more, that within this distance of 30 or 40 feet this plat should be so neglected, and I expressed my hope that the United States, in its generosity and charity, would in the very near future take that in, and that they might all be cared for alike.

It is useless to contend now as to the sentiments or as to the reasons of the strife. They were all of God's creation, and all of one great, glorious, and grand country. The cost of maintaining that little plat could be but a pittance, the remains of a few Confederate soldiers; and I do plead with all the earnestness of my nature that the Senate of the United States may do its part toward obliterating the evidences of that horrid strife in that little plat.

Mr. SMOOT. There is nobody objecting, so far as I know.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know that; but I say, at the same time, that I really ache sometimes for the opportunity to give vent to my sentiments in a case that is so deserving as I feel this is.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let the matter go over for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will go over.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas subsequently said: I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 24365) providing for the taking over by the United States Government of the Confederate cemetery at Little Rock, Ark. The bill has been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas asks that the Senate consider the bill indicated by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HERMAN C. FUNK.

The bill (S. 4549) to place the name of Sergt. Herman C. Funk upon the officers' retired list was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President to place the name of Herman C. Funk on the retired list created by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1907, with the rank, pay, and allowances of a sergeant of infantry retired.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to place the name of Herman C. Funk upon the retired list created by act approved March 2, 1907."

OFFICERS DETAILED FOR AVIATION DUTY.

The bill (H. R. 17256) to fix the status of officers of the Army and Navy detailed for aviation duty, and to increase the efficiency of the aviation service, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That after the passage and approval of this act the pay as now or as may be hereafter fixed by law for officers of the Regular Army, Navy, and Marine Corps shall be 20 per cent additional for such officers as are now or may be hereafter detailed by the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy on aviation duty: Provided, That this increase of pay shall be given to such officers only as are actually engaged in the flying of heavier-than-air craft, and while so detailed, as provided herein: Provided further, That no officer holding rank above that of captain shall receive the additional pay provided for by this act: And provided further, That at the same time no more than 30 officers of the Army and 30 officers of the Navy and Marine Corps shall be detailed to the aviation service.

SEC. 2. That all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

REFUND OF TONNAGE TAXES.

The bill (H. R. 2359) to refund certain tonnage taxes and light dues was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to refund the following amounts to the respective named companies, assessed and collected under section 4225, Revised Statutes, which amounts are hereby appropriated: Ninety-three dollars in the case of the American dredge Erie, without enrollment, upon the application of the Duluth-Superior Dredging Co.; and $270 in the case of American scows Nos. 1 and 2, American dredge Lincoln, and American derrick-scow No. 1, without enrollment, upon the application of the Duluth Marine Contracting Co.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That concludes the calendar.

LAND IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. The bill (S. 1899) to repeal a portion of an act heretofore passed relating to the alienation of the title of the United States to land in the District of Columbia some way got under Rule IX and has escaped my attention. It is a bill recommended by the Department of Justice, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and Gen. Bixby, of the Engineer Corps. I hope it will be taken up now and passed. There is no objection to it, as far as I know.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to repeal section 2 of the act approved March 3, 1899 (30 Stats., 1346), authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to correct the records of the War Department in respect to any of the lots mentioned in Senate Document No. 277, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FLATHEAD IRRIGATION PROJECT.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill (S. 5957) providing for the issuance of patents to entrymen for homesteads in the so-called Flathead irrigation project is on the calendar under Rule IX. I move its indefinite postponement.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 4, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 3, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God and our Father, we approach Thee in the sacred attitude of prayer in faith and confidence that by the uplift of the moment we may receive of that spirit which knows no anger, turmoil, nor strife, but which is "first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits," that we may leave behind us a record clean, pure, after the similitude of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Sunday, February 2, 1913, was read and approved.

RESIGNATION OF REPRESENTATIVE SHEPPARD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The order was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 8190. An act authorizing settlers on unsurveyed lands to make final proof under laws existing at the time of settlement; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 8273. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 8139. An act for the relief of William W. Prude; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MALAMBO FIRE CLAIMANTS.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 23836, and refer it to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to discharge from further consideration the Committee on Appropriations and refer to the Committee on Claims the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 23836) to enable the Secretary of War to pay the amount awarded to the Malambo fire claimants by the joint commission under article 6 of the treaty of November 18, 1903, between the United States and Panama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION, ARK. (H. DOC. NO. 1331).

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print as a House document the document prepared by the Interior Department showing the receipts and expenditures on account of the Hot Springs Reservation, Ark., and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to have printed as a House document the report of the Arkansas Hot Springs Reservation and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is this report?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is a statement showing the receipts and expenditures of the Hot Springs Reservation during the last three years. It shows the receipts from the sale of lots. It was brought before the committee in a hearing, and I think it is of sufficient importance to have it printed as a House document rather than in the hearings of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Why does it go to the Committee on Appropriations instead of to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It comes in connection with some estimates that are before the committee in connection with the reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to the bill S. 8035, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of said soldiers and sailors, and agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to the bill S. 8035 and agree to the conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. DICKSON of Mississippi, and Mr. WOOD of New Jersey.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. This is Unanimous Consent Calendar Day, and the Clerk will report the first bill on that calendar.

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIANS.

The first bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (H. R. 25507) to authorize certain changes in homestead allotments of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians in Oklahoma.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I have little hope of this bill getting through by unanimous consent, and I ask to have it passed on the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS FOR SCHOOL SECTIONS WITHIN AN INDIAN, MILITARY, NATIONAL FOREST, OR OTHER RESERVATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25738) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The question of unanimous consent has not been put to the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the gentleman first, that this is a House bill on this calendar, and that later on the calendar, as the gentleman knows, there is a Senate bill. Why not strike this bill off the Calendar for Unanimous Consent and let whatever disposition is made depend upon what is done with the Senate bill?

Mr. RAKER. I desire to substitute at this time the Senate bill and lay aside the House bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, the Senate bill will be reached in due time, and it can be disposed of. When the Senate bill is reached the proposition can be disposed of, and therefore I object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COAL MINING COMPANIES IN THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, may grant to the operator of any coal mine or mines in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage from the unleased segregated coal land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in the State of Oklahoma, not to exceed in any case 640 acres of land: Provided, That the land sought to be acquired adjoins and is contiguous to the coal-mining property in operation: And provided further, That the right to acquire such additional lands shall extend only to coal-mining corporations, individual, or individuals actually operating coal mines in said State in good faith, and in only such cases as may be found necessary for the successful administration of such mine: And provided further, That the lease or leases on such additional coal lands shall not be made for a longer period of time than existing leases and shall not be made at a less rate of royalty than the rate of royaty paid on existing leases now in operation in said State of Oklahoma.

SEC. 2. That all parts of the act entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," passed and approved July 1, 1902, in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, in explanation of this measure I will say that this is simply a proposition to provide for the leasing of new lands for mining purposes which lie adjacent to present leases. The act of June 28, 1898, provided for the leasing of all of the coal lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations in Oklahoma, making an arbitrary rate of royalty to 12 cents per ton, as I now recall, on screened coal. By that law the Secretary of the Interior was permitted to change the rate of royalty when he thought it necessary, and the rate was afterwards changed to 8 cents per ton for mine run, which those who are familiar with coal mining will know is a much better rate for the lessor than 10 cents on the screened basis.

Under that law something over 100 leases were taken out for the mining of coal, running for 30 years from the date of the lease, but on July 1, 1902, you had the so-called supplemental agreement providing for the sale of those coal lands. Advertisements were made for bids, and numerous bids were received, but none, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, of sufficient price to warrant the sale of the land. So coal mining drifted along under this lease system, until some leases have been worked out completely; that is to say, worked up to the limit of the leases. No further progress can be made until some authority be given by this Congress to the Secretary of the Interior permitting him to make additional leases, at least to the operators who heretofore have operated the mines in good faith. Now, if this bill is not passed, the natural result will be that the old openings will fill up with water and the coal, which is the property of the Indians, will be damaged and perhaps destroyed and the Indians will get absolutely nothing from it. If this bill is permitted to pass, then the Secretary can go ahead and make new leases to the old operators under the same condition of their old leases and the Indians continue to get 8 cents per ton royalty, for this provides a royalty basis by tonnage and no sale of the land giving anyone any advantage over another person.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. As I understand the law at the present time no new leases can be made of any coal lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations?

Mr. CARTER. That was stopped by the act of July 1, 1902.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And that act was passed on the theory that the lands were going to be sold, and they did not want to have them leased.

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, recently we have enacted a law by which it is proposed to dispose of the surface——

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota (continuing). And not sell the coal. So that in fact there ought to be some legislation to dispose of coal by lease or otherwise. But this bill only goes to the extent of permitting the Secretary of the Interior to lease not exceeding 640 acres of land contiguous to land that has been worked out to a person who holds a lease. Is not that correct?

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Unless there is some such legislation an operator who has exhausted the coal in the land covered by his lease will have to cease operations. Is not that true?

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And he will therefore lose to a very great extent the value of his machinery, and so forth, that he has there?

Mr. CARTER. Not only that, if the present openings are abandoned, they will fill up with water and the coal belonging to the Indians will be very badly and permanently damaged.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The money that is received from coal royalties is used, I believe, for the purpose of education among the Chickasaw and Choctaw Indians. So that there ought not to be any objection to this bill. But I will say there ought to be general legislation permitting the leasing of these coal lands.

Mr. CARTER. I expected to cover all that in the course of my remarks, and I am very glad the gentleman from South Dakota has brought it out in such a lucid manner.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The attorneys here in Washington representing them are in favor of this bill for the reason that it will add considerable to the amount of revenue they will receive for the coal mined?

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. New railroad tracks will have to be put down, and unless the mines start it would be an insecure position for them to take. In other words, it would injure them greatly. So that under these leases the adjoining lands can be operated under existing leases and plants now in operation?

Mr. CARTER. That is true.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Oklahoma yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How many coal operators are there on these lands now holding leases?

Mr. CARTER. Do you mean the number of leases or the number of operators?

Mr. MANN. The number of men.

Mr. CARTER. I can not say accurately, Mr. Speaker, but I would judge that there were some 50 or more.

Mr. MANN. How many leases are held?

Mr. CARTER. Something over 100, if I remember correctly.

Mr. MANN. That is, the same operator holds more than one lease in many cases?

Mr. CARTER. Yes, in some instances; but a great many of them have only one.

Mr. MANN. How much coal is being mined there?

Mr. CARTER. I think about 3,000,000 tons per annum.

Mr. MANN. How many of these leases are there where the coal is practically exhausted under the present leases?

Mr. CARTER. There are about half a dozen at present, I presume.

Mr. MANN. What is the size of these leases, ordinarily?

Mr. CARTER. Nine hundred and sixty acres. The gentleman will understand, though, that the leases were made at an early day, before the coal crop was well defined, and by saying 960 acres of leased land it might not necessarily follow that there are 960 acres of coal, because much of the land that was first leased was found afterwards to be barren of coal.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman proposes in the bill the limitation of 640 acres. That means that the new leases shall not cover more than 640 acres in any case?

Mr. CARTER. That is the intention.

Mr. MANN. When the coal is exhausted on that 640 acres the same conditions will exist then as exist now on the present leases?

Mr. CARTER. Undoubtedly, unless we have legislation in the meantime taking care of that.

Mr. MANN. What does this bill mean when it says that operators may acquire additional acreage?

Mr. CARTER. That means that they may acquire the lease within the discretion of the Secretary. At least, that is the intention of it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Not to exceed 640 acres.

Mr. MANN. Do the terms mean to acquire the title to operate? Does it mean there to acquire a title to this 640 acres?

Mr. CARTER. That is not the intention of it. It was meant to acquire a lease of 640 acres.

Mr. MANN. That is not what the bill says.

Mr. CARTER. If the title might be said to exist to a lease, they might acquire that title, might they not?

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman have any objection to making that read "acquire by lease" wherever they use the term "acquire"?

Mr. CARTER. None in the least. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that that is the only way he could acquire it now, except by violating the law.

Mr. MANN. But here is proposed a new law to permit them to acquire the property.

Mr. CAMPBELL. But this does not repeal the general law.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. It proposes to repeal the existing law and all laws that may be in conflict with it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman whether, if you change the word "acquire" to "lease," so as to permit the acquiring of the right to lease, that would not meet the objection, and strike out the word "acquire" entirely?

Mr. MANN. I had it marked that way in my bill, but——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I think by changing the word "acquire" to "lease" would accomplish what is proposed by the framers of the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Strike out "acquire" and insert "lease" will answer every purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr CARTER] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr MANN. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I move to go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes, with Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate bill 3843, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 3843) granting to the coal-mining companies in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage adjoining their mine leases, and for other purposes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. It has just been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, aside from the amendments that have been suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I do not care to make any further discussion on the bill, and so I ask that it be read under the five-minute rule for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, may grant to the operator of any coal mine or mines in the State of Oklahoma the right to acquire additional acreage from the unleased segregated coal land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations, in the State of Oklahoma, not to exceed in any case 640 acres of land: Provided, That the land sought to be acquired adjoins and is contiguous to the coal-mining property in operation: And provided further, That the right to acquire such additional lands shall extend only to coal-mining corporations, individual or individuals actually operating coal mines in said State in good faith, and in only such cases as may be found necessary for the successful administration of such mine: And provided further, That the lease or leases on such additional coal lands shall not be made for a longer period of time than existing leases and shall not be made at a less rate of royalty than the rate of royalty paid on existing leases now in operation in said State of Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I want to say, for the information of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], a word regarding the proviso beginning on line 5, page 2. I do not think it would be necessary for him to offer any amendment, because this proviso makes it perfectly plain. The bill provides—

That the lease or leases on such additional coal lands shall not be made for a longer period of time than existing leases and shall not be made at a less rate of royalty than the rate of royalty paid on existing leases now in operation in said State of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. What is the object in leaving the matter open to construction when there are two constructions, and we mean only one thing and can say so?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that in my opinion the whole section should be construed together, and it is perfectly clear that this last provision shall apply only to leases. It says—

That the lease or leases on such additional coal lands shall not be made for a longer period of time than existing leases and shall not be made at a less rate of royalty than the rate of royalty paid on existing leases now in operation in said State of Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. I do not agree with the gentleman as to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. From that it is perfectly apparent that only leasing can be done under this act.

Mr. MANN. No; that applies only when leases are made, and under the former part of the bill they might pass title to the property.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I beg leave to differ with the gentleman. The language is perfectly plain.

Mr. MANN. I have great deference for the opinion of my friend from Texas, and yet when you are passing a bill why not make it clear beyond a question of construction?

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 6, page 1, the word "acquire" and insert the word "lease."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 6, by striking out the word "acquire" and inserting the word "lease."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. In line 10 strike out the word "acquired" and insert the word "leased."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the word "acquired" and insert the word "leased" in lieu thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move, in line 11, after the word "property," to insert the words "of the applicant," so that it will read:

Contiguous to the coal-mining property of the applicant in operation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 11, by inserting after the word "property" the words "of the applicant."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. There is no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I move to amend, on page 2, line 1, by striking out the word "acquire" and inserting the word "lease"

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, strike out "acquire" and insert "lease."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. In line 7, page 2, after the word "leases," insert "of the respective applicants."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, after the word "leases," insert the words "of the respective applicants."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. I call the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] to the language that appears in the last proviso of section 1 on page 2, where it is provided that the royalty shall not be—a less rate of royalty than the rate of royalty paid on existing leases now in operation in said State of Oklahoma.

I suppose it is intended that the royalty shall not be less than the operator is paying under the lease that he now has. Will the gentleman explain what is intended by the language:

And shall not be made at a less rate of royalty than the rate of royalty paid on existing leases now in operation in said State of Oklahoma.

That might mean any leases in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. They have now an arbitrary rate of royalty at 8 cents per ton, and under the law the rate must be uniform.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is what I wanted to know—whether there are any coal lands in Oklahoma leased at less than that rate.

Mr. CARTER. They are all at a flat rate of 8 cents per ton, with the right of the Secretary of the Interior either to increase or reduce the rate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me ask the gentleman if there is any operator who is paying a greater royalty than 8 cents?

Mr. CARTER. There is not at present in Oklahoma.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. It occurs to me that if an operator was paying 10 or 12 cents and we granted him a lease of additional land adjoining that which he is now operating he ought not to have the lease at less than he is now paying.

Mr. CARTER. All leases are at the same flat rate—8 cents per ton mine run.

Mr. MILLER. I move to strike out the last two words for the purpose of asking another question. As I understand there are two methods of paying royalties on coal, both per ton, but one for mine run and the other for screened coal.

Mr. CARTER. No; it is a flat rate of 8 cents a ton, mine-run coal, for all leases in Oklahoma.

Mr. MILLER. I admit that in the Choctaw and Chickasaw countries there is only one method, which is 8 cents per ton mine run, but my additional inquiry is if there is not another method in use elsewhere?

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps so, but not on the land in question here.

Mr. MILLER. There is some controversy as to which brings in the largest remuneration to the mine owner. It has been found there, has it not, that this method of paying 8 cents per ton mine run is more valuable to the owner of the mine than, say, 12 cents per ton screened coal?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, that would depend, of course, on the amount of slack that the coal might run. The coal in Oklahoma would, I judge, run about 30 per cent to 50 per cent slack, so that the rate of 8 cents a ton would produce a much larger royalty than 10 or 12 per ton on screen basis.

Mr. MILLER. Under this bill is it not possible for the Secretary of the Interior to prescribe almost any reasonable sum as a royalty, provided it is not less than 8 cents, mine run?

Mr. CARTER. He can raise or lower it, as he sees fit, above or below 8 cents a ton.

Mr. MILLER. How can he bring it below under this bill?

Mr. MANN. He can not bring it below 8 cents under this bill.

Mr. CARTER. I was speaking of the present law.

Mr. MILLER. This bill safeguards the Indians from every standpoint as long as the Secretary of the Interior faithfully does his work.

Mr. CARTER. The bill gives safeguards to the leases made under its provisions which do not now exist in regard to other leases of land.

Mr. MILLER. This, as the gentleman knows, is touching on a subject that a great many minds have a right to be active about. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that there should be some comprehensive general legislation in the near future to take care of this entire coal question of the Choctaws and Chickasaws?

Mr. CARTER. Undoubtedly there ought to be provision made to dispose of the segregated mineral land, either by sale or by lease. It seems now that it might be impossible for us to sell the land under present conditions. So the only alternative left in justice to the Indians and the proper development of the country would be to lease the lands. Right now we are menaced by the lack of coal in parts of this very coal district, for the reason that leases can not be made that should be made. But this bill comes over from the Senate in its present form, and this is the first opportunity we have had for consideration without objection. It is now late in the session. If any substantial change is made in its provisions it may cause its defeat. Therefore we feel obliged to urge such relief as is contained in this measure.

Mr. MILLER. By the so-called supplemental agreement, under date of July 1, 1902, Congress agreed with the Indians that there should be a sale of the entire mineral area, something like 446,000 acres. I should like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma if he thinks that as good a price could be received now as could have been received in 1904? What is the present market as to coal in that section?

Mr. CARTER. That is a question that is largely conjecture. The coal business in Oklahoma has been in pretty bad shape for the past several years on account of the oil and gas development near the coal lands. But as the supply of gas has become diminished to some extent and the railroads are reinstating coal burners the price of coal is again coming back somewhat to the normal conditions that existed before the discovery of oil and gas in Oklahoma.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That all parts of the act entitled "An act to ratify and confirm an agreement with the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians, and for other purposes," passed and approved July 1, 1902, in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Amend, page 2, by striking out section 2.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, as it now stands, if enacted into law, it would repeal all of sections 56 to 63, inclusive, of the act of July 1, 1902, repealing, as I recall, the very basis of the original leases. That is not intended to be done, and there is no occasion for the repealing clause in the bill.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I differ with the gentleman from Illinois about that, but I see no necessity for section 2 in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman from Oklahoma looked up the act of July 1, 1902, to see what this would repeal?

Mr. CARTER. I am very familiar with the act of July 1, 1902.

Mr. MANN. It would repeal sections 56 to 63, inclusive, in the act of July 1, 1902, because they are all in conflict with this act.

Mr. CARTER. Oh, I do not think so. It would not repeal anything except in so far as the operation of its own provisions are concerned.

The act of July 1, 1902, sought to do two things, as follows: First, to provide for the sale of these lands; second, to prevent any further leasing of them. Now, this bill certainly does not, in any manner, contemplate a sale, but it does provide to lease under certain conditions, and to that effect it amends the act of July 1, 1902, whether this language remains in the bill or not; but there is no necessity for it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will notice that this provision does not even say "all parts of the act so far as they are in conflict with this act." It says it repeals all of the provisions which are in conflict with said act, and all of sections 56 to 63 of the original act are in conflict with this act.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman from Oklahoma that I think he ought to consent to the amendment.

Mr. CARTER. I have already expressed a willingness to consent to the amendment. It is immaterial and superfluous as I have just tried to show.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3843, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments thereto, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to the title, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the title of the bill and insert:
"Authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to lease to the operators of coal mines in Oklahoma additional acreage from the unleased segregated coal land of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment to the title.

The amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CARTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

STANDARD FRUIT AND VEGETABLE BARRELS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 23113) to fix the standard barrel for fruits and vegetables.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. ASHBROOK (interrupting the reading). Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TUTTLE], the author of this bill, is not in the Chamber at this time. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to pass this bill temporarily without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what does the gentleman mean by "temporarily"?

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman from New Jersey will be here later in the day, and he desires to have the bill called up at that time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think we ought to commence that practice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman desires to pass the bill on the calendar, I have no objection.

Mr. ASHBROOK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

NORTH RIVER BRIDGE CO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4978) to supplement and amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road," approved July 11, 1890.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to incorporate the North River Bridge Co., and to authorize the construction of a bridge and approaches at New York City across the Hudson River, to regulate commerce in and over such bridge between the States of New York and New Jersey, and to establish such bridge a military and post road,' approved July 11, 1890, be, and the same is hereby, so amended as to extend the time for the completion of the said bridge and approaches therefor for 10 years from the date of the approval hereof: Provided, That this act shall not be construed as authorizing the building of said bridge in accordance with plans heretofore approved by the Secretary of War, but drawings showing the location and plans of said structure shall again be submitted to him for his consideration and approval before construction shall be entered upon: And provided further, That actual work hereunder and in accordance with such plans so approved must be commenced within three years after the approval of this act, or in default thereof the grantee shall forfeit all rights and privileges hereby and herein granted.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from New Jersey to reserve his objection for a moment.

Mr. KINKEAD of New Jersey. Very well.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a short statement with regard to my attitude and the attitude of my colleague upon this bill.

The SPEAKER. For how long?

Mr. HAMILL. For three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to incorporate the North River Bridge Co. The purpose of the charter is to enable the company to put a bridge over the North River, connecting the States of New York and New Jersey. When the bill first came up for consideration I objected to it, because I did not know what the purpose of the charter was. After a consultation with the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] and other persons interested in the bill, I came to the conclusion that it was a good bill and am still of that belief. I am, however, opposed to its consideration to-day for this important reason: The States of New York and New Jersey have appointed a joint commission to consider the advisability of building a bridge across the North River. That commission has been in communication with me through a personal call of some of its members, and they expressed fear that the rights which would be granted to the North River Bridge Co. might be exclusive of and detrimental to the rights given to the commission under the acts of the two legislatures.

They cite as an instance the fact that when the Williamsburg Bridge was built in New York City over the East River the municipality had to pay $800,000 to a bridge company which had previously acquired rights on both sides of the stream, and the commission is fearful lest the same situation may develop with regards to the operations of the North River Bridge Co. Now, I am unwilling that the State of New Jersey, in the event of its determining to contribute to the erection of an interstate bridge, should be put in a position where it would be compelled to pay part of an indemnity to a bridge company formed under a Federal charter which vested certain rights in the company that should have been withheld in the act granting incorporation.

The amount both States would have to pay as part of the cost of construction would be a heavy enough burden upon the taxpayers without requiring an expenditure for such an incidental as I have mentioned. It is solely for this reason that I am compelled at this time to object. I am in favor of building a bridge across the North River because I fully realize what a great boon it would be to have the States of New York and New Jersey connected by that means. I do not share the belief expressed by some gentlemen on this floor that this company has no intention of building a bridge and that the only purpose in procuring a charter is to enable the incorporators to issue stock and sell it to innocent buyers. From what I can learn I believe these incorporators are amply sound financially and that they are ready and able to construct a single span bridge which will, I understand, cost something like $60,000,000. However, the rights granted by the bill under consideration might, as I said, conflict with other rights conferred on the joint commission appointed by the States of New York and New Jersey, and might put upon these States additional and unwarranted expense. I can not positively state that such would be the effect of this charter, but I can inform the House that the attorney for the interstate commission is carefully considering this bill to determine whether or not this would be so, and in a short time I expect he will let us know what his conclusions on the matter are. If the rights granted in this charter do not conflict with the rights of the commission or impose on the States the liabilities I have mentioned, then I want to be understood as being ardently in favor of the passage of this charter, and I will in that event do all I can to have the North River Bridge Co. obtain it. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to object.

I am sorry to disappoint my colleague [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] who for a long time has had this bill in charge. I realize how hard and patiently he has labored to have the bill enacted. I know with what diligence and persistency he has tried to overcome all objections. I hope, nevertheless, that I can bring about a conference between my colleague [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] and the members of the New York and New Jersey bridge commission which will bring about a friendly agreement as to the proper form of a charter for the North River Bridge Co., and I have no doubt he will then have the pleasure of seeing his work accomplished and a bridge bill passed.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey objects.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Will the gentleman from New Jersey kindly reserve his objection until I make a statement?

Mr. HAMILL. I will reserve my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withholds his objection.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] for his courtesy and for his kind words of commendation uttered a few moments ago. This bridge contemplated by the bill has become a public necessity. I have stated on the floor here on a previous occasion the great necessity that exists for a bridge across the Hudson River. The ever-increasing population of both New York and New Jersey in the vicinity where the bridge is contemplated over there, the enormous increase in freight as well as passenger traffic, the absolute necessity under existing conditions of facilitating transportation, the fact that the present tunnels are for passengers only, all require that there should be no further hesitation in passing this measure. The mayor of New York City and the board of estimates have petitioned Congress to pass this bill so we can get this much-needed bridge.

Years ago, after the charter of the North River Bridge Co. was passed, financial depression set in and that for quite a while prevented the financing of the project. Happily that condition has long passed. Then there were engineering difficulties in the way. Those engineering difficulties have been surmounted and overcome, and the best engineers of this country, the most skillful we have, say that such a bridge as is contemplated can easily be built. I am but repeating to-day what I have said before, both to members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and to this House, that men perfectly reputable and of very high standing in the community from which I come have given assurances that there will be ample capital furnished to build the bridge. I ought to say, also, that some of the delay which occurred in proceeding with the work of construction was due to a protracted litigation that finally terminated in the company's favor in the Supreme Court of the United States, which court affirmed the validity of the charter. Now, I trust that the gentleman from New Jersey, who has been so very kind heretofore and so exceedingly courteous to me, can see his way clear to withdraw his objection; but if the gentleman from New Jersey still insists in opposing the measure for the reasons that he has already stated, may I ask the gentleman from New Jersey to allow this bill to be passed without prejudice?

Mr. HAMILL. We have no objection.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for a minute or two on this subject.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman from New Jersey reserve his right to object, or did he make objection?

Mr. HAMILL. I still reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CALDER] asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Speaker, the authorities of New York City, including the mayor and board of estimate and apportionment, have adopted a resolution and forwarded it to the Speaker of this House recommending the enactment of this legislation. I rise simply, Mr. Speaker, to ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this time the resolution referred to.

Mr. HAMILL. Regarding what?

Mr. CALDER. Recommending the passage of this bill.

Mr. HAMILL. There are two North River bridge bills.

Mr. CALDER. I speak of the one now under consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The resolution referred to is as follows:

Resolution of the board of estimate and apportionment of the city of New York.

Whereas a petition has been presented to this board by the North River Bridge Co., dated January 22, 1913, asking us to recommend to Congress the passage of an act, S. 4978, which provides for an extension of time for the construction of the proposed bridge over the Hudson River, extending from the State of New Jersey to the city of New York, which act has already passed the United States Senate; and

Whereas it is in our opinion in the public interest that such bill should be passed and that such a bridge should be built as soon as the location and character thereof, and the manner of its operation, are approved by the Secretary of War, the communities in New Jersey affected thereby, and this board: Now, be it

Resolved, That we favor the passage of said act by Congress; and further, be it

Resolved, That the mayor be requested to send to the House of Representatives copies of said petition and this resolution.

It is understood, however, that our approval of said act is upon the express condition that it shall be so worded that the free and unrestricted rights of the States of New York and New Jersey to erect a bridge at any location between said States shall be unimpaired, except at the location which may be finally selected for the bridge to be constructed by the North River Bridge Co.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a resolution adopted by the board of estimate and apportionment at a meeting of said board held on January 23, 1913.

Dated, New York, January 23, 1913.

JOSEPH HAAG,
Secretary Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes, to explain why I am not in accord with my two colleagues, Mr. KINKEAD and Mr. HAMILL, and I ask them to temporarily withhold their objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why anyone, either from New York or New Jersey, should object to any legislation proposed here in the slightest degree helping or calculated to help the building of a bridge over the North River, connecting the city of New York with the New Jersey shore. We have here two bills, each proposing an extension of time to a company formed for the purpose of building a bridge such as I have suggested. Without attempting to pass on the relative merit or strength of these companies, I contend that we are more likely to get a bridge if we encourage two competing companies than if we discourage both, as is now proposed by my colleague, Mr. HAMILL.

There is an interstate commission for examining this problem, but there is no reason why we should not have two or three bridges there. One of these bills relates to an extension of time of a company which has already expended a quarter of a million of dollars in engineering work, in doing practical work, in boring the bed of the river, and so forth. The Legislature of New Jersey and the Legislature of New York have approved the proposed plans incorporated in one of these bills, and the Secretary of War also has approved these plans.

Mr. HAMILL. Will the gentleman yield for a question? I will ask for more time for him.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly; I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. HAMILL. Does the gentleman believe this charter ought to be granted if it would exclude the commission from building a bridge anywhere within the same limits within which this company may build a bridge?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly not, Mr. Speaker. There is ample room on Manhattan Island and in the State of New Jersey for the approaches to three bridges. Across the East River there are already four bridges.

Mr. HAMILL. The gentleman does not get my point. I will state it again. This company may, I understand, build the bridge between Forty-second Street and Fifty-ninth Street, New York. Now, if this privilege would exclude the commission from putting a bridge within those limits, would the gentleman then favor this bill to the exclusion of the right of the commission?

Mr. TOWNSEND. My colleague makes an inference that is not founded upon good reason. The Brooklyn Bridge and the Manhattan Bridge are as near in their terminals as these two bridges would be if they were in the same district indicated by my colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the gentleman yield for a moment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make two or three remarks about this bill, inasmuch as it and the next one on the calendar came from our committee. It is true both of these bills are in behalf of enterprises that have been before the public for a long time, and the objection, I understand, now about extending the authority in the two cases is that they are thought to be speculative and that there is no prospect of building a bridge. All of us would be glad to see a bridge or two bridges or more, if they could be built, and all I have to say will be said without deciding the question of whether or not there is money in sight to build either. So we reported them both together, and if anybody objects to one I want both objected to, because I want them to stand or fall together. If they are speculative, I want them both in the field instead of one.

Mr. FOSTER. The gentleman from Georgia need not be afraid about that.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Georgia yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes, sir; I yield.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe that at this time there is a field for profitable operation of two bridges across the Hudson River at New York?

Mr. ADAMSON. If the charge be true that either enterprise is speculative, only reaching out and trying to make money by building a bridge or promoting such project, we would be just as safe with two authorizations as one. I prefer to have the two.

Mr. MANN. Ought not the gentleman's committee to determine as to what company shall be permitted to build a bridge there, so that two companies will not be authorized, one possibly intending to build a bridge and the other intending to sell stock to innocent purchasers for the purpose of taking care of themselves?

Mr. ADAMSON. Both enterprises have been complimented with that charge.

Mr. MANN. I understand.

Mr. ADAMSON. The gentleman having long been a great ornament to the committee of which I have the honor to be the chairman——

Mr. MANN. An able and efficient chairman——

Mr. ADAMSON (continuing). Is thoroughly familiar with the fact that these charges have been bandied back and forth, and we have renewed this authority two or three times in the last 20 years. It is unnecessary to say, even if it were in order, who opposed and who supported the granting or the ordering of these reports.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me, if the gentleman will permit, if a bridge is needed across the Hudson River at New York, the gentleman's committee ought to determine, before it makes a recommendation or gives authority, that somebody is able to raise the money and carry on the enterprise, and that we ought not to pass one or two speculative propositions in order to aid gentlemen selling stock, which I am afraid both of these are for.

Mr. ADAMSON. It is not violating any propriety to say that several members of the committee made that same suggestion that has been made by the gentleman from Illinois a good many times before the report was made.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ADAMSON. I would like just to add, in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that if any man with the money in bank or to his credit, according to reputation, would say to our committee that the money is in hand to build the bridge, that bridge company could get authority from our committee unanimously any day without any question about it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE]?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; I yield.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON], the chairman of our committee, whether it is not a fact that one of New York's most prominent, substantial, and best-standing citizens wrote a letter, which I showed to the gentleman, vouching for the fact that capital was ready for the building of this bridge, and that gentlemen of responsibility and of high standing in financial circles stood ready to pay in sufficient money to carry on the building and construction of the bridge?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will answer that. Answering that, Mr. Speaker, the distinguished gentleman from New York did show me a letter from a great and learned man expressing opinions as to what they would be able to do after this authority is granted.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. No; his absolute assurances.

Mr. ADAMSON. I have also had letters from the mayor and other men also making these same promises and reasoning as to what they would be able to do in the market after the authorization was granted. I have written to every single one of them to the effect that "if one of your numerous money kings of New York shall write me saying that the money shall be forthcoming you will secure the passage of these bills."

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. The gentleman from Georgia, I hope, will concede that the gentleman I referred to as having written the letter I showed him is a highly reputable citizen of high standing in our community.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes; but he did not say the money was ready, but thought it could be raised.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Yes; he said the money was ready.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] remember, having served on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce for many years with me, that when he and I first served on that committee we heard the same roseate representations as to the prospect of the next 10 years in the history of this bridge after the first 10 years were about to run out?

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes. I not only remember that, but I remember that President McKinley called an extra session of Congress at that time, so that the gentleman from Illinois and I, as we had just been first elected, could show to the public the benefit of our service [laughter], and a picture of that bridge was then hung in our committee room, and it is hanging there yet.

I want to be honest with this House, and I want to say that those gentlemen have not shown to us that there is money in readiness to be paid out. If it is their desire to be licensed to go out fishing for capital, I do not want them to have a monopoly; I want them to have competition.

Mr. HAMILL. Mr. Speaker, I just want to get into this frightfully turbulent discussion one word edgewise. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMSON. It is good-humored. We are giving the gentleman some good jokes. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILL. I am thoroughly convinced of the necessity of building a bridge across the North River, and for no other reason than that the present tunnel under the North River is inadequate for carrying freight across the river through the tunnels to the terminal in New York, but, as I stated, the rights which we might grant by this charter may possibly conflict with rights conferred on the joint commission formed by the Legislatures of New York and New Jersey, and it is because of that that I am objecting at this time to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. COX. I object.

Mr. HAMILL. Yes; I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] both object. The bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

NEW YORK & NEW JERSEY BRIDGE COMPANIES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5659) to supplement and amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the New York & New Jersey Bridge Cos. to construct and maintain a bridge across the Hudson River between New York City and the State of New Jersey," approved June 7, 1894.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. AYRES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. AYRES] asks unanimous consent to pass this bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let me ask the gentleman what possible good will it do to keep this bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, occupying a little space there, when the gentleman knows that the bill can not pass on the Unanimous Consent Calendar?

Mr. AYRES. If the gentleman states that to be true, I will not ask it.

Mr. MANN. It is true if I live.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, this bill and the preceding one must go together.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE, Mr. FITZGERALD, and Mr. HAMILL objected.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and the clerk will report the next bill.

LAND IN KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3952) for the purpose of repealing so much of an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indians located in Kansas City, Kans., providing for the sale of a tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855 (said section of said act relating to the sale of said land), be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, approved June 21, 1906, providing for the sale of a tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855 (said section of said act relating to the sale of said land), be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] desires to offer an amendment to this bill.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to remove an objection that was made to this bill by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] when the bill was considered on a former occasion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up his amendment.

Mr. TAGGART. I send the amendment to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all the words in line 3, page 2, after the word "six," and all of lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, and the words "relating to the sale of said land," in line 8, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and convey, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855. And authority is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to provide for the removal of the remains of persons interred in said burial ground and their reinterment in the Wyandotte Cemetery at Quindaro, Kans., and to purchase and put in place appropriate monuments over the remains reinterred in the Quindaro Cemetery. And after the payment of the costs of such removal, as above specified, and the costs incident to the sale of said land, and also after the payment to any of the Wyandotte people, or their legal heirs, of claims for losses sustained by reason of the purchase of the alleged rights of the Wyandotte Tribe in a certain ferry named in said treaty, if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, such claims or any of them are just and equitable, without regard to the statutes of limitation, the residue of the money derived from said sale shall be paid per capita to the members of the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians who were parties to said treaty, their heirs, or legal representatives."

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There was a further amendment intended to be included.

Mr. TAGGART. It was intended to include the words "as reads as follows" before the words proposed to be inserted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will make that modification.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if this amendment changes the purpose of the bill, or does it simply change the verbiage of the bill?

Mr. TAGGART. It simply makes the intention of the bill definite and certain, leaving no doubt as to what is repealed and what the intention of the bill is.

Mr. FERRIS. Does it accomplish for these Indian women what the gentleman hopes to accomplish?

Mr. TAGGART. It accomplishes precisely what they have demanded and what was the evident intention of the Senate in passing the bill, inasmuch as this paragraph is contained on page 2 of the report accompanying the bill.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] had a conversation about it last week, and the gentleman from Illinois was of the opinion at that time that the bill, in fact, did not accomplish anything, I think.

Mr. MANN. It repealed a great deal that the gentleman did not wish repealed. Now the gentleman in his amendment recites the language he wishes to repeal.

Mr. FERRIS. The trouble about it was that the amendment was so long I could not exactly catch it.

Mr. TAGGART. That is the language of the paragraph that is sought to be repealed. I did not draw the bill and had no share nor part in it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the additional language that the gentleman wishes to put in the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

As reads as follows.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "An act repealing the provision of the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, authorizing the sale of a tract of land reserved for a burial ground for the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians in Kansas City, Kans."

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO THE STATE OF TEXAS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 27875) authorizing the President to convey certain lands to the State of Texas.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is, in his discretion, hereby, authorized to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Texas, for the use of the State experimental station in connection with the agricultural research and demonstration work, such portions of the old Fort Brown Military Reservation as he may deem advisable: Provided, That should the State of Texas fail or refuse to use the property herein authorized to be conveyed for the purposes above set out, it shall revert to the United States and become a part of the public domain thereof.

With the following amendment recommended by the committee:

Amend, by adding after the word "authorized," in line 4, the words "in his discretion, to direct the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas how much land is involved in this tract.

Mr. GARNER. The Agricultural Department has requested 280 acres. My understanding is that the buildings occupy about 40 acres, and there is about 320 acres in the tract.

Mr. MANN. The intention is to turn over the entire 320 acres?

Mr. GARNER. No; the intention is to convey that portion of the land set out in the President's order of June 12, 1912, which is set out by metes and bounds.

Mr. MANN. The Government is now maintaining an experiment station on the land?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. If it is turned over to the State of Texas the State will maintain it and partially relieve the Government from the expense of its further maintenance?

Mr. GARNER. The Government intends to cooperate with the State of Texas.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides that should the State of Texas fail or refuse to use the property herein authorized to be conveyed for the purposes above set out, it shall revert to the United States. Does that mean fail or refuse at any time?

Mr. GARNER. I suppose so.

Mr. MANN. Then, why not say so?

Mr. GARNER. Well, this is the usual clause that is put in every bill. I do not want the property used for any purpose except what the bill says it shall be used for.

Mr. MANN. The last part of the proviso is that if it is not so used it shall revert to the United States and become a part of the public domain thereof. If it became a part of the public domain, would it be subject to entry in any shape? Why not say that it shall revert to the United States?

Mr. GARNER. I care nothing about it; it is a part of the public domain of the United States now. It was transferred from the War Department to the Interior Department some months ago.

Mr. MANN. In one sense it is a part of the public domain, and if so, it does not need to recite it here.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman know what this land is worth?

Mr. GARNER. I do not know that I can state to the gentleman with any degree of accuracy the value of the land. If it is land subject to irrigation from the Rio Grande, it would be worth $100 an acre. If it is not subject to irrigation, I should think $10 or $25 an acre would be all that it was worth.

Mr. SISSON. Does the gentleman know what the Government paid for it?

Mr. GARNER. I have no idea. It is an old fort, over 60 years old, and it is right on the edge of Brownsville.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARNER. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman expect the United States to give Texas all of the military reservations in that State?

Mr. MANN. Not all at once. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. Speaking for myself, I have an idea about what ought to be done with these abandoned posts. I may as well state my own personal views about it now. If the information I get is correct, and especially applied to these two posts that were spoken of, they ought to be used for public purposes, and I will tell the gentleman why. You can not possibly sell these houses at the post the gentleman referred to a moment ago at Fort Clark, Tex., for 10 per cent of the value that they could be put to for public purposes, such as a tuberculosis sanitarium.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is willing to make one agreement, I suppose, that as long as he is here he will not ask for more than two forts to be turned over in any one year? [Laughter.]

Mr. GARNER. I think that would be fair and liberal on my part.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas if it is the intention of the department to go ahead and do the same amount of work on this reservation that it is now doing?

Mr. GARNER. It will cooperate with the State.

Mr. FOSTER. Or is it the intention that the National Government shall withdraw its support from this particular tract of land?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that there is now before the Legislature of Texas a proposition for an appropriation of $25,000, and I have information from the chairman of the finance committee of the senate, as well as from members of the house of representatives, that if this bill goes through $25,000 to continue this work there will be appropriated by the Texas Legislature. It is my understanding from Dr. Galloway that the United States Government will cooperate, but to what extent or in what manner I am not informed; but it is the policy of his department to encourage the States as much as possible to do this work under their supervision and suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman from Texas be willing to put in an amendment providing that the National Government should not expend any more money on this particular tract?

Mr. GARNER. I should think it would be very unwise to prohibit the National Government from cooperating with the State in a situation of this kind.

Mr. FOSTER. Would the gentleman be willing to provide that the State must appropriate not less than $25,000 before this transfer is made?

Mr. GARNER. I think that would be an undesirable provision. The question here is simply whether or not the Agricultural Department shall continue to appropriate $20,000 each year to keep up this garden, as it does in California and in Florida—there are three of them in the United States—or whether it will permit the State of Texas through its legislature to carry on this work under the supervision and instruction of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. FOSTER. If the State of Texas is going to do that, I do not see any particular objection to the bill.

Mr. GARNER. My information is that they are making an effort. It does not lie within the power of any man to foretell the acts of the Legislature of the State of Texas or the acts of the Congress of the United States.

Mr. FOSTER. This may help them to get the appropriation.

Mr. GARNER. I think when this bill becomes a law it will be an incentive.

Mr. FOSTER. Then the gentleman thinks it would not be wise to provide either one of these conditions. Would it not be well to lease this to the State of Texas?

Mr. GARNER. I do not understand this is anything more than a perpetual lease. If the State fails to use this for any other purpose than that for which it is conveyed, it will revert to the United States.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, does not my colleague think we can afford to give any State in the Union some land to carry on experimental work in preference to giving it the money out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague probably was not in the Chamber at the moment I asked the gentleman from Texas if he would be willing to have an amendment inserted providing that the Government should not expend any more money there.

Mr. MANN. Oh, but the Government may wish to make some experiments there itself, but meanwhile the State of Texas has to carry on this experimental work now being carried on exclusively by the United States, and if the State fails to do that the property goes back to the United States Government.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that under the terms of this bill there is any reason for the National Government not expending the same amount of money in the future as in the past.

Mr. MANN. Even if it does, the State of Texas will have to spend most of the money.

Mr. FOSTER. I will ask the gentleman from Texas, then, if he is willing to put in a provision that the State of Texas this year shall appropriate $25,000, which the gentleman from Texas thinks it is going to do.

Mr. MANN. I know, but the gentleman from Texas objects to that as a matter of courtesy between legislative bodies. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSTER. It may be a matter of economy to the State of Texas.

Mr. MANN. Does not my colleague think that if we can work the State of Texas into this that we ought to do it?

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman from Illinois think that we will ever be successful, through a member of the Texas delegation, in working the State of Texas for anything?

Mr. MANN. Oh, yes; we worked them last year for a tuberculosis sanitarium.

Mr. SHERLEY. And they worked us for a lot of valuable property.

Mr. MANN. We worked them for a sanitarium, or sanatorium; I have forgotten which it was in this case.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's explanation, as good as he is able to make, and his plea for the State of Texas, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, there are committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 3, after the word "is," at the end of the line, insert the words "in his discretion."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," insert the words "to direct the Secretary of the Interior."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, in line 9, by inserting, after the word "Texas," the words "at any time."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "Texas," insert the words "at any time."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, page 2, lines 2 and 3, by striking out "and become a part of the public domain thereof."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "and become a part of the public domain thereof."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GARNER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMERICAN COMMISSION FOR INVESTIGATION OF RURAL CREDITS IN EUROPE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was S. J. Res. 132, providing for an American commission for the investigation of rural credits in Europe.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Department of State of the United States detailed, upon the application of the Southern Commercial Congress, David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy, to direct a conference on agricultural finance, held under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress in Nashville, Tenn., April 1 to 6; and

Whereas 27 States were represented through delegates in the conference; and

Whereas resolutions were unanimously adopted providing for an American commission to go abroad for the investigation of rural credits in Europe; and

Whereas the Southern Commercial Congress will send the commission abroad, composed of delegates from all States of the United States, to report to the International Institute of Agriculture (which under treaty is supported by the Government of the United States), at the time of the meeting of the General Assembly of the International Institute of Agriculture, May, 1913: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Congress of the United States, in recognition of the valuable service to be rendered the United States in the investigation of the European systems of agricultural finance, hereby indorses the proposed American commission and invokes for it the diplomatic consideration of the countries to be included in the itinerary.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask some gentleman upon what theory is the committee proceeding in having Congress interfere in diplomatic relations directly?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has passed the Senate unanimously and has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. It does not call for a dollar's expenditure on the part of the United States Government. It is an effort on the part of certain persons to begin at their own expense a cooperative study of certain questions affecting the agricultural prosperity in the United States, and they would like to have an opportunity to do so under the most favorable circumstances, and therefore are asking from Congress an official recognition of the project and seeking to obtain certain diplomatic courtesies from Governments in Europe. Now, Mr. Speaker, this question has been referred to the President of the United States, and I shall ask permission to insert in the RECORD as a part of my remarks the remarks which President Taft made at a dinner held here in Washington a few days ago specifically indorsing this particular project and this particular inquiry. I shall ask also, without taking the time to read it, Mr. Speaker, to insert in the RECORD a letter which Sir Horace Plunkett, a member of the British Parliament, wrote to Gov. Woodrow Wilson, calling his attention to this particular commission and the scope of it, and asking him to express his approval or disapproval. I will insert his reply, and at this point I should like to read the letter which Gov. Wilson wrote in reply specifically indorsing this project.

The letter is as follows:

STATE OF NEW JERSEY, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
January 30, 1913.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The inclosed letter from Sir Horace Plunkett will explain itself. I had a long talk with Sir Horace the other day, and I write now, as he suggests, to tell you that the proposed enlargement of the scope of inquiry by the commission which is to visit Europe has my entire and cordial approval. I think there are few safer guides than Sir Horace Plunkett.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

So this, Mr. Speaker, is a movement which has not only the indorsement of President Taft but that of President Elect Wilson.

Mr. BATHRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. BATHRICK. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the project of farm credits, or the proposed commission to investigate farm credits, has the indorsement of Woodrow Wilson?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The proposed commission and its visit to Europe is what he referred to.

I hold in my hand, Mr. Speaker, also resolutions of indorsement that were passed by the American Association of Commercial Executives, by the Farmers' National Congress, by the National Grange, by the Chambers of Commerce of the United States, and by the Farmers' Educational and Cooperative Union of America, which I will ask also to insert as a part of my remarks.

Now, Mr. Speaker, without arguing this question further, I desire to say when this commission was proposed it was primarily to study the European system of agricultural credits. And it was to be composed of delegates, two from each State of the Union, to go at their own expense, or at the expense of the local organization nominating them. There have been acceptances from practically every State in the Union and from certain Provinces in Canada. But since that time there has been a change made in the purposes of the commission which greatly enlarges the scope of it.

Mr. KINDRED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. KINDRED. Does this bill carry with it any appropriation?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. It does not carry a dollar of appropriation. That is probably the only mistake that has been made in this movement. When the immigration question reached Congress an appropriation of hundreds of thousands of dollars was made to send a commission abroad to study that question, but the farmers of the country, recognizing the fact that this movement is essentially a cooperative matter, and that it is a question with which the National Government properly has very little to do, assumed the initiative and proposed to study it at their own expense, and all that they are asking of Congress is that this activity shall have the recognition of Congress, and thereby assure the diplomatic courtesies of the European countries which it is proposed to visit.

Now, as I said, Mr. Speaker, there has been a change and enlargement in the scope of this inquiry which makes it a study more particularly of the cooperative methods of farmers themselves, as related to the whole branch of agricultural production and agricultural distribution, rather than to the one question of agricultural credit; and if it is carried out it will be an American commission to inquire into the organization of agricultural business in Europe. The inquiry will embrace an examination of the methods employed by the progressive agricultural communities in production and marketing and in the financing and all similar operations. Special note will be taken first of the parts played, respectively, in the promotion of agriculture by the Government and by volunteer organizations of the agricultural classes; second, the application of the cooperative system to agricultural production, distribution, and finance; third, the effect of cooperative action upon social conditions in rural communities; fourth, relation of the cost of living to the business organization of the food-producing classes.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. I want to state to the gentleman that I am in sympathy with the movement that is on foot to establish a proper system of agricultural credits. How will the personnel of this commission be selected?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. It is to be selected by recommendation from governors of the States, so far as the governors may make nominations; also by responsible commercial bodies of the States and by invitations extended by the Southern Commercial Congress and accepted by representative individuals who are willing to pay their own expenses.

Mr. SISSON. What I am endeavoring to arrive at is what part the different farmers' organizations will have, throughout the respective sections of the country, to do with the selection of these delegates.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Farmers' organizations have the same right as commercial organizations to select delegates, provided they pay the expense.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, the gentleman appreciates the value of the report depends largely on the character of this commission. If the commission is of a character in sympathy with this movement, you would get recommendations which might result in a great deal of good, and information that might result in a great deal of good; but if it should be made up of men who might take a different view of the situation we might get the very information we do not want.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. There are at present, Mr. Speaker, more than 60 acceptances.

Mr. SISSON. Can the gentleman give me any information in a general way, about who these men are?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I have said, Mr. Speaker, that I do not have the personnel; but the governors of certain States, and more particularly of the Southern States, have made nominations, and where the governor of any State nominates two delegates they are recognized as the official delegates. I think that in most of the Southern States the governors have made nominations; but as to some of them I am not sure.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will the gentleman permit me to say in answer to his question, that I know the gentleman selected from my State, Mr. Harvey Jordan, who was at one time president of the Cotton Growers' Association. That is the character of the selection from my State. I know he was selected for that purpose by those authorized to select him. There was no economy in selection, so far as he is concerned.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman states that this is to be without expense to the Federal Government?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Absolutely.

Mr. SISSON. Now, in the event these gentlemen accept the appointment and go on this commission, there will be no purpose on their part to ask Congress to defray any expenses they might incur?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Absolutely none.

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. BATHRICK. I desire to ask whether any farm organizations have been requested officially to name any person on this commission?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That I can not say, specifically, Mr. Speaker, because I have not that information. But I do know that any farm organization that nominates a delegate and provides for his expenses is welcome to have that delegate go with the commission. Members of this House and Members of the Senate have also accepted and are to be members of this commission.

Mr. BATHRICK. Another question, please. I am entirely in sympathy with any method of investigation looking to the ascertainment of facts respecting a farm credit system. Does not the gentleman think that it will hasten legislation or action in some direction toward getting a farm credit system if this commission were asked to report at an early date?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I will state in regard to that, Mr. Speaker, that I do not regard this question as requiring national legislation. I believe that this is a question of purely State legislation, and in no sense of the word will it come within the purview of national legislation. That is my view of the matter.

Mr. BATHRICK. I believe that the gentleman will ascertain himself later that it is a matter of national legislation and that it will be considered.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. This only emphasizes that this is a question requiring considerable thought and study, and this is the first systematized and organized effort which has been made in the United States to study it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. With pleasure.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman stated that the present Chief Executive had indorsed this. Did he indorse this resolution, or did he indorse the Southern Commercial Congress? What is the expression?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I will say to the gentleman that the Southern Commercial Congress gave a dinner here in the city at which Sir Horace Plunkett was a guest and at which President Taft himself was a guest, and that President Taft, discussing this matter, used these words:

> The subject of credits and the necessity for improving the method of the securing of better credit for the farmers is one that I have discussed; taking much of it on credit, because I have not had the personal experience that justifies me in speaking with any authority. The results that we have seen in Germany and in France and other countries—doubtless in Ireland—makes me think that we would be without our usual willingness to adapt anything good that we see unless we take up this subject, study it, as you propose to study it, through your commission, and then adapt it to the States in so far as it may be adapted to our civilization and our people.

It was specifically, Mr. Speaker, an indorsement of this particular commission and its method of going to Europe and making this study.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has either the President or Mr. Wilson or the chambers of commerce of the United States particularly indorsed this particular provision that the Congress of the United States invokes for it the diplomatic consideration of the countries to be included in the itinerary? Has anybody holding any official position indorsed that particular proposition?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Why, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be necessary for the President of the United States or any incoming President of the United States to petition Congress to extend a courtesy to a group of representative American citizens, comprising from 60 to 100, who are going abroad to spend 60 days, at their own expense, in a study that must be prosecuted in European countries. This is a request for an official recognition by Congress in order that European countries which they are going to visit may extend every opportunity to prosecute their studies, with the understanding that they are to meet their own expenses and to make reports to the States and organizations which send them.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know of anything by which Congress directly invoked the diplomatic consideration of other countries?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I know of no precedent, but if a precedent is wanting I favor making it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would it not be a bad one——

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That is a matter about which there may be a difference of opinion——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania (continuing). To set aside all the traditions and all the practices of a well-ordered government?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I should like to say that my service in the House has been very short, and I came here from the farm. Therefore I have not had large opportunity of studying the precedents of Congress. So I can not answer the gentleman's question more fully; but I will say that I can see no impropriety whatever in the Congress of the United States giving official recognition to a body of representative American citizens who are going abroad to study a question that has been recognized by every national platform that has been written in the past campaigns and to carry out a mission which has been specifically indorsed by the President of the United States and by the man who in four weeks will be President of the United States. More than that, the question of the high cost of living is one, I think, that is being discussed as generally as any other question before the people. The President of the United States within a week has said that the American Nation are at a point where they will soon be importing food to feed the American people. The Government, both State and National, is spending large and ever-increasing sums in agricultural education. Yet consumption steadily gains on production. The farmer under present conditions sells his products to the middlemen, who in turn become the purveyors of our population. The official reports of the Secretary of Agriculture disclose that the middleman increases the average price 65 per cent to the consumer. In many instances the producer sells at a loss, while the consumer pays an extortionate price, with only the middleman making a profit. Under these circumstances it seems to me that Congress should not hesitate to take this action.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think one point that is in the minds of a good many of us here is why the Government should undertake to commend a body of men over whose selection it has no control. In other words, you are asking Congress to give an unusual letter of credit to a group of men the personnel of which we know nothing about. Now, if it is so important that the Government itself should ask other Governments to consider representatives from this country, ought not the Government, as a Government, to select those representatives? And when has the State become so obscure that the accredited representatives from a State need an additional indorsement in order to receive consideration abroad?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, that is a question that goes to every man in his representative capacity, and will have to be answered by each one upon his own responsibility. It is a question that I am not here to answer, only for myself and to my constituents.

Mr. SHERLEY. But it is proposed that Congress shall ask consideration for them abroad.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. This matter has passed the Senate unanimously.

Mr. SHERLEY. A great many things pass the Senate unanimously.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. It has received the approval of the President and of the incoming President.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. If consideration is given for this resolution, does the gentleman intend to offer any amendment to it, or to pass it as it is?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. To pass it as it is.

Mr. MANN. Who appoints these delegates?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. They are to be appointed, in large part, by the governors of the States.

Mr. MANN. The resolution says the Southern Commercial Congress will send the commission abroad.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The Southern Commercial Congress initiated the movement and is in nominal control only.

Mr. MANN. Is that the fact, or is it not?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. This commission received its initiative from the Southern Commercial Congress, but the Southern Commercial Congress is asking the governors of the States and other authorities to make the nominations.

Mr. MANN. That may be, but does the Southern Commercial Congress intend to name the men? The resolution says "delegates from all the States." Is it necessary before they go abroad that there shall be delegates from each State?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. No, sir; that is not necessary. It is an opportunity for all of the States to send delegates.

Mr. MANN. Then the resolution is not accurate in that respect, because it says "delegates from all the States."

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. I know there have been acceptances to the number of more than 60 of these delegates, but no man can tell to-day whether there will actually be representatives from every State.

Mr. MANN. That is what I thought. Therefore it seems to me improper to recite it in the resolution, which may be presented to somebody, when it may not be true. Now, is it expected that the Southern Commercial Congress will pay the expenses of these delegates or that they will pay those expenses themselves?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Either the delegates personally or the organization nominating them.

Mr. MANN. I suppose that is so, but which is it?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. In some instances one and in some the other.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand that the Southern Commercial Congress makes a discrimination and will pay the expenses of some, but will not pay the expenses of others?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Why, Mr. Speaker, the Southern Congress does not pay the expenses of any of the delegates.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that they did. It is understood, then, that these gentlemen go abroad at their own expense?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Absolutely so.

Mr. MANN. And they are expected to study the subject of rural credits and report to whom?

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Their report, Mr. Speaker, will be to the organization appointing them.

Mr. MANN. That is not what the resolution says.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. These gentlemen will go back to their respective communities to discuss this question and awaken public interest, thus taking the first steps toward securing practical cooperation among the farmers of the country.

Mr. MANN. This says that the commission shall report to the International Institute of Agriculture at Rome at its meeting in May.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The word "report" there means that they shall convene at Rome to begin their labors.

Mr. MANN. I think not.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. That is the meaning of it.

Mr. MANN. I think that is not the meaning of it and not the intention of the resolution, in my opinion. Now, if the purpose is to send a letter to this agricultural institute at Rome, commending to the institution a lot of gentlemen who want to make a visit abroad, that is one thing; but the resolution says they are to report to the International Institute of Agriculture in May, 1913.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. The word "report" means that they are to arrive at Rome at that time and start on their tour.

Mr. MANN. What will they do with the resolution if passed; present it to the institute and say, "Gentlemen, we are here; look at it"? To whom will they present the resolution? It is safe to say that the nations abroad are not waiting with bated breath to know whether this resolution passes; they do not know that it is in existence. Suppose it does pass, what will be done with it, as a matter of fact? Will it be presented to somebody abroad? I take it that they will not walk up to the Parliament of England and say, "Here is a resolution; give us seats in the gallery." Will they present it to the prime minister? It will be rather an unusual thing to pass a resolution to be presented to an administrative officer of a foreign government. It would be rather an unusual thing for the administrative body abroad to pay any attention to a legislative resolution passed here.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to be stated here that the question of rural credits in Europe is one that has received a great deal of consideration here. While I have no objection to this resolution, it seems to me that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has pointed out some of the reasons why it certainly could not be of any great consequence.

Now, there was a resolution on this subject which passed the Senate. There have been two resolutions to the same effect introduced in this House that provided for the study of the European agricultural credit system by a commission of five American citizens that should be appointed by the President; and I think the resolutions, or some of them, provided that the appointment should be confirmed by the Senate and that their expenses should be paid; and I think also these resolutions provided that a salary should be paid to them while making the study, and providing a time in which they should report to Congress the conclusions which they reached.

It seems to me that the question is one well worthy of serious and careful study. I do not have much faith in this proposed resolution. I have no objection to it, but I do not believe it will accomplish much. While nobody could object to anyone going over and studying as they please, yet if we want to get something upon which to base National or State legislation from a study of this question, it ought to be made, it seems to me, by men who are named either by Congress or by the President, and whose duty it will be to make a report; and then we ought to pay their expenses and also for their time in order that the appointing power may not be confined only to men who are sufficiently wealthy to bear their own expenses. We should not confine it only to the wealthy.

It seems to me before the final consideration of this particular resolution it ought to be known to the House that the kind of resolution that I have indicated has passed the Senate and is before the Committee on Agriculture of this House; that this committee has given several hearings on the subject, and has heard men from different parts of the United States as well as Members of Congress on the question; that we ought not to deceive ourselves into the idea that by passing this resolution we are going to accomplish anything of particular merit. While I shall not object to it, I am perfectly willing that these men should go and study as they please, but I do not want somebody afterwards, if a resolution should be reported by the Agricultural Committee, to say that it had already been passed upon and that this was sufficient. I want investigation made of the rural credit systems of Europe. The farmers of our country have to pay too high a rate of interest when they borrow money. They have the best security in the world and ought to be able to borrow money at a much lower rate. The farmers of Europe by a system of cooperation have been able to get money as low, if not lower, than business men. I would like to send a commission of farmers to Europe to study the subject with a view of applying it here. We sent a commission over there to study banking in a commercial sense, why not let the farmers have a commission of their own number to study rural or farmers' cooperative banks?

Mr. BATHRICK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. BATHRICK. The gentleman concedes that the passing of this resolution, with the assistance given officially to these gentlemen who propose to go abroad and discuss and investigate this subject at their own expense, is not going to do any harm, but may result in good.

Mr. NORRIS. That may be, and I shall not object, but I do not believe that the resolution will result in much good, for the several reasons that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has indicated, and that I have tried to point out myself. If we desire to study this question then we ought to provide in our resolution for a method of selection of the men who shall make up the commission, and provide that they shall make a report, and then we ought to pay them for their work. We ought not to confine the investigation to men who are wealthy enough to pay their own expenses.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in addition to what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has said, we have a great many consular representatives abroad. We have a number of general consular representatives and we have some commercial agents abroad, any one of whom is qualified to make a study of this subject. It is not so difficult to study, so far as that is concerned, as far as the facts are concerned. It is easy to ascertain the facts concerning these rural banks abroad. The difficulty is in applying those facts to the situation in our own country. I do not see how anybody can allow this resolution to pass and then object to similar legislation that may be asked by the ladies' sewing society or some other society anywhere throughout the land that wishes to send abroad members to study some particular subject, and asks Congress to pass a resolution granting or asking diplomatic courtesies to their delegates.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, can not these gentlemen go abroad without legislation?

Mr. MANN. They can not only go without legislation if they have the money, but they can obtain from the Secretary of State a special letter commending them to all of the diplomatic officials of the United States abroad, and thereby obtain an introduction with commendatory words to the respective administrative officers abroad.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that in line 7 on page 2 this resolution seeks to command the officers of foreign Governments.

Mr. MANN. It must be addressed to the administrative and executive officers abroad through the legislative branch of this country.

Mr. MOSS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, just a word, and then we will pass the matter, whether it be objected to or not. In regard to what the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has said, there will be no objection on my part, and I believe upon the part of no one associated with these men, to the Government of the United States appointing a commission and paying them salaries and their expenses, if the Government cares to do it. There are, however, a great many consular officers, as has been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], and other paid officials of the United States stationed abroad, and it seems to me this body of men has the right to be commended to their good offices as well as to similar courtesies upon the part of foreign Governments.

As regards the resolution referred to by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] there is this objection to that. The men who are behind this proposition are the pioneers who proposed this question of going abroad. It is they who have awakened public interest and have gotten to the point where there are at least 25 or 30 States willing to appoint delegates and pay their expenses. Naturally there are gentlemen who would like to get on the pay roll of the United States Government, and take advantage of the popularity that has been created on this particular subject. They propose that a commission shall be appointed to go abroad on a junket, having their expenses paid out of the Treasury of the United States as well as their salaries. It seems to me that is a very poor reason for objecting to this voluntary commission and for this attempt to prevent these gentlemen receiving the diplomatic courtesy of European Governments and the ordinary courtesy of the Congress of the United States. Gov. Wilson has truly said that it is difficult for the common people to be heard at Washington and that a few men are ready to act as guardians for the Nation, but I doubt if the governor anticipated that an objection would be made on the floor of this House to a recognition of a voluntary commission to go abroad at private expense, under the guidance and with the fellowship of a distinguished member of the British Parliament, to study a question of supreme importance to every citizen of the Nation.

THE SOUTHERN COMMERCIAL CONGRESS,
Southern Building, Washington, D. C.

THE AMERICAN COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO THE ORGANIZATION OF AGRICULTURAL BUSINESS IN EUROPE.

GENERAL INSTRUCTION TO THE COMMISSION.

The inquiry will embrace an examination of the methods employed by progressive agricultural communities in production and marketing and in the financing of both these operations.

Special note will be taken of—

First. The parts played, respectively, in the promotion of agriculture by the Governments and by voluntary organizations of the agricultural classes.

Second. The application of the cooperative system to agricultural production, distribution, and finance.

Third. The effect of cooperative action upon social conditions in rural communities.

Fourth. The relation of the cost of living to the business organization of the food-producing classes.

PRESIDENT TAFT'S ADDRESS.

He spoke as follows:

"In our workaday politics one sometimes gets just a little bit tired of the use of the term 'progressive' by gentlemen who make no progress except in its use for platform purposes, and therefore when you meet a man who has really made the progress for his people that we are all seeking he is entitled to our sincere tribute of respect.

"There is not anything that the Southern Commercial Congress has done that shows the sincerity of its purpose more than this honor to Sir Horace Plunkett. He has been engaged in a country in which the accumulations of mistaken legislation had produced such a condition that it needed almost the surgeon's knife to bring about a betterment, but the history of the land legislation of Ireland is one that now, with its successful result, we ought to study for the purpose of enabling us to see whether we can not take something from that experience to help us on.

"It is true they have no constitution in England or in Ireland that is written, and Parliament is absolute, and there were a good many things done with respect to land in Ireland that we could not do here under our Constitution, and that would not have been justified, except for the evils that had grown out of parliamentary legislation and of a misstatement—or a misunderstanding certainly—of the necessities of Ireland.

ACHIEVES GREAT SUCCESS.

"Now, Sir Horace Plunkett has worked in that field, and he has made a great success; and it is certain that the Southern Commercial Congress in looking to the improvement of the South, and the improvement of the agricultural methods, and the improvement of those methods with relation to the improvement of the people engaged in agriculture, has done something that can be of great assistance to them. Now, I came here to say that, and that only.

"The subject of credits, and the necessity for improving the method of the securing of better credit to the farmers, is one that I have discussed, taking much of it on credit, because I haven't had the personal experience that justifies me in speaking with any authority. The results that we have seen in Germany and in France and in other countries—doubtless in Ireland—make me think that we would be without our usual willingness to adapt everything good that we see unless we take up this subject, study it, as you propose to study it, through your commission, and then adapt it through the States, in so far as it may be adapted to our civilization and our people.

CONFRONTED BY NECESSITY.

"We used to think that we could not learn anything about agriculture from the other side; that we were so rich and that our crops were so big that really to look over to England, where they had to cultivate down to the last foot, was to do something that indicated a retrogression rather than a progression; but now we are reaching a point where we can calculate that unless we do something in the way of improving our methods of agriculture we shall be at a point where we shall have to import what we eat, and we shall become dependent on other countries, rather than to feel the independence which has swelled our heads to a point—sometimes I think to a point of danger. We have a great deal to learn, and I doubt not that from such authority as Sir Horace Plunkett we can learn a great deal.

"The South has a great deal to learn. She is learning. She is learning rapidly in her exchange of cotton for a diversified planting.

* * * I only came here to express, on behalf of the whole country, the pleasure we have in the presence of a gentleman who has shown by what he has done—not by what he has said—and by what he has brought about that he is a progressive.

JANUARY 20, 1913.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
Governor of New Jersey, Trenton, N. J.

DEAR GOV. WILSON: The Southern Commercial Congress, which initiated the proposed American commission to Europe upon agricultural credit, honored me with a dinner on Monday last, at which President Taft attended and spoke. The President had asked me to attend the conference of governors at the White House upon the same subject on December 7, but my ship was delayed in a storm and I could not be present. As I intimated to you at the interview you were kind enough to give me on the 21st instant, I was very skeptical as to any useful purpose being served by this costly project, and I feel that I ought now to tell you of certain changes in the original plan which have completely changed my judgment upon the matter.

That the system of credit prevailing in agricultural communities in this country is not all that it should be may be admitted, but it is equally certain that the entire business organization of the American farmers is in a deplorably backward condition. It may be generally stated that agriculture is the only important business occupation in this country which is unorganized, and until some progress has been made in applying what is now coming to be recognized as the obvious remedy—the introduction of cooperation—it is little use discussing the best kinds of credit system to meet the farmers' needs. In any case, the literature upon the subject is good and exhaustive. A few economists and financiers familiar with agricultural conditions could derive from this source far more light upon the American problem than is likely to be shed by the collective wisdom of the traveling commission.

I found that the leaders in the movement were altogether inclined to agree with this view. Before the dinner they agreed to change the scope of the proposed inquiry, and I send you herewith a copy of the instructions which will be given to the commission. At the dinner this document was adopted, and President Taft indorsed it.

My purpose in troubling you with this matter at such an extremely inconvenient time is that your Presidency will be seven weeks old before the commission starts for Europe on April 26. I think you will agree that if the issues which are now raised in the inclosed document are really well discussed by the commission a profound effect may be produced upon public opinion in regard to the place of agriculture in your national economy. In any case, I am certain that the mere raising of these issues in so public a manner will stir thought throughout the Union, which will have its influence upon legislation and administration affecting the production and distribution of the Nation's food. If you could see your way to write either to Senator FLETCHER, president of the Southern Commercial Congress, or to me, or both, a letter expressing your own personal approval of the enlarged inquiry, it would, I am sure, be extremely helpful to those who are anxious that some real benefits should accrue from all the labor which will be involved. I only mention myself in this connection because it might enable me to be more useful to the commission in Europe if I had this official recognition to strengthen my hand.

Believe me to be,

Very respectfully, yours, HORACE PLUNKETT.

P. S.—Address, 36 West Tenth Street, New York City.

Resolutions adopted by national organizations indorsing the American commission that is being assembled by the Southern Commercial Congress.

NATIONAL GRANGE.

Whereas the Department of State of the United States detailed, upon the application of the Southern Commercial Congress, David Lubin, American delegate to the International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, Italy, to direct a conference on agricultural finance held under the auspices of the Southern Commercial Congress in Nashville, Tenn., April 1 to 6; and

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES.

(Resolution will be forwarded later.)

FARMERS' EDUCATIONAL AND COOPERATIVE UNION OF AMERICA.

(Resolution will be forwarded later.)

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I dislike to object to anything that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MOSS] so urgently presses, because I have come to have great confidence in his judgment; but still on this occasion I feel the resolution is improper, and therefore I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

REFUND OF CORPORATION TAX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 27323) to provide for refund or abatement under certain conditions of penalty taxes imposed by section 38 of the act of August 5, 1909, known as the special excise corporation-tax law.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any corporation, joint-stock company, association, or any insurance company subject to the special excise tax provided by section 38 of the act of August 5, 1909, known as the special excise corporation-tax law, which has been or may be compelled to pay or become liable for any additional tax within the provisions of subsection 5 of said section 38, which additional tax has been or may hereafter be imposed for a neglect to file a return as provided in said corporation-tax law on or before the 1st of March of any year, may, within one year after the passage of this act, or within one year after the date of notice of assessment where such notice is given after the passage of this act, make application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for a refund of such additional tax. And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the advice and consent of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, is hereby directed to remit, abate, or pay back all such additional taxes in excess of $100 for any single year whenever in any case it appears to his satisfaction that the additional tax was assessed or imposed solely because of a neglect to make a return at the time or times specified in said act, and without any intention or design on the part of any officer of such corporation, joint-stock company, association, or insurance company to hinder or delay the United States in the collection of the tax originally assessed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have an explanation in regard to this bill. Is this bill retroactive at all?

Mr. BRANTLEY. To some extent.

Mr. SHERLEY. To what extent?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to state to the gentleman from Kentucky—and then I will yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY], the author of the bill, to answer any specific questions in reference to it—that this bill is designed to grant some relief from one of the very drastic penalties of the present corporation-tax law. It has the very cordial support of the Treasury Department, and has been unanimously reported by the Committee on Ways and Means after full hearing and investigation. It is a thoroughly meritorious measure. I will now yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. MCGILLICUDDY] to answer the specific questions of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MCGILLICUDDY. Mr. Speaker, under the provision of the act of August 5, 1909, as the House knows, a tax of 1 per cent on net incomes not exceeding $5,000 is assessed and collected. Now, under section 3 of that act it is provided that the return containing the information upon which the tax is assessed shall be made on or before the 1st day of March in every year. In section 5 it is provided that in cases of fraudulent intent, or of failure to file the return because of fraud, then an additional tax of 100 per cent of the original tax is assessed, and in case of mere neglect to file the return an additional tax of 50 per cent is assessed. And in addition to that, under section 8 of the act, it is provided wherever a refusal or neglect to file the return exists there shall be a fine of from $1,000 to $10,000. Now, the proposed bill does not alter or change the law in any respect affecting anybody except those persons who, through some inadvertence and without any intention whatever of evading or delaying the collection of the tax, have failed to file their return on the 1st day of March in each year.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MCGILLICUDDY. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then it is also the fact that people who are not liable to pay the tax by reason of not having the amount of income provided for are also penalized for failure to make the return.

Mr. MCGILLICUDDY. Precisely; that occurred in my State where a corporation did not earn anything in the way of net income, and as provided by the act they were subject not only to this original penalty but to the fine of section 8 in addition.

Now, as has been stated by the gentleman from Georgia, who reported the bill, this bill when it was introduced was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and by the chairman of that committee was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury for his suggestion, and I will read what he says in regard to it. This is under date December 20 last:

I am of opinion that the proposed bill, providing as it does for refund or abatement of all taxes or assessments over and above $100 in any individual case, accomplishes the desired purpose admirably by providing a punishment which, taken in connection with paragraph 9 of section 38 of the tariff act of August 5, 1909, will prove amply sufficient to insure the proper compliance with the provisions of this law and at the same time prevent the infliction of drastic punishment for simple neglect. The language of the proposed bill seems to be free from criticism, and I unqualifiedly recommend that the proposed measure be enacted into law.

Respectfully, FRANKLIN MACVEAGH, Secretary.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman pleases, I have read what the Secretary says, but I am not quite sure whether he is accurate, and he does not give me the information I desire. I would like to ask the gentleman how much refund there will be if this becomes the law?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. As near as can be ascertained, about $225,000.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman, secondly, whether he considers the language of the act as presented here limits the refund of assessments under section 5 or whether it does not permit at least a plausible contention for a refund for any other penalties under any other section of the excise act?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I think not.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like for the gentleman to look at it with that in mind, because I am not at all sure.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Well, this bill does not cover anything except the failure to make returns through mere neglect, and when it appears there was no intent or design to delay or in any way hinder the collection of the tax.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is just the question. The gentleman sees that. I call his attention to the fact that on page 1 of the bill it speaks there of the payment under subsection 5.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. From what line are you reading?

Mr. SHERLEY. Lines 8 and 9. There it refers to subsection 5 of the excise act, but when it comes to the refund with reference to any additional penalty, it is not any additional penalty because of the provisions of section 5. It seems to be very much broader than the Secretary's letter would indicate, or the gentleman's statement would indicate.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I think the bill was drawn very carefully with that in view, and it all refers back to subsection 5 of section 38.

Mr. SHERLEY. Let us see, if the gentleman will permit. It says:

And the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the advice and consent of the Solicitor of Internal Revenue, is hereby directed to remit, abate, or pay back all such additional taxes in excess of $100 for any single year.

Now, that does not seem to limit it to the excess taxes that were collected under the excise part of the act.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It limits it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does it necessarily? I think, in a matter of this kind, it ought not to be a matter of inference or doubt or construction to be put on the word "such." The gentleman's contention may be the right one, but——

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. But the only tax referred to, if you will permit, is the tax referred to in line 8, and that specifically refers to subsection 5, where it says, "Any such additional tax." It can not possibly refer to any other. There is no other tax to which it can refer.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a matter of considerable importance. It is rather an unusual bill to pass by unanimous consent at best, and I want to feel sure that it does not accomplish anything beyond what the gentleman states.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I am in hearty sympathy with what the gentleman has to say. If he can make the bill any better than it is, I shall be very glad to have it done.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The only thing that can be paid back in any event is the additional tax?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. And not all of that.

Mr. MANN. I understand. The additional taxes are the penalty for not making the return.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is not called a penalty. It is called "an additional tax."

Mr. MANN. I am calling it a "penalty." That is what it is.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is in effect; yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand you are not going to pay back in any event anything but what you designate as a "penalty," but you ought not to pay back the penalty except in a very limited number of cases, where the failures to make the returns are excusable.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. There is no provision to pay back any penalty.

Mr. SHERLEY. We are using the words "additional tax" and "penalty" in the same sense.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. It is hardly in the same sense in the original act. One is an additional tax assessed under section 5 and another is a penalty collected under section 8.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but there are several additional taxes, as I recall, under the various sections. There are three or four sections that call them "additional payments." Have you the excise law there?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes; I have the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will read the provisions that are set forth——

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Section 5 is the only provision involved. It says:

All returns shall be retained by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who shall make assessments thereon; and in case of any return made with false or fraudulent intent, he shall add 100 per cent of such tax; and in case of refusal or neglect to make a return or verify the same as aforesaid, he shall add 50 per cent of such taxes.

That is all this bill refers to. Now, under section 8, if the gentleman will follow it, there are penalties both for the intentional failure to file the return and for the refusal or neglect. That is the penalty. And in the next clause there is a further penalty of imprisonment in certain cases, with which this bill has nothing whatever to do. I am sure, if the gentleman will examine the bill, he will find it accomplishes all he has in mind.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am trying to do that, but from the way in which the gentleman brings up this bill I have to examine it on my feet or my remedy passes by. Now, as I understand, a penalty, where they simply neglect to make the return, is imposed to the extent of 50 per cent. That is an arbitrary amount.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. And where there has been a real intent to defraud it is 100 per cent.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. That is correct.

Mr. SHERLEY. If that be so, and you want to refund only those taxes which come about through neglect why use the language "when it appears to his satisfaction that the additional tax was assessed or imposed solely because of neglect"? There can be no discretion there. The amount of the tax will show whether it was done through neglect or through intent to defraud. Why not have the law limited to a refund in those cases where the additional tax was 50 per cent and exclude those cases where it was 100 per cent? Do you not here open up all of them?

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. You accomplish the same purpose in different language.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, here under the original law you let the very size of the tax determine the character of the fault, whereas in this bill you leave it to the discretion of the officials to determine in all cases under section 5 whether or not it was because of the one reason or the other.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. Not all cases, but simply in cases of neglect, where there was no intent to defraud.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but you leave it to the discretion of the official to determine what was the reason, whereas the size of the tax determines it better than his discretion.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I do not see how that can be.

Mr. SHERLEY. For instance, here are two men who have a certain tax return to make, of the same amount. One of them has an additional tax levied of $1,000, which is 100 per cent. The other has an additional tax levied of $500, because in his case the failure was due simply to neglect, whereas in the first man's case the failure was due to a desire to defraud. Now, you are not limiting the recovery to the case of one, but leaving it to the discretion of the official, where he may think the other fellow did it through neglect and order a remission of the tax. Now you have a certain rule. Why make it uncertain, in the discretion of the official?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the gentleman to the language of the bill, which permits the right to make application for a refund only in those cases where the 50 per cent additional tax is imposed for failure or neglect to file the returns.

Mr. SHERLEY. Where is the language to warrant that statement?

Mr. BRANTLEY. In lines 5 and 6 of page 2. He may "make application to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for a refund of such additional tax," which additional tax is referred to on the first page as the tax imposed under subsection 5 of section 38 for a neglect to file a return, and the whole bill deals only with the tax imposed for a neglect to make the return. Then, of course, when it comes before the Treasury Department on the application for a refund, the Treasury Department must have the right to inquire as to whether this is a mere case of neglect or not, and if they find it is——

Mr. SHERLEY. Why?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Because somebody must enforce the law.

Mr. SHERLEY. Ah, but that is just the point. The very provisions of the law separate the classes of cases, and there is no discretion given. There is an arbitrary additional tax of 50 per cent imposed when there is neglect only. Now, if that is the only case you are trying to reach, why not require, when the additional tax of 50 per cent has been added through neglect, that such tax shall be refunded?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that this is precisely what this bill does.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the gentleman's conclusion.

Mr. BRANTLEY. The honorable Secretary of the Treasury, who has carefully examined the bill, says the bill is admirably drawn.

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, the gentleman has been in Congress longer than I have been, and he knows how much credit to give to the recommendation of a Secretary in a matter that perhaps has never met his personal eye.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I want to say to the gentleman that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue——

Mr. SHERLEY. I would rather have the gentleman's opinion than that of either of those officials.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that perhaps he does not understand the application of the law in question. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue informs us that in the operation or enforcement of the present incorporation tax law he has had numerous complaints made, or applications made, for a refund of this 50 per cent additional tax upon the ground that the failure to file the returns promptly on March 1 was mere inadvertence or neglect, and therefore that the applicants ought not to be required to pay a penalty; that he found on construing the law that this 50 per cent is not imposed as a penalty, but that it is a tax—so the language of the law is—and no matter how well satisfied he might be that a clerk or agent has neglected to obey the order of the president of the corporation to file the tax returns, with no thought or purpose of evading the payment of the tax, that the additional amount must be exacted. In one case it was shown that the return was made out, and then a clerk put it in his desk and forgot to take it out.

Numerous cases of that kind have occurred; and yet no relief could be granted, because under the construction given the law the tax is mandatory.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have no issue with the gentleman as to the desirability of refunding in cases of that sort, but I have a very strong desire that the act shall be limited to just that kind of cases. The gentleman assures me that that is the fact, but I am not completely satisfied from the cursory reading of the bill, which I have had to give it on my feet, and I suggest to the gentleman, inasmuch as there is a classification made by the law itself, why leave it to a matter of construction? Why not simply in three of four lines provide that power is given for a refund of additional taxes of 50 per cent that were levied because of the failure on account of neglect? Then you exclude the other.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I think if the gentleman will study the language of the bill carefully he will see that that is what it does.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be, but we ought not to have any doubt about it.

Mr. BRANTLEY. If you limit it simply to cases where the tax is imposed in case of mere neglect, necessarily some officer has to say, when you make application for the refund, that that failure to make the return was a mere case of neglect.

Mr. SHERLEY. But there is a difference in the way the officer acts. In one case he is limited to the fact that the additional tax is 50 per cent. According to your bill he is limited in his discretion.

Mr. BRANTLEY. I do not think there is a member of the Committee on Ways and Means who does not sympathize with the purpose and wishes of the gentleman from Kentucky. I want to say to him that this bill was really very carefully considered by the committee. We did not stop with the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury. We invited a hearing; we had an oral hearing, and nearly every word of the language of this bill was criticized in the committee, and we reached the conclusion that it accomplished the identical result that the gentleman from Kentucky desires to accomplish.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have a very high opinion of the accuracy of the gentleman and his ability as a lawyer, and I shall not press my point to the extent of objecting to the consideration of the bill, but I have called the attention of the House to what seems to me to be a doubtful construction.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Has the gentleman in his mind the words that he thinks are essential to correct the bill?

Mr. SHERLEY. I think in three or four minutes I could draw the necessary amendment, but the gentleman is asking at my hands a rather unfair thing. I have been engaged in a running debate, and it is hard for me immediately to offer the language.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I hope the gentleman will disabuse his mind of the idea that I wanted to ask an unfair question.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; but what the gentleman asks is rather a severe test.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The particular case in which the gentleman from Kentucky said no one would object to the refund is a case that arose in my town. The clerk made the report and dropped it into his desk. The authorities of the corporation thought that it had been filed. They paid their tax 30 days before it matured, in fact.

Mr. SHERLEY. I indicated that I thought the law, in providing a refund where the additional tax of 50 per cent had been assessed, would be completely narrowed to cases such as the gentleman has stated.

Mr. SLAYDEN. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. McGILLICUDDY] is willing to do anything which is necessary in order to make the bill clear.

Mr. McGILLICUDDY. I am entirely willing to do anything that will make the bill as clear as possible to accomplish the purpose that we all agree upon. I think it does accomplish it as it now reads.

Mr. SHERLEY. I can not attempt on my feet to amend the bill. If I was going to amend it, I would strike it all out and rewrite it in about six lines.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have this bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to have this bill considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill for amendments.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BRANTLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PHILIPPINE HEMP INDUSTRY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House resolution 767, requesting from the President of the United States information concerning the exemption of American importers of manila hemp from payment of the export tax thereon.

The Clerk read the resolution with the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia whether the Ways and Means Committee reporting this resolution asking for the information of the President in regard to a tariff matter in regard to the effect on an industry growing out of the tariff, intends to get the advice of the present President or the next President; whether the present Ways and Means Committee desires the advice of President Taft about the effect of a tariff on an industry, or whether it is simply laying the foundation by the passage of this resolution to have the President elect when inaugurated make a report to the Committee on Ways and Means of the House on this subject?

Mr. BRANTLEY. Mr. Speaker, if my friend from Illinois will permit me to tell him why the resolution was reported I think that will answer his inquiry. It appears that the resolution, which is in courteous form, seeks certain information that it is very desirable to have. It is represented that the present tariff law imposes an export tax at Manila on all hemp exported from Manila, but provides that where such hemp is exported to the United States and is used and consumed in the United States there shall be a refund of a large proportion of this export tax.

Now, it is claimed that the effect of all this is that the manila hemp grower, being unable to know whether his hemp is going to be used and consumed in the United States, has to sell his hemp with the export tax on it, which tax he has to pay, and then that the importer in the United States gets the rebate. It is charged that this results in quite a concession to certain importers in the United States at the expense of the hemp growers in the Philippines.

The purpose of this resolution is to get at the facts, and it seems there is no place to get them except from the executive department of the Government. The information sought might be of material advantage, if furnished by the present Chief Executive, to the Ways and Means Committee in framing the hemp and flax schedule of the tariff.

Mr. MANN. There is now practically free trade between the Philippine Islands and the United States with reference to hemp.

Mr. BRANTLEY. On the exported hemp the grower pays the export tax.

Mr. MANN. I say there is practically free trade between the United States and Manila in hemp. Now, the gentleman proposes to pass a resolution and, not content with asking for the facts, he asks the President's advice to the House whether this free trade has operated unjustly, and also to what extent it has depressed the hemp industry. That is not a question of fact; it is a question of opinion, and a political opinion.

Mr. BRANTLEY. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois, if it be a fact that the present method of granting the rebate on these export taxes does not result in an injustice to the Manila and the Philippine hemp grower, does he not think that the present President of the United States ought to have the privilege of saying that it does not?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the present President of the United States desires any further opportunity to advise the Democratic House what it shall do on the tariff question, because the President is quite certain that if he gives you good advice you will sneer at him, and if he gives you bad advice you will take advantage of it.

Mr. BRANTLEY. But this is for the Filipinos.

Mr. MANN. It is a matter within the control of the Ways and Means Committee and a matter for Congress to legislate upon. If the gentleman desires the opinion of President Taft on the tariff, I will be glad to join with him in asking the President to give his opinion on free trade and protection as a tariff policy.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRANTLEY. I yield.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to suggest to my colleague, so far as the advice of the President is concerned, he has never yet given the Democratic House any good advice on the subject of tariff.

Mr. MANN. The trouble is that the Democrats have not followed his good advice, though they will wish some day that they had.

Mr. BARTLETT. I think he rather wishes now that he had not given it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

PAY OF OFFICERS IN THE NAVY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25715) providing that officers of the Navy be allowed pay from the dates they take rank.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all officers of the Navy who, since the 3d day of March, 1899, have been advanced or may hereafter be advanced in grade or rank pursuant to law shall be allowed the pay and allowances of the higher grade or rank from the dates stated in their commissions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand this simply proposes to grant back pay to officers of the Navy who were not confirmed for some time after they were nominated, according to the additional grade they received, from the time they were nominated up to the time of confirmation.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. How much is involved?

Mr. HOBSON. It involves in the neighborhood of $20,000, according to the estimate of the Paymaster General.

Mr. MANN. Are not these officers of the Navy who receive their promotions quite satisfied at the time they receive them, without coming in and asking Congress to pay back pay for 12 or 13 years back?

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, of course the gentleman realizes that an officer is always glad to have a promotion. There is a term they call that kind of a promotion—a jackass promotion—one which does not give the officer any pay with his advancement. They like to have even jackass promotions. But I will say to the gentleman that this is simply a matter of justice. Those officers when promoted perform the duties of the higher grade, and the intention of the law originally was to give them pay from the date of their commission; and, in fact, the law ran from 1874 until 1899 with that interpretation. This is simply to overcome a construction given to it by a particular Comptroller of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have great admiration for the officers of the Army and Navy at all times. It is unfortunate, perhaps, for the Government that in time of peace many of them are not very busy and some of them lie awake nights or spend some time of the day finding out new methods of trying to increase pay. They were the ones who wanted the personnel bill of 1899 passed. They were the ones who urged Congress to pass the bill which gives them promotions more than they would have had before.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, this has nothing to do with the personnel bill of 1899. This has nothing to do with officers who have been promoted by law—that is, special promotions. This is simply in the ordinary routine of business. Sometimes the Senate is in session and sometimes it is not. Nearly all of the officers of the Navy get their pay from the date of their commission, but it happens that a certain comptroller ruled that in the process of promotions of certain young officers the law did not permit them to be paid from the date of their commissions, but that their pay should not begin till the date of confirmation by the Senate, which is an uncertain matter. It is only these few exceptional cases that this bill deals with.

Mr. MANN. What is the date of the commission?

Mr. HOBSON. It varies, of course. It is the date when they are advanced.

Mr. MANN. What is the date of the commission as related to nomination and confirmation?

Mr. HOBSON. In some cases the date is established by law. Take ensigns, for instance, to which this bill applies. Ensigns' commissions are dated now from the 1st day of July of the year of graduation from Annapolis. Formerly they were dated two years from that time. The pay of an assistant civil engineer will run from the time that the President issues the commission, irrespective of any other antecedents. It dates from the day the President signs it. That is not fixed by law. He begins his duties on that day. The Senate may confirm it immediately or the Senate may not be in session, and it may be a long time before it is confirmed, but the officer will be subject to orders and will perform the duties of the office from the date of his commission. In all other cases except these pay begins with the date of commission when they begin the duties of their office, and not later, when the Senate confirms them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not answered my question, which I asked for information. Where the President nominates an officer for promotion and that nomination is not confirmed for some time, what date does the commission bear?

Mr. HOBSON. It bears the date of the vacancy in some cases, as pointed out above, and in all cases the date of the issuance of the commission by the President. The commission bears the date when the duties begin even though the President may be a few days late in issuing it. His practice is to have the date that of the date of the existence of the vacancy to which the promotion is made.

Mr. MANN. Regardless of when the nomination is confirmed?

Mr. HOBSON. Regardless of the confirmation, and this only asks that those officers who have come under this exception shall be treated as all other officers and get their pay from the day on which they are promoted.

Mr. MANN. It is a case of a man having received a basket full of good things and kicks because he loses one cherry and thinks he ought to have it.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman in some cases may be correct, but in this specific case he is not, and I will give an illustration: There is a difference, say, between Members here who are continued from one Congress to the next and those who come in fresh. Suppose that Congress, not assembling until December, the Sergeant at Arms should determine that those who pass from the old Congress to the new should receive their pay from the 4th of March, and those who came in new should not receive their pay until they were finally sworn in. It is exactly analogous to this.

Mr. MANN. Why, no; I will give the gentleman the analogy. Suppose the Members who were elected last fall, who are not new Members of Congress, should say their commissions should date practically from the day of election and they should be paid from that date, not from the date that they were sworn in. That is the analogy.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman is very much mistaken.

Mr. MANN. That is the exact analogy.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman is very much mistaken. The pay of the older Members only begins the 4th of March. Now, all they ask is that the new Members shall begin at the same time when the new Members assume the responsibility and duties of the office on the 4th of March. All of these officers who fall under this exception did assume the duties of their office, and they ought to begin to receive their pay from such date of commission. It is analogous to the 4th of March for a new Member. The gentleman's ideas might apply to other cases, but they do not apply to this specific case.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the gentleman for information, suppose the Senate for any particular cause does not confirm?

Mr. HOBSON. The officer is not promoted, and if his place is taken by another in the lower rank and he is not confirmed in the higher grade, then he would be dropped from the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. No; I mean before the promotion he is drawing a certain salary, and then the President appoints him to a particular place——

Mr. MANN. He is not expelled from the Navy, because if they did there would be a great many out of the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, suppose he is not confirmed by the Senate. If this bill were passed, would he be drawing another salary in the meantime?

Mr. HOBSON. He would be drawing the salary from the date of his commission when he assumed the duties. Now, then, when he went up to that place his place would be taken in the lower grade by another officer, and when the appointment of the lower grade is confirmed by the Senate and the officer moving to the higher grade is not confirmed by the Senate when the time comes for that officer to be passed up, and he has never been confirmed by the Senate, he will be practically without any position. He could not go back to the lower grade.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman has not quite taken the illustration I want to make. I am not speaking of the man who comes up and takes his place, but what I want to know is, would he draw the salary for the promotion that he eventually would not get, as a matter of fact, in case the Senate failed to confirm him?

Mr. HOBSON. I do not think a case like that ever came up.

Mr. MANN. They would have to go over that as a matter of bookkeeping.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume it is liable to occur now, as there are a great many confirmations that are liable to fail in the Senate. What I want to know is, when the President promotes a man would he then be entitled to pay, if this bill passes, from the date the President promoted him?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes, if finally confirmed; all the others do now, and those carried by this bill would also.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose that promotion was not confirmed. It might be a year even before the Senate acted, or several months. In the meantime he has been drawing the salary.

Mr. HOBSON. I think the gentleman will find that if the Senate votes adversely on a nomination for promotion the officer goes back to his original grade, provided his position in the lower grade has not been filled by nomination and confirmation.

And then, if the Senate continued to decline to confirm, it would simply legislate the officer from the Navy.

Mr. NORRIS. It would not legislate him out of the Navy. He would still have his old position, would he not?

Mr. HOBSON. Well, if his position in the lower grade had been filled by another, there would not be any position for him.

Mr. MANN. What becomes of him?

Mr. HOBSON. The comptroller would then decline to pay his salary. I do not believe that has ever occurred. The President could wait for confirmation before sending in a nomination to fill the lower grade.

Mr. MANN. Suppose a man gets a recess appointment during the long vacation of Congress and his nomination is not confirmed. He may be nominated, say, to one of the admirals' positions. That is a matter of grace and not of rank. Does the gentleman mean to say that he does not draw pay of the lower rank?

Mr. HOBSON. He draws pay of the higher rank under existing law until the Senate acts. If it acts adversely, then the pay of the higher grade ceases forthwith.

Mr. MANN. If the nomination is not confirmed, he goes back, of course. There are a large number of nominations, as we know from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pending confirmation in the Senate now. In my talk with people in Washington and meeting naval officers, I have heard considerable anxiety expressed as to whether they be confirmed, but I have not heard anybody stand on the question of whether he would receive the salary of the old rank or the new rank for the course of a few weeks' time. They are all willing to take the confirmation and the commission and pay from the date of the confirmation.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman refers to the cases in the Senate, and I am glad he cites those because they are in point. The officers he meets and those now before the Senate need have no anxiety as to the pay. That is provided for by law. The law of 1874 reads as follows:

> That on and after the passage of this act any officer of the Navy who may be promoted in course to fill the vacancy in the next higher grade shall be entitled to the pay of the grade to which promoted from the date he takes rank therein, if it be subsequent to the vacancy he is appointed to fill.

And the date he takes rank therein is the date of his commission. The President can issue a temporary commission—a gunboat commission—pending action by the Senate, but, of course, the President can not actually issue or hand the final commission to the officer until the Senate has confirmed him. But when the Senate does confirm the date of the commission is made the date of the vacancy, and the pay of the officer in the higher grade begins under the law at the date specified in the commission. If confirmation were never made, the pay of the higher grade would still be legal till the date of the Senate's refusal. All that is asked in this bill is that the law be made uniform, that these exceptions that have been made contrary to the intent of the law be removed, and these officers, in the name of right and justice, be included under the law. They have done the work of the advanced position. It is the practice of our Government, and of all Governments, that officers promoted should receive the pay of the higher grade from the date of promotion, the date of their commission, the date when they actually begin to do the duties of the higher grade.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is an authority on this subject, and I would like to propound a conundrum to him. Suppose one of these Army or Navy officers now under nomination and not yet confirmed in the Senate becomes of a retiring age before the confirmation is made, is the man retired at the higher rank or the lower rank?

Mr. HOBSON. I believe that the gentleman from Illinois knows perfectly well that he never finally attains the higher rank until confirmed by the Senate, and that the law for retirement is mandatory, and that he would retire on attaining the age limit of the law, and consequently, if not confirmed by the Senate before that age, would never receive the pay or the rank of the higher grade.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is very positive, perhaps, that he is right; but it is a matter that is not settled in the Army and Navy circles yet, because they have such cases now, and they are very much exercised over them.

Mr. HOBSON. May I ask the gentleman if it has been his intention all the time to object to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. It has been my intention, unless the gentleman could remove the objection I had to it.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman really has an objection, I will try to remove it.

Mr. MANN. I had thought I had indicated the objection I had. The gentleman and I do not seem to agree upon the proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I will have to object, Mr. Speaker.

AERODYNAMICAL LABORATORY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 27992) to authorize the creation of a temporary commission to investigate and make recommendation as to the necessity or desirability of establishing a national aerodynamical laboratory, and prescribing the duties of said commission, and providing for the expenses thereof.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the action of the President in creating a temporary commission, consisting of Dr. R. S. Woodward, president Carnegie Institute of Washington, chairman; Charles D. Walcott, Smithsonian Institute, secretary; Dr. S. W. Stratton, Director United States Bureau of Standards; Prof. William J. Humphreys, consulting physicist, United States Weather Bureau; Brig. Gen. James Allen, United States Army, Chief Signal Officer; Maj. Samuel Reber, chief signal officer, eastern district; Capt. W. I. Chambers, United States Navy, in charge of aviation, United States Navy; Naval Constructor David W. Taylor, United States Navy; M. B. Sellers, technical committee, Aeronautical Society of New York; Henry A. Wise Wood, scientific engineer, vice president Aero Club of America; Bion J. Arnold, scientific engineer, Aero Club of Chicago; Prof. W. F. Durand, scientific engineer, Leland Stanford University; Prof. Richard MacLaurens, president Massachusetts Institute of Technology; Charles M. Manley; Harold H. Sewall; Herbert Parsons; Col. Frederick H. Smith; Hon. Frank West Rollins; and Dr. A. F. Zahm, secretary Aero Club of Washington, to consider and to make recommendation at the earliest practicable date on the necessity or desirability of establishing a national aerodynamical laboratory be, and the same is hereby, confirmed; said commission shall be composed of not to exceed 19 members. It shall have a stenographer and such other assistants as said commission may authorize.

The members shall each be paid their actual expenses in going to and returning from Washington when necessary to attend meetings, and actual expenses while attending the same.

Said commision shall diligently inquire into the desirability or necessity of establishing a national aerodynamical laboratory, and shall at the earliest practicable date report to Congress its recommendations, together with such facts as it may have ascertained.

SEC. 2. That to meet the expenses made necessary by this act the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated from any moneys not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 3. That said commission shall make its report at the earliest practicable date, not later than the 4th day of March, 1913, and shall at the filing of said report cease to exist.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves the right to object.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], is this commission now doing business at all?

Mr. HOBSON. It is.

Mr. MANN. Who is here attending it?

Mr. HOBSON. Nearly all the members, I understand, are here.

Mr. MANN. There are quite a number of members that I know who are not here, and who have not been here. I do not know what they are doing in connection with it. I wondered who has charge and who is doing the work here.

Mr. HOBSON. I have not made a roll call of them. Capt. Chambers is in charge. He informed me on Saturday that the commission was proceeding and hoping to be able to make its report before the 4th of March.

Mr. MANN. Are they having any meetings?

Mr. HOBSON. They are having meetings daily, morning and afternoon, I understand.

Mr. MANN. What do they need an appropriation for?

Mr. HOBSON. To pay the necessary expenses of their members.

Mr. MANN. What expenses can there be? Capt. Chambers already has a stenographer at his beck and call, has he not?

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman understands that they are receiving the hospitality of the Carnegie Foundation here, and are using its hall. There is no expense for the hall. If the gentleman will read section 2 he will find——

Mr. MANN. I have just read it. I have referred to it.

Mr. HOBSON. It covers the necessary expenses of the commission. I will say to the gentleman that there are no salaries. They are not paid for their time, and the money will be used chiefly to pay their traveling expenses from their homes to Washington and their hotel bills while in Washington.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course most of these officers are in Washington.

Mr. HOBSON. And there will be none for those who are.

Mr. MANN. Here is a proposition to have a report submitted to Congress in a month's time. Of course 20 or 30 gentlemen, or whatever may be the number of them—whether 19 or otherwise—holding meetings on the subject of aeroplanes and air navigation and air experimentation, will not get together on anything unless somebody has it prepared for them. I supposed Capt. Chambers had it all worked out. Why not get Capt. Chambers's views?

Mr. HOBSON. We have his views.

Mr. MANN. Why, then, this commission?

Mr. HOBSON. We believe that, competent as Capt. Chambers is in such matters, the advice of 18 other experts in such matters, in private and official life, would add to the value of such a report.

Mr. MANN. What authority had the President for appointing this commission?

Mr. HOBSON. None.

Mr. MANN. Do we not have a law forbidding it to be done?

Mr. HOBSON. We did enact such a law, and that is the reason why it is necessary to pass this law, if the commission——

Mr. MANN. And the President, having violated the law——

Mr. HOBSON. I am not going to be put in the position of saying the President violated the law.

Mr. MANN. That was the law.

Mr. HOBSON. The President did not violate that law or any other law that I know of; but the President could not pay the expenses of the commission unless it was confirmed or authorized by law. The President, I take it, could appoint any gentlemen he pleased on a nonofficial commission, and if they desired they could assemble in Washington and make a report; but the President could not defray their expenses, and the commission would not have the standing and dignity of an official commission unless it received the sanction of such a bill as this.

Mr. MANN. I suppose the President can ask Bill Jones or anybody else for an opinion on any question, but I think that the President has not the power to appoint an official commission without the authority of Congress.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman must understand that this commission is not official unless this bill or some such bill is passed.

Mr. MANN. We have in the Army men working on aviation——

Mr. HOBSON. Not very many——

Mr. MANN. Not as many as I would like to have, and we have men in the Navy working on aviation.

Mr. HOBSON. This will get more.

Mr. MANN. I supposed that is what it is for.

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. In advance, as the gentleman says, of any report of any commission or authority to do it.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman is as omniscient as any man I know, but in aerodynamics even the most learned of all are in a realm that requires careful and scientific investigation.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman scolds me because I agree with him that there should be more men working on this subject. The gentleman said we needed more men. Therefore, following him for once at least I said, "I am ready to give more men without waiting for the report of the commission." Then the gentleman lectured me because I did not want to wait until the commission was appointed.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will listen to me a little longer, I will explain to him that this commission would make the development and expansion of aerodynamics regular and consecutive and effective, and under it we could proceed then with this aerodynamic laboratory as the nations abroad have done, and it would be more economical and more efficient than simply having to appoint more officers and detail them at random to this duty.

Mr. MANN. Now, let us see. If this commission should be appointed, this bill having been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, I take it that the report of that commission when made might naturally be sent to the distinguished committee which reported in favor of the bill, thereby conferring upon the Committee on Naval Affairs practically exclusive jurisdiction of the subject of air navigation in the House. Is that one of the purposes of the bill?

Mr. HOBSON. I disagree with the gentleman. I do not think he really thinks that.

Mr. MANN. Certainly, I really think that. That would probably be the result.

Mr. HOBSON. That the report of this commission would give the Naval Committee exclusive jurisdiction of aerodynamics?

Mr. MANN. Oh, exclusive jurisdiction of this subject of an aerodynamic laboratory.

Mr. HELM. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Alabama a question.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] will excuse me for a moment, I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman from Illinois will excuse me long enough to listen to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky——

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. HELM. Does the Army appropriation bill carry an appropriation of about $175,000 for aeroplane purposes?

Mr. MANN. It carries $100,000.

Mr. HELM. I thought it was a total of $175,000—an appropriation of $100,000 and an unexpended balance of about $75,000.

Mr. MANN. No.

Mr. HELM. Remaining from the former bill.

Mr. HOBSON. The total appropriation of the United States Government to date for this purpose, exclusive of the present Army and Navy bills, is only $140,000, while the appropriations abroad to the same date are as follows: France, $7,400,000; Russia, $5,000,000; Germany, $2,250,000; Great Britain, $2,100,000; Italy, $210,000; and Japan, $600,000.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation in the Army bill for aeroplanes is $100,000.

Mr. HAY. In the current bill it is $125,000.

Mr. MANN. It is included in the appropriation for the signal service.

Mr. HAY. And we appropriated $125,000 for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. I thought it was $100,000.

Mr. HAY. It was last year, but this year it was made $125,000.

Mr. HELM. Did you not also carry over an unexpended balance of $60,000 or $65,000?

Mr. HAY. Oh, no.

Mr. HOBSON. This commission has the head of the Signal Corps as one of its members, and the Navy seeks no preponderance or priority of authority.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is familiar with the reports that have already been made from some of the committee of the House, possibly not for an aerodynamic laboratory, but for something along the same line, at once place in Ohio and one place, I believe, in the South.

Mr. HOBSON. I do not think those are questions of pending legislation.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. I thought the experimental place in Texas was a matter of assignment by the War Department.

Mr. MANN. There are bills on the subject in the House.

Mr. HOBSON. I do not say there are not.

Mr. MANN. Bills which have been reported.

Mr. HOBSON. I have not seen them.

Mr. MANN. There are reported bills on the subject in the House. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] has been very much interested in the subject. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has been very much interested. He has had a bill on the subject for some plant at some place in the South.

Mr. HOBSON. I have heard no objection, in the hearings before our committee or elsewhere, to having a central aerodynamical laboratory similar to the ones they have in other countries—in France, England, Italy, and Germany—where they have found them absolutely necessary for the development of the art of aviation and aerostatics. As far as I know, no objection to this bill has been made by Members of Congress or others interested in establishing stations in other places.

On the contrary, there is the most cordial concurrence by those in civil life with the military and naval authorities over this bill. Abroad several aerodynamic laboratories have been established where the expense was met and defrayed partially by the Government and partially by private citizens. I have been unofficially informed that as soon as this Government gives proper encouragement to the movement in this country there are many citizens of this country who are prepared to give the same kind of cooperation in defraying expenses that has been made abroad.

I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that there is probably no department of modern knowledge and scientific progress that is more important than this department. There is none in which the experimentation is as important or as necessary as this. It took many, many decades of experimenting to determine the constants for the formulæ used in navigation of the water, and water navigation is not yet beyond the realm of experimentation. It will require the most careful scientific experimentation to get the corresponding constants for formulæ for navigation of the air. Such experimentation as this commission would promote is necessary for the proper development of the art and science of this navigation, both for commercial purposes and the purpose of defense, in which we have already fallen behind the rest of the world.

Mr. FOSTER. I want to say that I am not opposing the establishment of this laboratory, but it seems to me that it is useless to appoint a commission to determine whether we ought to establish it. Now, I know that the gentleman's knowledge of naval affairs is great and that his advice is good. I am always glad to listen to him on these subjects. But it seems to me that if it is necessary, and the gentleman shows by the report here that the establishment of this laboratory in foreign countries has been had and what good work is being done there, in the light of that it seems to me useless to have a commission to determine whether we ought to establish a laboratory. I might agree with the gentleman if he would bring in a bill to establish a laboratory.

Mr. HOBSON. I will say to the gentleman that a bill will be brought in before long for that purpose; but I want to say to the gentleman that the authority of the commission, the nature of its report, and all those questions raised by the gentleman were gone into by the Naval Committee, and the gentleman will find that while the bill does not direct the committee to make a general investigation of the subject of the aerodynamic laboratory, it does call upon them to report recommendations, with such facts as they have ascertained, and their report will not be simply that the Government ought to establish an aerodynamic laboratory, but it will go further. The report will embody the plans for such a laboratory carefully formulated, with such information as they have gathered from the rest of the world, and the plan will embody the opinions of experts from all parts of the country and we will have this valuable result at practically no cost for their services.

We are getting the services of 19 men of the highest achievement in that science practically free. All we are asked to do, when they are doing the work for the Government as a labor of love, is to dignify them by making it an official commission, defraying their necessary traveling and hotel expenses. If we report that, I can assure the gentleman from Illinois that it will not be merely a question of reporting whether we ought or ought not to have such a laboratory, and that I am sure he himself will be much gratified and fully satisfied with the nature of their report. After that report we will bring in a bill based upon the information which has been gathered by the 19 members and their joint conclusions and plans, to establish a proper aerodynamic laboratory in Washington for the use of the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps and the use of civilians and for all those interested in the art and science generally. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will not persist in his objection.

Mr. MANN. What will be the line of work of this aerodynamic laboratory if established?

Mr. HOBSON. I can tell the gentleman that, in my judgment, it will be largely the same line of experimentation that was made in the development in the art of navigation at sea, only they will be dealing with a gas instead of a liquid; but they will have to get similar constants for the various formulæ, which they can only get by systematic investigations. I could go into detail and tell you about the question of thrust and the question of friction, involving the pitch, shape, area of the propellers, the lifting power, working area, obliquity, shape of planes, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. That is what we want to hear about. The gentleman says he can, but can he?

Mr. HOBSON. I think I can.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. I object.

AMENDING GENERAL PENSION LAW.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 28093) to amend the general pension act of May 11, 1912.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL], the author of this bill, is compelled to be away to-day. He requested that I ask unanimous consent that the bill might go over until another day.

Mr. MANN. Why should not we pass it now?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, let us have the bill read, and then we will see if anybody objects to it. I do not believe there is any objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the general pension act of May 11, 1912, is hereby amended by striking out section 5 and adding in lieu thereof a new section, so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Pensions, as each application for pension filed under this act is adjudicated, to cause to be kept a record showing the name, length of service, and age of each claimant, the monthly rate of payment granted to or received by him, and the county and State of his residence; and shall at the end of the fiscal year 1914 tabulate the records so obtained by States and counties, and to furnish certified copies thereof upon demand and payment of such fee therefor as is provided by law for certified copies of records in the executive departments; and that further increase of rate under this act on account of advancing age shall be made without further application by pensioner and shall take effect and commence from the date he is shown by the aforesaid record to have attained the age provided by this act as a basis of rating: Provided, That where a claim has been heretofore adjudicated and the record therein does not sufficiently establish the date of birth of the soldier or sailor pensioner nothing herein shall prevent such further investigation as is deemed necessary, in order to establish a record upon which future increases of rate under this act, on account of advancing age, may be possible, the object being to advance automatically the rate of pension, as provided for by this act, without unnecessary expense to the pensioner."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois for a little information about this bill. I could not get the entire purport of it from the reading of the Clerk. It says something about automatic increases of pensions.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, for instance, a soldier is 66 years old. He gets his pension based upon that age, for his service, whatever it may have been. The record shows and it has been established that his age be 66. This bill provides that when he becomes 70 years of age he gets an increase given to him automatically without his going through all the form of an affidavit and a formal application.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit. I think the matter is very well stated in a letter sent by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] to the Interior Department, and a reply to that letter. He stated:

It has always occurred to me that the increase of pensions by reason of age ought to be allowed automatically, but I realize that your department can not, without much additional work in preparing lists, tell when the increase should begin, but I can see no necessity for formal applications when all the necessary proof is already on file. Many old soldiers are poor, afflicted, and many miles from a notary public, and if a written notice was sufficient it would save them much trouble and expense and often avoid delay.

Thereupon the department prepared a memorandum which went into this bill, for the purpose of obtaining and retaining—which they get in the ordinary course—the addresses of these soldiers. Under this bill as they grow older, and as age allows an increase of pension, it is allowed to them without their being required to file an application for an increase.

Mr. FOSTER. When we passed the bill in 1908 all of the widows' pensions were increased automaticaly, and this simply provides that the increase shall be done in that way.

Mr. MANN. On account of age.

Mr. FOSTER. On account of age and nothing more.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, both gentlemen from Illinois, like Plato, reason well.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, as it is on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Illinois have any objection to a short amendment being offered to the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to that. The gentleman has the right to offer his amendment. I could not prevent that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk again read the bill.

Mr. RODDENBERY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 12, after the semicolon following the word "residence," by inserting the following:

"And upon inquiry and ascertainment first made by the commissioner a record showing and designating the names and addresses and salaries or pay of all claimants who are in the employment in any department or branch of the Government service at a rate of pay or salary in excess of $1,000 per annum."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Georgia.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RODDENBERY) there were—ayes 15, nays 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FOSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER, MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the city of Minneapolis, in the county of Hennepin and State of Minnesota, a municipal corporation organized under the laws of the State of Minnesota, be, and it is hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Mississippi River from Third Avenue south, near its intersection with First Street south on the west side of said river, to the intersection of Second Street and First Avenue southeast, on the east side of said river, in the city of Minneapolis, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The Clerk read the committee amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 1 after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the time for commencing and completing the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved January 27, 1910, as amended by the act approved January 27, 1912, to be built across the Mississippi River from Third Avenue south to First Avenue southeast, in the city of Minneapolis, Minn., is hereby extended to one year and three years, respectively, from date of approval hereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at Minneapolis, Minn."

Marie Railway Co. and the Water Works Park, across the river to the intersection of Thirty-seventh Avenue northeast, if extended, with the river south of the pumping station, in such a manner as not to impede or hinder navigation in said river at the location above stated, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSOURI RIVER IN NORTH DAKOTA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 27879) providing authority for the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in section 36, township 134 north, range 79 west, in the State of North Dakota.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Unanimous Consent Calendar in another place.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will strike it off where it appears at another place.

PUBLICITY IN TAKING EVIDENCE UNDER THE SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 8000) providing for publicity in taking evidence under the act of July 2, 1890.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the taking of depositions of witnesses for use in any suit in equity brought by the United States under the act entitled "An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies," approved July 2, 1890, and in the hearings before any examiner or special master appointed to take testimony therein, the proceedings shall be open to the public as freely as are trials in open court; and no order excluding the public from attendance on any such proceedings shall be valid or enforceable.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it seems to me, I will say to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], that the Supreme Court having recently made some rulings which very much reformed the procedure in court, that it is a matter of doubtful propriety for us to try to enact a new rule right following that.

I would like to encourage the Supreme Court to make rules all along the line of procedure and provide a rule that would not only prevent depositions under the trust law being secret, but prevent the taking of any depositions in secret.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to say to the gentleman that I agree fully with what he says, but there are reasons that I think will appeal to the gentleman why this law should be passed as affecting the so-called Sherman antitrust law that do not apply to cases generally. As he knows, it is the universal rule—I presume there has been no exception to it—that in every case commenced under that act the evidence is always taken by a master, because it is scattered over the country, and he goes around from place to place and takes the evidence, and he is a good while taking it. And the ordinary case that as a rule is heard in court is somewhat different. Almost universally in these cases practically all of the evidence is taken by the master and taken at various places. The Attorney General tells me that in this particular case where the question was raised in Boston it was the first time it ever had been raised. Everybody supposed, or at least the department did, that the taking of the testimony by the master must be taken in public the same as in open court. He also tells me that in these cases he has never known an exception to this rule; that at various times the publicity that is given to the taking of the evidence as the case progresses, it usually taking several months to take the evidence—he, on account of such publicity, gets additional evidence that he is able to offer in the case before the case is finally closed. Now, the evidence taken in this way in the aggregate constitutes hundreds and sometimes thousands of pages, so that when it gets into court, if this should be secret until that time, it means it always will be secret, because it is too great and voluminous for any attention to be paid to it by anyone.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt whatever in my own mind, so far as the United States courts are concerned, that all evidence ought to be taken in public. They do not try divorce cases or things of that sort. But here is a proposition to have Congress immediately after the making of equity rules by the Supreme Court provide that in a certain class of cases evidence shall be public.

Mr. NORRIS. The equity rules of the Supreme Court do not apply here.

Mr. MANN. I understand they do not cover this; thereby giving the impression to the courts and masters that the taking of evidence in other cases may properly be in secret. I think if the Supreme Court has its attention directed to the case the gentleman speaks of, or any case on the subject, that the court will make a rule permitting the taking of testimony by any master or examiner in secret, which would be far better, in my judgment, than enacting this into law.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that I think he readily concedes that there is a reason, as I have, in my weak way, tried to give, for the enactment of this law as applied to these cases, that does not apply to the ordinary case.

Mr. MANN. No; I do not see any reason that does not apply to the ordinary case.

Mr. NORRIS. The reason is——

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman's reasoning is good. I do not wish the gentleman to misunderstand me. And I think it is also good on other occasions.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any other class of cases that I know of where it is the almost universal rule that all the evidence is taken by a master or a traveling court. Most of this evidence in the ordinary case is taken in open court.

Mr. MANN. On the contrary, the bulk of the testimony in all of the interstate cases is taken by the master and not taken in open court.

Mr. NORRIS. I presume the cases the gentleman refers to are cases under this Sherman antitrust act.

Mr. MANN. Certainly not. They are cases in which the Interstate Commerce Commission is interested, and have nothing to do with the Sherman antitrust cases, and there are many cases in which not only the Government is interested, and other parties interested, and are now tried where the bulk of the testimony is taken by deposition, although the court in recent rulings endeavors to have as much testimony taken in open court as possible. But take one of the railroad cases involving rates of fare, and I do not want to give the masters or examiners the impression that they can take that testimony in secret.

Mr. NORRIS. And I do not either, I will say to the gentleman. But let us now consider it just for a moment. It is conceded by everybody that there are some cases that arise in court where there are reasons why the evidence should be taken in secret.

Mr. MANN. What kind of a case? I do not concede anything of the kind in any case that comes before the United States court.

Mr. NORRIS. There are hundreds of men who claim it, for instance, in cases, as it was referred to in this particular case I had reference to up in Massachusetts, where the object of the case is to obtain secrecy and the publication of the evidence would absolutely nullify the judgment that somebody is seeking in the court. And there are other cases where the evidence might be immoral and indecent, or something of that kind, where the court, for that reason, might order it taken in secret, but none of these reasons exist in cases brought by the Government under the Sherman antitrust act, and this bill applies only to such cases.

The exceptions are very few; I admit it. But if we made this law general we would not be able to get it passed, because there are exceptions that ought to exist.

Mr. MANN. Is not that a very good reason, then, why it ought to be handled by the Supreme Court in making its rules, so that it can provide for the exceptions?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Supreme Court had such rules with regard to evidence taken in such cases, that would be well. I can not speak with authority on that subject, but, in my judgment, in this particular case, where the court ordered the evidence to be taken in secret, it means that the United States Government will go no further in the case.

Mr. MANN. I do not know what the case is, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. NORRIS. It is a denial of justice.

Mr. KENDALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KENDALL. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to suggest that the Supreme Court had recently promulgated certain rules covering the practice, but their rules were not inclusive of this case?

Mr. MANN. That is what I said.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman also advanced the idea that if an abuse of this sort occurred the court might correct it. I assume it is the inferior court the gentleman has reference to?

Mr. MANN. No; the Supreme Court.

Mr. KENDALL. The rules of the Supreme Court were promulgated after this Massachusetts case?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That may be true. They may have been promulgated after that. They were prepared, I understand, before this question arose.

Mr. KENDALL. In this Massachusetts case, on complaint, I suppose, of the Attorney General, or the law officer of the Department of Justice, an appeal was made to the court to direct the master to order an open hearing, and the court, after very careful deliberation, approved entirely the action of the master.

Mr. MANN. It may be the court was right. I do not know.

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman can conceive of a case.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not contending that the court was wrong as a matter of law. I do not believe the Government could get that order reversed if it tried to. I have read the proceedings, and there was very little of it on either side. I think it was conceded by both sides that it was a matter in which the court had the discretionary right to say either way, and if this bill is not passed the court can provide that a hearing shall be secret, and the Supreme Court can not set aside that order.

Mr. MANN. The Supreme Court can issue an order any day amending the rules.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; but a case would not be reversed if it went up on that particular account.

Mr. KENDALL. It is not contended that any law was violated by the judge. It was simply an impropriety?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate fully the value of the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there ought not be any special legislation where a general rule or a general statute could take care of the subject matter of any proposed legislation. I think that is a wise and salutary rule to be observed in lawmaking. But there are exceptions to the rule which are just as wise as the rule, and those exceptions sometimes are themselves of greater wisdom than a mere adherence to the rule.

Now, in this case, as everybody knows, the case of the Shoe Machinery Trust, which called for this special legislation, no suit or proceeding can be begun under the Sherman antitrust law, so called, as this suit against the Shoe Machinery Co. was begun, except by the consent and by the authority and in the name of the Attorney General. Now, the Attorney General, in the administration of justice and in the prosecution of that proceeding has found himself hampered by a rule of the court, and he has appealed to the Congress to remove that obstacle.

He claims that in this very case against the Shoe Machinery Manufacturing Trust, in Boston, the order of Judge Putnam that the testimony be taken behind closed doors has worked to the detriment of the correct administration of public justice; and from the fact that he has asked for this legislation I infer that he has been unable to get relief anywhere else. I infer that he has been unable to get relief from Judge Putnam's court, and he is unable to get relief through any rules of the Supreme Court. Therefore he appeals to Congress to pass this act.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Alabama tell us what, if any, reason was assigned by the judge who ordered that testimony to be taken in secret?

Mr. CLAYTON. I am not apprised of the reason the judge gave for his ruling.

Mr. COOPER. What reason could he give?

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not imagine any; but whether he had a reason or not, he did it, and we are trying to correct what I believe to be an obstruction to the correct administration of justice.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know in what way a Government case would be prejudiced as a consequence of an order of this kind? I assume, of course, that neither of the parties to the proceeding would be excluded, nor would their counsel. Both parties would be made fully cognizant of every step taken in the proceedings. Now, what I would like to ask the gentleman is in what way is the Government or the Attorney General prejudiced by the order to take the testimony in secret?

Mr. CLAYTON. I can not answer exactly what reason the Attorney General may give for it, because I do not have it directly from the Attorney General, and I do not wish to give reasons which may be chargeable to him, but I want to give what I suppose to be his reasons. In all these matters like the shoe machinery trust case the public is interested, and in every one of these investigations, through the medium of spreading the information through the press and through the bystanders who heard it, public information has been disseminated, and in many cases the Department of Justice has had its attention called to other facts with which it was unacquainted until these public hearings.

Sometimes the bystanders have heard things and the Attorney General has derived information from them which, if they had been excluded from the hearings, he perhaps would not have gotten. Sometimes the matter has gone to the press and has been discussed there, and from that source he has derived further information beneficial to him in the successful prosecution of suits against the trusts. At any rate, the Attorney General has said not only to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who introduced the bill on this subject in the House, but to Senator NELSON, of Minnesota, that he regarded it as important that the taking of testimony in these suits hereafter should be in public. I think I am violating no confidence when I say that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] said he introduced this bill and secured its passage through the Senate at the request of the Attorney General, and that it was prepared at the Department of Justice, and that the reason for it was that in a recent suit instituted by the Department of Justice under the antitrust law against the Boot and Shoe Machinery Manufacturing Trust in Boston United States Circuit Judge Putnam ordered that the testimony before the master be taken behind closed doors. This the Attorney General, so the Senator from Minnesota thinks, rightfully objected to and insisted that the taking of the testimony should be open to the public.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the day has long since passed when we should have star-chamber proceedings, and the public has a right to know, especially in a matter like the Shoe Machinery Trust case, what is going on, because a suit of that kind is not between private parties. It is a suit in behalf of the people. It is inaugurated by the Attorney General, and can not be inaugurated except through the Department of Justice, and it is peculiarly a public matter and the public is peculiarly interested in it, and it can not be said that there can be any sound public policy why the testimony should be taken in secret. I assume it will not be said that the disclosures will be so indecent as to shock the public. If the trust has been guilty of anything so wrong, so shocking to the sensibilities of a judge, the people ought to know about it; and they have a right to have these hearings in the open, as they have always been before.

At any rate, the chief law officer of the Government has advised Congress that it would promote the administration of public justice to have this bill passed, and I am quite willing to take his judgment, because he is primarily chargeable with the execution of the law.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I would just as soon take the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary on that subject.

Mr. CLAYTON. I thank the gentleman for the compliment. If it is of any value, I will say that the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary agrees with the Attorney General.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not dissent from the gentleman's opinion, but I wanted to know if there was any special reason, growing out of any particular case, that made it necessary for the passage of this legislation. It seems to me that there might be cases where trade secrets might be disclosed, for we all know that there have been improvident prosecutions.

Mr. CLAYTON. To meet that objection, this bill is limited in its nature.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. With reference to the Sherman antitrust law, but I believe there have been cases brought under that statute where it ought not to apply.

Mr. CLAYTON. The fact that it is limited met with the disapproval of the gentleman from Illinois, as I understood it.

Mr. MANN. If this bill was referred to the Attorney General and he expressed an opinion in regard to it, was there any special reason why that opinion should not be furnished to the House?

Mr. NORRIS. It was not referred to the Attorney General, and, with the exception of a slight change, it was drawn by the Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. Every department of the Government draws a great many bills for Members of Congress. I would like to have the department express its opinion in writing.

Mr. NORRIS. The Attorney General was not asked by the committee to do that, but he has referred to this particular case in this report, published and before Congress.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Recommending this very legislation.

Mr. MANN. That is true. I have no doubt the Attorney General is in favor of it.

Mr. NORRIS. Why should we refer the bill back to the Attorney General after he had prepared it?

Mr. MANN. So as to have a statement in reference to it. The Attorney General is conducting a lawsuit. He has been unable to get the judge to do what he wants done, and thereupon he proposes to force the judge to do it by legislation through Congress for the purpose of affecting that particular lawsuit.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman from Illinois think the Attorney General is trying to cover up anything?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Illinois would not put it upon that ground. I have great confidence in the Attorney General.

Mr. NORRIS. If the gentleman's criticism is correct, it ought to go to the committee and not to the Attorney General.

Mr. MANN. I am not criticizing.

Mr. NORRIS. The Attorney General, I know, would not object to giving his opinion.

Mr. MANN. I asked if there was any reason why we did not have the opinion of the Attorney General, and the gentleman from Nebraska has given the reason, and that is satisfactory, so far as I am concerned. But I am not satisfied to pass the bill by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield?

Mr. NORRIS. For a question.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman indicate what benefit there would be derived by the passage of this particular provision to open to the public this testimony?

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman has asked a question which I will answer. The first reason is that unless there is some reason to the contrary, the proceedings of court should always be open to the public. If we are going to permit the decision of this court to stand—and I do not know how we can meet it without a change of the law—you will be met at the threshold of every prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law with an application for a secret hearing. In effect, it will mean that in every case under the Sherman antitrust law the evidence shall be buried and not given to the public if we do not pass this legislation.

Further answering the gentleman, I want to say that these cases to which this act would apply are always cases in which the United States Government is a party, commenced by the Attorney General of the United States. He represents the people of the United States, and any citizen ought to have the right to go into the court and have cognizance of the proceedings, particularly in a case where the people of the United States are a party.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If that is true, why did the gentleman qualify and make an exception in some cases? If the courts are to be opened, why ought they not to be opened in all cases?

Mr. NORRIS. If we should come in here with a general act there would be a dozen objections, and one would be that there might be some case where the testimony was immoral and indecent and where the court ought to have a right to make it secret.

Then they would say it would apply to other cases where the evidence is taken in open court rather than by a master, as in this case. The reason why we are not having it apply generally is we want to avoid the very objection the gentleman seems inclined to make because we did not include all the cases. We concede there may be cases in which the hearing ought to be secret.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman can conceive why there should be exceptions made with reference to other laws, is it not possible that other gentlemen can conceive why there should be exceptions made in the administration of this law?

Mr. NORRIS. I concede that is right, and if the gentleman can point out any reason why there should not be publicity, I think that is proper.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I simply point out this fact. There has been no reason pointed out by the proponents of this bill why this particular statute should be taken out and made an exception of when it comes to its enforcement by the Attorney General.

Mr. NORRIS. I thought I had stated that to the gentleman in the first place. One reason for it is that, unless there should be reasons given to the contrary, there ought to be publicity in court proceedings, and no man has ever yet been able to give any reason why there should not be publicity in cases under the Sherman Antitrust Act.

Mr. BARTLETT. In this particular case what was the reason?

Mr. NORRIS. I am answering one question and I will yield to the gentleman just as soon as I get through with this answer. Another reason why this class of cases should be made public is because the testimony is always taken by a referee, a master. The gentleman understands that under the Sherman antitrust law there will be some evidence taken in San Francisco and some in Massachusetts. It is scattered around. A master is appointed and he may consume six months in taking the testimony.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to finish my answer. The master is traveling all over the country taking evidence. He takes some in Kansas City, and then he goes to Omaha, where he takes some more evidence, and then in New York City, and so on around the country. When he gets through he has a large amount of evidence, thousands of pages, perhaps. If the public are excluded from the hearings in Kansas City and in Omaha, the public does not know what the evidence is until it is filed in open court. At that time if there is any reason why publicity should be given, it disappears for the reason that no man would go through such a voluminous record.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Who is to decide the issue in that judicial proceeding—the public or the judge?

Mr. NORRIS. I will tell the gentleman where the public comes in, if the gentleman does not think the public ought to be in as a matter of right. The result will be that there will be no publicity, as a matter of practice, in these cases unless the publicity takes place when the evidence is produced before the master. In every case yet that the present Attorney General has ever commenced under the Sherman Antitrust Act, and he has commenced more than any other Attorney General, there has never been one yet where in some hearing evidence was not developed and given to the public which was the means of giving to him additional evidence, which he offered in the case before it was finally finished. So that in this class of cases, if the newspapers publish what one witness or another witness testifies to before the master, some man a thousand miles away will read it and he will write to the Attorney General and give him some information that is of material benefit in the case.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, has a reservation of objection been made upon this bill?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the gentleman who has made the reservation too jealous of it to allow the rest of us to enjoy some of its benefits?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the reservation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from New Jersey will propound that question so that I can understand it, I will be very glad to answer it. I could not understand it as propounded before.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I think that a proposition coming from the Attorney General of the United States is entitled to great weight, wherein he says that there is not a case where publicity has been given that it has not assisted him.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The fact that the Attorney General has instituted a prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law becomes a matter of public knowledge the moment the papers are filed. The newspapers throughout the United States make that known, especially the papers of the community where the offending party resides.

Now, a suit already having been begun by the Federal Government and knowing such a proceeding is in course of being concluded, and knowing that such a complaint is made against a particular institution, what additional virtue is there to be found in inviting the public into these hearings where trade secrets and methods of doing business are in line with everything that is legitimate, fair, and proper? What is to be gained by admitting the public there for the purpose of ascertaining those secrets and peddling them to their rivals?

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman dispute the word of the Attorney General?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I have not the word of the Attorney General. I have the gentleman's word that——

Mr. NORRIS. Does the gentleman deny that I am telling him correctly?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I do not; I do not doubt the gentleman's word at all.

Mr. NORRIS. There is the reply; the gentleman's question is answered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt of the word of the gentleman from Nebraska on anything. I had intended, if I may say to the gentleman, when this matter came up to move to strike out the restriction and let it apply to all hearings, but the gentleman has convinced me that there are some cases, which I can not imagine myself, where there ought to be secrecy, so I do not feel disposed to make that motion if the bill comes up. On the other hand, I think it requires further attention, and for the present, at least, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the bill (H. R. 28607) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, which was read the first and second time, and, with the accompanying report (No. 1434), ordered printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order on the bill.

UNALLOTTED TRIBAL LANDS OF THE CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW NATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5676) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to set aside for sanatorium purposes not to exceed four sections of the unallotted tribal lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Oklahoma.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to designate and set aside not to exceed four sections of the unallotted lands belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw Tribes of Indians in Oklahoma, said reservation being for the purpose of providing land on which to build a sanatorium or sanatoria for the benefit of said tribes of Indians.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, whoever is in charge of the bill I would like to ask if he intends to ask for the passage of the bill or for the amendment, which is not shown by the bill reported by the committee?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, we intend to ask for the passage of the substitute as shown in the report.

Mr. MANN. Well, then, I shall object.

The SPEAKER. Did the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to say he would object?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I desire also to reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman ought to expect to come in here with a bill where they report an amendment which is not reported in such shape that it is reported with the bill where it should be—only printed in the report—gross negligence by some one—carrying an appropriation which the original bill does not do, and then, having obtained the consent of the House to consider the same bill, proposes to consider something entirely different that never was properly presented to the House.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I presume that was a mistake of the printer, or some one.

Mr. MANN. Oh, it is not a mistake of the printer at all.

Mr. CARTER. Well, where does the mistake lie?

Mr. MANN. I do not know where it lies, but it lies with somebody—probably lies with the gentleman who made the report——

Mr. KENDALL. The gentleman said the printer, or some one.

Mr. MANN. That is my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. Does the gentleman consider that I am not some one?

Mr. MANN. No; I think the gentleman is a big one—nearly the whole thing in these matters.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I will admit I did not look after sending the copy to the printer. I did tell the clerk of the committee what I would like to have in the report, and the gentleman from Illinois certainly understands that Members do not have time to look after all these details.

Mr. MANN. Well, I know I have made more reports on bills to this House than any man in the House, unless it be from the Committee on Pensions, and I have never brought a report to the House without looking at the bill and the report to see whether it was properly marked.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman certainly does not expect the perfection in the ordinary Member that he has acquired.

Mr. MANN. I expect more in the gentleman from Oklahoma than I ever expect to acquire before I get to the other world.

I know how this occurred. The gentleman, instead of giving it to the printing clerk and putting in the basket a marked copy of the bill itself, showing the amendment, simply showed the amendment in the report. The printing clerk does not read through the long reports presented by committees in order to ascertain what amendments are proposed and fix up the bill accordingly. They would have to have 40 printing clerks if that were done. There should be filed with the report two copies of the bill. I asked the gentleman whether he was willing to have the Senate bill and pass it, or whether he wanted to take the House substitute that was not before the House.

Mr. CARTER. The bill as it passed the Senate only provides there shall be 2,500 acres of land, without any appropriation for the hospital at all. The House bill, as we expected to have it, provides an appropriation of $50,000 for the building of the hospital. Now, we have not any use for the land to be set aside unless we have the appropriation for the hospital.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation belongs in the Indian appropriation bill. If this bill should pass and go to the President and be signed, the gentleman would probably, without any difficulty at all, have inserted in the Indian appropriation bill $50,000, or even $50,000,000, for the purpose.

Mr. CARTER. But that would put it off for another year, Mr. Speaker, and this is a very urgent matter.

Mr. MANN. I do not think it would put it off at all, although I do not think it would hurt very much if it were put off for another year.

Mr. CARTER. We could not have the appropriation this year if we passed the bill, because I think the Indian appropriation bill will be reported to the Senate right away—in fact, it may be reported to-day.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] if the Senate substitute carries with it an appropriation of $50,000?

Mr. CARTER. The Senate bill has no substitute. The Senate passed the bill originally. The House substitute does carry an appropriation of $50,000.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. With the four sections of land?

Mr. CARTER. With the four sections of land.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. On that line I want to say a word, because I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] understands the situation perhaps. As I understand it, the Choctaw Council has made an appropriation of $50,000 out of their own money, and that has been approved, as I understand it, by the President. Am I correct?

Mr. CARTER. That is correct.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, this simply ratifies it and allows them to expend their own money for this purpose, which, to my notion, is a much better way of disposing of this amount of money than paying it to them per capita, which we would be obliged to do.

Mr. MANN. That is ordinarily true. We are not supposed on unanimous-consent days to pass appropriations, much less appropriations like this. I think it would be bad practice to pass such an amendment as is proposed here.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I want to ask the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] if in approving this matter Mr. Taft says that the $50,000 is to be taken out of the Choctaw fund?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is what I have stated.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Why not the Choctaw and Chickasaw fund?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] probably can explain. My understanding is that it is to be a Choctaw matter, and the Chickasaws are not to participate in it.

Mr. CARTER. There was some doubt of the propriety of Congress to appropriate funds of any of the Five Civilized Tribes for such purpose as this without their consent. We had the consent of the Choctaw Council, but not of the Chickasaw legislature, for the use of these funds, and the governor of the Chickasaw Nation objected to having any appropriation made for this purpose out of Chickasaw funds unless the Chickasaw legislature agreed to it. For that reason we made it a Choctaw proposition at the request of the chief of the Choctaws.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Did the Chickasaw Council agree that their land should be allotted?

Mr. CARTER. There is no allotment of land. The Chickasaw legislature took no action in the premises for the very good reason that they have not met for several years, but the governor of the Chickasaws said that in view of the fact that the land where the hospital would be built was worth very little money he would make no objection to the use of the land, but did object to any part of the appropriation coming out of the Chickasaw funds unless the Chackasaws agreed to it.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Why is it necessary to have four sections of land to use for sanitarium purposes?

Mr. CARTER. I do not know that it is necessary.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. That is what you purpose to give.

Mr. CARTER. We followed the recommendations of the Choctaw Council.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Who is supposed under this bill to attend to this sanitarium?

Mr. CARTER. The Secretary of the Interior, under rules and regulations, will appoint somebody to attend to it, I presume.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Who are allowed to attend there for treatment?

Mr. CARTER. Any bona fide Choctaw. That might not mean that people from your State with less than one two-hundred-and-fifty-sixths Indian, and who are now attempting to divest the Choctaws of Oklahoma of some of their just rights, would be admitted.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. That means that no part of this sum shall be used for the treatment of any Choctaw from Mississippi, and that those Choctaws are to be cut off?

Mr. CARTER. It might mean the keeping out of many thousands of people who, though they may be among the best people in the gentleman's State, yet to all intents and purposes are Indians for revenue only. [Laughter.]

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Then I will object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. MANN. I wish the gentleman would withhold his objection for a moment.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will reserve the right to object.

Mr. MANN. I would like to know whether the gentlemen are willing to pass the Senate bill as reported in the House without the amendment, which is not shown on the face of the bill, because, as a matter of practice, I shall object to the passing of the bill with an amendment here, reported back to the House with a report recommending the striking out of all after the enacting clause, but not showing it on the bill, so that Members are not put on guard. That is an exceedingly bad practice.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I shall not attempt to say anything, or contend that the report is properly gotten up. We all agree about that. But I want to call the attention of the gentleman to one or two things before he knocks the bill off the calendar——

Mr. MANN. Which I shall do unless the gentlemen are willing to take the original bill.

Mr. FERRIS. I want the gentleman to understand one or two facts before he does that. The Choctaw legislature, which is a legislative body, has formally passed this bill, the president has approved it. It is now up to Congress to ratify it.

Mr. MANN. I know that——

Mr. FERRIS. The Choctaw legislature spent most of the winter considering and passing upon this proposition.

Mr. MANN. Yes; they appropriated $50,000, but it requires our approval.

Mr. FERRIS. And the President of the United States has sent to this Congress at this session a long message particularly urging upon us the necessity of the protection of the Indians from disease.

Mr. MANN. I understand that.

Mr. FERRIS. And when the Indian appropriation bill was up, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] and others belabored the committee for not appropriating more of the moneys of the Federal Government for this purpose. The object of this bill is to appropriate the money of the Indian people, and they themselves have appropriated it, to do the very thing that the President has asked to be done by his special message, and to do the very thing about which the gentleman from Illinois and others complained, because it was not done. I think the gentleman ought to let the Indians spend some of their own money for this purpose, when it is conceded so necessary by everyone who knows the facts.

Mr. MANN. I shall not prevent them. The money will still be there and will still be used for that purpose.

Mr. FERRIS. But there will be no hospital there, and the Indians can not spend their money only as they come to Congress for their authority.

Mr. MANN. There may be no hospital; that is true.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects, and the bill is stricken from the calendar. The Clerk will report the next one.

MEMORIALS TO THOMAS JEFFERSON AND ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 745) providing for the erection of a statue to Thomas Jefferson at Washington, D. C.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

An act (S. 745) providing for the erection of a statue to Thomas Jefferson, at Washington, D. C.

Be it enacted, etc., That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives, of the Sixty-second Congress, to select a site on the public grounds in the District of Columbia, exclusive of the Capitol Grounds and the grounds of the Library of Congress, for a statue of Thomas Jefferson to cost, complete, not to exceed $100,000; and, to procure plans and designs for the same to be reported to Congress during its next session, the sum of $5,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to have read the amendment proposed by the committee.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That a commission is hereby created, to be composed of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the Senate, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library of the House of Representatives of the Sixty-second Congress, to select sites on the public grounds in the District of Columbia, exclusive of the Capitol Grounds and the grounds of the Library of Congress, for memorials to Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton, to cost, complete, not to exceed $100,000 each; and to procure plans and designs for the same, to be reported to Congress during its next session, the sum of $10,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 2. There shall be deducted from the $100,000 authorized for the erection of the memorial to Alexander Hamilton a sum equal to that turned over to the commission by the Alexander Hamilton Memorial Association.

SEC. 3. The designs of the memorials shall be subject to the approval of the Commission of Fine Arts.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] reserves the right to object.

Mr. SLAYDEN rose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] is recognized.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I had expected that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who made the report on this measure, would be in the House. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon; I see he is here. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, two bills came over from the Senate, one providing for a statue of Thomas Jefferson, and the other providing for a statue of Alexander Hamilton. They came to our Committee on the Library, and we thought it best to combine the two bills together and present the measure to the House in the present form.

As a matter of fact, there has been a Hamilton Memorial Association for some time which has raised about $6,000, and we provide in this bill that that $6,000 shall be turned into the fund of $100,000 to be devoted to the erection of a statue to Hamilton. In the past there has been legislation looking toward the erection of a monument to Jefferson.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of the right to object.

Mr. COX. I renew it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his reservation of the right to object, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] makes a reservation of his own.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Nothing has been done under the prior resolution, I think, largely owing to the death of John Hay. That is the whole story.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts inform the House, if he can, what has become of the fund raised by the sale of a very handsome edition of the works of Thomas Jefferson for the purpose of erecting in this city a memorial hall in honor of Jefferson.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I do not know. I know nothing about that. This is the first time I ever heard of it.

Mr. COOPER. I ask because I have $60 invested in those books myself.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman got the books, did he not?

Mr. COOPER. I got the books.

Mr. MONDELL. Were they worth the money?

Mr. BARTLETT. They were well worth the money.

Mr. MANN. They were worth the money if you could not get them for less.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I think the gentlemen who were members of the committee at that time are not now on the committee. Possibly the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN] may have some recollection about it.

Mr. COOPER. I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SLAYDEN], chairman of the Committee on the Library, if he knows what has become of that fund?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I could not hear the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. COOPER. Several years ago a society was organized, the exact name of which I do not recollect, but my impression is that it was the Jefferson Memorial Association——

Mr. SLAYDEN. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER (continuing). The purpose of which was to secure funds by the sale of copies of the works of Thomas Jefferson to erect a memorial building to him in this city.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I regret to say that I can not advise the gentleman about that. I was a subscriber to the work—20 volumes, as I remember—and I think I paid $60 for them.

Mr. COOPER. I was a subscriber and paid $60. [Laughter.]

Mr. SLAYDEN. The books were worth the money. They were the best collection of Jefferson's works that I have ever seen, and I do not regret the investment; but if the association ever made any money out of the publication I do not know of it. The Committee on the Library had no connection whatever with it.

Mr. CANNON. If I may be allowed, a gentleman sitting not a great distance from me suggests that the two gentlemen who bought the books were easy marks.

Mr. COOPER. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois I will say that, in my judgment, I was not taken in at all in purchasing the works of Thomas Jefferson. I have read them with great pleasure and profit. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, as there seem to be so many suckers in the House, I suggest that the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin be referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that this bill be referred to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries. Those in favor will say aye.

The affirmative vote was taken.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to consider the bill has not yet been given.

The SPEAKER. That is true. Did the gentleman from New Jersey make his motion in earnest?

Mr. McCOY. Only by way of suggestion to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. COX. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] reserves the right to object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, these bills to erect statues or memorials to Thomas Jefferson and Alexander Hamilton did not originate in the House. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. LODGE, offered a bill in the Senate a year ago to commemorate Alexander Hamilton, and Mr. BACON, the senior Senator from Georgia, followed immediately with a similar bill to appropriate for a statue or memorial for Thomas Jefferson. Thus these two distinguished men who did such wonderful service for the country in those early days were again put into company running, so to speak, a race with each other at this late day. Both bills passed the Senate, as I remember, unanimously. Having come to the Committee on the Library, the committee finally, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] stated, thought it better to combine the two.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to say to some gentlemen who do not seem to know it, that this is the first bill reported out of the Committee on the Library which asks the Government to undertake a penny of expense. There are pending in that committee bills that call for an aggregate sum approximately of four and a half million dollars, asking for statues or memorials to people, many of whom, I confess with shame, I never heard of before these authorizations were asked. Ninety per cent are intended to commemorate the deeds of soldiers and sailors, and the Committee on the Library has reached the conclusion that enough had been done in that line for a long time. They believe that civilians had something to do with the creation and the maintenance and the direction of this Government; that some people besides those who wore epaulets are entitled to the gratitude of the American people and have a right to expect that honor will be done to the memory of such men.

In December last the committee, being appalled by this great number of bills asking that memorials be erected to Colonel This and General That, to celebrate a skirmish at this place and a battle at that, passed a resolution expressing the opinion of the committee that until proper recognition had been given to civilians who had done great service for the people they would report no other bills for memorials. The committee think that the great statesmen, the great literary and scientific men, should be recognized, and that great events, rather than individuals, may properly be commemorated.

That is the attitude of the committee to-day, and this is the first and only bill that it has reported in the whole life of the Sixty-second Congress, and I believe that I speak with approximate accuracy when I say that it is probably the only one that will emerge.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What is to be the expected cost of it?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say that when we conferred with the members of the Fine Arts Commission with reference to the bills presented in the Senate and which use the word "statue" we were told that $100,000 was too much for a statue and it might be enough or too little for a memorial. We believe that a statue made by a great artist on a proper pedestal can be erected for less than $100,000, and therefore the bill was phrased as it is.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Speaker, I want to inquire of the gentleman——

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, have I the floor?

Mr. MURRAY. I thought the gentleman had yielded the floor to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I did not intend to do so.

Mr. MURRAY. I only wanted to ask the gentleman from Texas if he would tell me what memorials there are in the city of Washington to Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson?

Mr. SLAYDEN. None that I know of.

Mr. KENDALL. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. KENDALL. I want to inquire, without any view of interposing an objection, because I am in favor of the bill, under the provisions of this resolution the Secretary of State, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the chairman of the Committee on the Library in the House and in the Senate are to have the selection of the site, as I understand it?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. I wanted to inquire if the Committee on the Library in the House had considered the question of site?

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes.

Mr. KENDALL. It seems to me it would be fitting and appropriate to locate in front of the State Department the statue of Jefferson and in front of the Treasury Department the statue of Hamilton. I wanted to know whether that sentiment met with any favor in the committee.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Yes; those suggestions were both discussed along with many others, and the committee came to the conclusion that it would provide nothing as to the site except to exclude from consideration the Library grounds and the Capitol grounds.

Those sites are excluded by the terms of the bill, but otherwise we felt that this commission was more competent to decide the question than we.

Mr. KENDALL. This Commission on Fine Arts will have no influence at all in determining the location of these memorials.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; this special commission designated in the bill——

Mr. KENDALL. The Commission on Fine Arts must approve finally of the type of memorial, but it will have nothing to say as to where they shall be located.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. No; the bill leaves the question of site in the hands of two members of the incoming Cabinet, a Member of the Senate, and a Member of the House. I want to say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox] that if he intends to make his objection in any event, I wish he would make it now. If he desires any explanation, I shall be very glad to give it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I will say that I intend to make the objection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachussetts. Mr. Speaker, then I make the objection now.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from Indiana object.

DESERT-LAND ENTRIES, CHUCKAWALLA VALLEY, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 26943) to exempt from cancellation certain desert-land entries in the Chuckawalla Valley and the Palo Verde Mesa, Riverside County, Cal.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no desert-land entry heretofore made in good faith under the public-land laws for lands in townships 4 and 5 south, range 15 east; townships 4 and 5 south, range 16 east; townships 4, 5, and 6 south, range 17 east; townships 5, 6, and 7 south, range 18 east; townships 6 and 7 south, range 19 east; townships 6 and 7 south, range 20 east; townships 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8 south, range 21 east; townships 5, 6, and 7 south, range 22 east; township 5 south, range 23 east, shall be canceled prior to May 1, 1916, because of failure on the part of the entryman to make any annual or final proof falling due upon any such entry prior to May 1, 1916.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. I notice that this provides for the time of filing the proof, prior to May 1, 1915, or 1916, as it was in the bill originally. I notice the letter from the Secretary of the Interior says that an extension of one year is all that ought to be given, and if that extension be given it would enable these entrymen to determine whether this project could be irrigated or not, and that one year was all that they needed.

Mr. FERRIS. But he made a later report than that.

Mr. FOSTER. I have not the later one.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I may be able to explain the situation. The committee will observe that the first report was made December 28, 1912. It is found on pages 4 to 5 of the report.

Mr. FOSTER. I have the report.

Mr. RAKER. Recommending one year. These people, through their associations, sent Mr. Shepherd to Washington, and the matter has been taken up by the Department of the Interior. It has been gone into very fully, together with the report of the engineer in charge. The Secretary now states that he feels it is right and proper that an extension of two years be granted these people.

I want to say, in addition to that statement, that I have here the report of the engineer of this project, showing the plat and the map and pictures of this desert land, some 250,000 acres. There is no water there, nothing except some brush of various kinds, and no living creature is there except at two places where deep wells have been dug and a little water obtained. These people have gone out and prepared this report. It is by one of the best engineers in the United States—a man who participated in the building of the Panama Canal. The people had to pay, on an average, $320—$80 for filing. In taking their witnesses from Los Angeles and other places in California it cost them in the neighborhood of $100, and I want to say to the committee that these are all residents of the State of California. There are something over 800 of them. It costs, under the law—and those up to the first of the year have expended that amount—$320 on each tract of land. The entire cost of this project they figure on will be from six to eight millions of dollars. The original organization, when these people first filed, got into some complications, and on account of the arrangement of the Secretary of the Interior and the condition in Mexico a board has now been appointed to investigate whether or not they will be permitted to use the water. That being the case, this one firm was unable to go ahead.

These 800 people have formed an association for the purpose of going in there, and here is the report of the engineer that it is feasible; that the water can be had and that the ditches can be made, and that these 250,000 acres of barren desert land can be made as beautiful as the valley of San Jose or the Imperial Valley in southern California. Less than $50 an acre will be the expense to these people. Going out into the sagebrush and pulling it out and pulling up this vegetation without any water, and having to haul it, it will be no improvement on the land. They ask this Congress to grant them two years' time in which to complete the organization, to the end that they might go on the Colorado River, put in the necessary pumps and build the necessary ditches for the purposes of getting this water out upon this land, and then when that time has expired they will be compelled to pay the same amount upon the improvement of the land and of the ditches and the water rights which will go into its development.

The Government loses nothing; absolutely nothing; it just simply says to these people, "We will give you two years' time to develop and improve the methods so as to be able to obtain sufficient water for these lands."

Mr. KAHN. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I do.

Mr. KAHN. This land is absolutely valueless unless they get the right to take the water from the Colorado River and put it upon this land?

Mr. RAKER. It is absolutely valueless, and a man can not live there without water being brought in that country.

Mr. KAHN. And by putting the water upon the land it will provide homes for many thousands of people?

Mr. RAKER. It will.

Mr. KAHN. It will take at least two years in perfecting the work of pumping the water from the river?

Mr. RAKER. In arranging the conditions to get it started, it will.

Mr. KAHN. How much has been already expended by the people who are interested in this project?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, something over $200,000.

Mr. KAHN. And that money will be largely lost unless this legislation passes?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely. The money will be absolutely lost, and they will have lost their right to the lands, and the expenditure of this money will go for naught.

Mr. KENT. I desire to ask my colleague some questions. As I understand this project, these people expected to obtain water by the action of a corporation which was put out of business, in part at least, by its disagreement with the Government as to its powers to secure water from the Colorado River.

Mr. RAKER. That is it. On account of conditions in Mexico.

Mr. KENT. On account of Mexican conditions and contentions. Then this water corporation having been put out of business, these people who had taken up the land found themselves powerless to carry out the conditions imposed by the laws respecting arid lands and were unable to proceed in the way of development simply because there was no way by which they could get water. Hence I understand that they have organized together in a mutual association to provide the water of which they were deprived by the failure of this corporation.

Mr. RAKER. That is the condition.

Mr. KENT. I understand that they have expended a very large amount of money in clearing their land and preparing for irrigation, and it is utterly impossible to carry their improvements any further or to obey the letter of the law because they are barred from obtaining water at the present time.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman states the condition correctly.

Mr. KENT. Now I understand that the proposed bill simply gives these people a chance to save their money, gives them a run for their money as it were; that there is no one interested in taking their land away from them; that the land is valueless without such improvements as they may put upon it. The only objection I have heard against giving them the extension of time they request is that they may be swindled by some one asking them to furnish more money for irrigation. This, it seems to me, is beside the point. It is our duty to give them the opportunity to do all they can do. Neither the Government nor anyone else will be injured in the slightest degree by the extension of their right to the two years asked by this bill.

Mr. RAKER. That is true.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if this bill should become a law what possibility is there of getting irrigation on this land within the next two years?

Mr. RAKER. Well, I will answer the gentleman by stating I hold in my hand here——

Mr. MANN. That will not answer it.

Mr. RAKER. I can not answer it in one word—showing the examination and the feasibility of this irrigation project. The secretary of the association and a list of men I have here who are scattered all over California are working now and preparing to handle this work——

Mr. MANN. Where is that set forth in the report?

Mr. RAKER. Well, you will find the statement of Mr. L. V. Shepherd to the Secretary of the Interior on page 2, January 15, 1913. That is set out in that statement. I state in addition to the statement we have gone over the matter with Mr. Shepherd and many others; they are scattered all over the State of California, and this list will show their names and where they live. I know many of them, and I know they are in earnest in trying to develop this desert country.

Mr. MANN. I know. But how are they going to get the water?

Mr. RAKER. They are going to get the water first by putting in a dam and carrying it down to a certain distance——

Mr. MANN. I find in Mr. Shepherd's letter, to which the gentleman has referred, this statement, that letter being addressed to the Secretary of the Interior:

> Pending the settlement of the international question that has arisen concerning the waters of the Colorado River, you have ruled that we shall not be allowed to take any water from that stream. Because of the revolution in that country it may be many years before a settlement of this question can be made.

Now, the gentleman attempts, with that letter before him, to say that that letter bears out the proposition that they can get this water on this land within two years, when the place they are going to get it from is likely to be in dispute for many years, according to the letter itself.

Mr. RAKER. In answer to the gentleman, I will state that Mr. Shepherd and those people would like to have three years. That is their idea of the matter, and they believe they can get it arranged. As to the international question, the matter is being taken up now, and I am informed by the authorities that in the next few months that question will be disposed of so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. MANN. You have no more information than Mr. Shepherd has, and he says that it will be many years; and we all know they are not in position to settle it now.

Mr. RAKER. I took the matter up with the Secretary and Mr. Newell, and went over that situation, and they are in process of adjusting it now. You can not do the thing in a minute.

Mr. MANN. They had best get it adjusted before we come in on this proposition.

Mr. KAHN. As I understand it, the international question that is involved is this: The water that is to be used on this land is to be taken from the Colorado River. None of this land is on the Mexican boundary. It is altogether in the State of California. But there may be some international question involved as to the right to withdraw the quantity of water from the river for irrigating this vast tract of land, and that is what I believe they have been trying to negotiate with the Government of Mexico.

Mr. MANN. Now, having called the attention of the gentleman to the letter of Mr. Shepherd, which he quotes, that they probably can not settle this question for many years to come—meaning the international question—let me call his attention to the next statement made by Mr. Shepherd, as follows:

> Although there is enough water flowing down the Colorado River annually, according to measurements taken at Yuma, Ariz., by the United States Reclamation Service, to irrigate every acre available along the lower reaches of the river, in order to avoid litigation with prior rights, we may be obliged to wait until the waters of Colorado River are conserved, which will have to be done by the Government because of the magnitude of the undertaking.

What encouragement does the gentleman find in the proposition that they will get this water within two years?

Mr. RAKER. I will answer the gentleman as to the encouragement I find in that. It is that these people have spent their money. They are bona fide residents of the State of California. They have formed an organization or an association, and they are going there now to continue the expenditure of their money and get the matter arranged to expend all the way from $6,000,000 to $8,000,000 to develop this water right and irrigate this desert land. They are the ones who understand it. They are on the ground; and certainly the Government is not injured, no living man on earth is injured, and if we can by an extension of two years relieve these people of expending their money for nothing and eventually developing a first-class irrigating system by private individuals, I ask the gentleman from Illinois if that is not a proper method of legislation and if we ought not to do it?

Mr. KENT. It seems to me that the gentleman from Illinois is unduly heedful that these people may be swindled by somebody else, having, in his opinion, been swindled in the past.

Mr. MANN. If I had been more heedful, or if somebody else had been more heedful before they had been swindled at first, that would have been better.

Mr. RAKER. These are the same men.

Mr. KENT. The point is that these people have been acting in perfect good faith in taking up this useless land and believing they could make it useful, and I do not understand why we, acting for the Government, should enforce against them the hardships of the law when the conditions are such as they are. I believe they ought to have a chance to have a run for their money and see if they can not obtain water. Because this gentleman or that one believes they can not get water is not sufficient reason for us to clamp down on them.

Mr. FERRIS. What earthly harm could it do for them to keep on trying if they want to do so, inasmuch as they may get it in the last analysis?

Mr. MANN. The Chuckawalla Development Co. undertook to develop this land.

The people of California and the other people of the country had the right to believe that the Government of the United States would not authorize the formation of a company to start in on irrigation and obtain the money of the people for the irrigation—for the water—unless it could be carried into effect. They sold these rights all over the State of California to innocent purchasers, who believed that the Government in its wisdom would protect them from that kind of a swindle, and when they got through they find that the Chuckawalla Valley & Palo Verde Mesa Development Co. consists only in obtaining money and using it themselves, not in obtaining water. Now comes along a proposition of the gentlemen themselves, or some of them——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield? To whom does he yield?

Mr. MANN. Not unless I can stop it. I want to make a statement. It makes no difference to me.

Now, gentlemen come in and want to go ahead with this scheme, knowing that they can not get any water in the time fixed by this bill. And we know that what they intend to do is to get all the people interested in this land to put up some more money to go a little further. Everyone that knows anything about it knows that they can not furnish the water within the time fixed by this bill, and in the end we will help to delude these innocent purchasers again to put in more good money to follow the bad money that went before.

Mr. GARNER. This must be a bunco scheme, then. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I do not doubt the good faith of the gentlemen.

Mr. FERRIS and Mr. KAHN rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I have not the floor.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, 800 entries are involved here. Eight hundred entrymen have been trying to get water to irrigate these 800 entries. They failed in the first instance to get the water required. I call it to the attention of this House that in the last 10 years the Reclamation Service has expended more than $60,000,000 in experimenting, and much of the time they have failed. Here are 800 entrymen trying to keep from failing, trying to irrigate their own lands with their own money, at their own expense.

They have been trying since 1908 to convert a portion of California's arid lands into a productive area. They come here now and ask nothing but two more years in which to try. If they fail—if they never get water—the Federal Government gets back every acre of the land. What possible bugaboo and what possible mountain can we erect here, and what "possible straw" man can we conjure up to keep 800 people from the opportunity of trying to irrigate their own lands with their own money, at their own expense?

There is nothing else in this bill. The Secretary of the Interior has looked this over, and in a letter that he wrote to the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands on January 16, 1913, only two or three weeks ago, he says, among other things, this:

> After consideration of the representations now made I am willing to modify the report previously submitted to conform with the present request made on behalf of the desert-land claimants, and I have, therefore, to recommend that the proposed extension be made, as suggested by the pending bill, but that the last line on page 2 be amended to read "entry prior to May 1, 1915."

He says he is willing to modify his first report. In the letter he first wrote he said they ought to have one year. The people there were asking for three years, and he now compromises with them and urges that they have two years' extension.

Now, it is proposed to throw this House into a frenzy because 800 men are trying to have an extension of two years in which to irrigate and water their own lands.

Mr. CANNON. If the land is worthless, what possible objection would there be to giving them five years?

Mr. FERRIS. None at all. I think they ought to have it. The Secretary says two years in his report, and when we come here by unanimous consent it must be two years or none at all. If we had exceeded the two years by one month in this report there would be 75 objections, coming from as many Members, and this bill would have been stricken off the calendar, and those 800 men would have had to abandon their homesteads.

Members ought not to conjure up straw men here when there is no ground of objection.

Mr. MANN. That is a great term of the gentleman's, is it not—"conjure up"?

Mr. FERRIS. It is a term that may not sound well, but it expresses the case.

Mr. KAHN. Is it not true that when these entrymen made their application to the Secretary of the Interior they wanted to get three years and that it was cut down one year?

Mr. FERRIS. That is true.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If this is so simple a matter as the gentleman's eloquence would indicate, what reason, if any, does the Secretary furnish to the committee for insisting upon two years' extension instead of three?

Mr. FERRIS. He thinks they can probably accomplish it in two years.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. In his report, then, he takes the view opposite to that of the gentleman from Illinois that the thing is impossible altogether?

Mr. FERRIS. A man by the name of Shepherd had some correspondence with the Interior Department and with the Reclamation Service about it, and I think they stated that the revolution in Mexico may require more time, and they may have trouble to divert the water from the Colorado River; but the Secretary in a letter written two weeks ago says he has no objection to two years, and I call his attention to his letter contained in the report on page 2, where he sets out his views on the subject. This bill ought to pass. The settlers need the legislation. The State needs the development. It is a heroic fight they are making on desert lands to make homes and comply with the law. It seems to me when only an extension is asked the Federal Government ought to give them a chance. It is unfortunate that the calendar is such that this bill has to be subjected to a unanimous-consent consideration. It is a case of fiddling while Rome burns. No possible harm could come. There is every reason to believe good will come from it.

Mr. KENT. I have a very recent letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, which came to me yesterday, and I very much regret that I have not the letter with me, in which he strongly recommends the granting of this time. He thinks it is in the interest of justice and a proper thing to do. That is the most recent word on the subject, I believe.

Mr. LAFFERTY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LAFFERTY. It seems that the objection behind the granting of this time grows out of the fact that Mexico has some claim to the water of the Colorado River. I should like to inquire if any gentleman on the floor of this House knows of any reason, in any treaty or provision of international law, which authorizes the Government of Mexico to interpose any objection to the diverting of sufficient water from the Colorado River to irrigate these lands?

Mr. SHERWOOD. Have they any government in Mexico?

Mr. LAFFERTY. I do not see why the people of the United States should be restricted in their right to the use of the water.

Mr. KAHN. I think I can answer the question, to a certain extent. There is a diversion from the Colorado River in Mexican territory some hundreds of miles south of the land covered by this bill, and I daresay that the Mexican Government has a right to receive constantly the quantity of water which it is now using. That, of course, makes an international complication, but I do not think it is so serious that it will be difficult to reach a determination as soon as there is a government in Mexico that our Government can treat with.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are the citizens of Mexico using any water from the river now? My understanding is that there is no water being used from the river in Mexico, and hence they have no prior rights.

Mr. KAHN. Yes; there is considerable water being used. I do not know to what extent it is being used in Mexico.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In Mexico is what I speak of.

Mr. KAHN. But the diversion dam of the irrigation company that waters the Imperial Valley is in Mexican territory.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How many Mexican citizens are using water on Mexican territory?

Mr. KAHN. I think there is some irrigation down there in the neighborhood of a place they call Calexico.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Unless there is some, they would have no prior right, and we would have the right to take water if we had use for it.

Mr. KAHN. Very true.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this may be passed over until next unanimous-consent day. I did not really complete what I had to present to-day, and this seems to be so vital to these people that I ask that unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has the right to put it on the Unanimous Consent Calendar again.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects. The bill will be stricken from the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and the Clerk will call the next bill.

Mr. RAKER. I desire to insert in the RECORD a list of these applicants who own the land.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The list of entrymen referred to is as follows:

EXCHANGE LANDS FOR SCHOOL SECTIONS IN RESERVATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 5068) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange lands for school sections within an Indian, military, national forest, or other reservation, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

Mr. MANN and Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota reserved the right to object.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from California will ask to have this go over without prejudice. It is pretty late in the day, and I do not know whether anybody is to object or not, but I want to be heard for a few moments upon the bill.

Mr. RAKER. I am perfectly willing to do so, but this is the last bill that will be taken up.

Mr. MANN. It is?

Mr. LAFFERTY. How does the gentleman know? I have got a bill on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman speaks by the card. But I can say to him that we are not going to take this one up. I think there are several little bills, however, that gentlemen would like to get through which are unobjected to. If this comes up it will take some little time. It is a Senate bill, and I shall ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order, and the regular order is, Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, unless I am permitted to reserve an objection I will make it, but I am perfectly willing to reserve it.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, along early in the afternoon, when a companion House bill to this was up and had a good chance to be considered, the gentleman from Illinois suggested that we let it go by, so that we could take up the Senate bill. Now, does not the gentleman think it would be right to let the gentleman from California take up his bill, because he lost his opportunity early in the day?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not lose his opportunity; he had no opportunity.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Illinois will remember the conversation.

Mr. MANN. I remember the facts and the conversation.

Mr. FERRIS. Have I misstated them?

Mr. MANN. I do not think the gentleman has, but he has drawn an inference that ought not to be drawn from the facts. I do not think there is any necessity of wasting time in taking the bill up to-night. I do not desire to sit here late in the evening, but I wish to be heard for a few moments on the bill if it is taken up. If that is not satisfactory to the gentleman from California, I will ask for the regular order.

Mr. FERRIS. I think it would follow from the fact that the gentleman from Illinois suggested that——

Mr. MANN. I did not suggest anything, because I was going to object to the House bill. The gentleman had a Senate bill in another place on the calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. That is precisely what I said.

Mr. MANN. There was no act of bad faith.

Mr. FERRIS. I did not charge that.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think the gentleman rather intimated it.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, not at all. The gentleman is never in bad faith. I merely thought it would appeal to him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I object.

FINAL PAYMENT FOR LANDS, UMATILLA RESERVATION, OREG.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill S. 3225, an act providing when patents shall issue to the purchasers or heirs of certain lands in the State of Oregon.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all persons who have heretofore purchased any of the lands of the Umatilla Indian Reservation, in the State of Oregon, and have made or shall make full and final payment therefor in conformity with the acts of Congress of March 3, 1885, and of July 1, 1902, respecting the sale of such lands, shall be entitled to receive patent therefor upon submitting satisfactory proof to the Secretary of the Interior that the untimbered lands so purchased are not susceptible of cultivation or residence, and are exclusively grazing lands, incapable of any profitable use other than for grazing purposes.

SEC. 2. That where a party entitled to claim the benefits of this act dies before securing a patent therefor, it shall be competent for the executor or administrator of the estate of such party, or one of the heirs, to make the necessary proofs and payments therefor to complete the same; and the patent in such cases shall be made in favor of the heirs of the deceased purchaser and the title to said lands shall inure to such heirs as if their names had been especially mentioned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TO INCREASE THE EFFICIENCY OF THE NAVY AND MARINE CORPS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 24225) to amend an act entitled "An act to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States," approved March 3, 1899.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, to save time, unless the gentleman from Texas asks to have this passed over, I shall object.

Mr. GREGG of Texas. If the gentleman from Illinois is going to object, I ask that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

TITLE TO CERTAIN LAND IN BALDWIN COUNTY, ALA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11478) to quiet title and possession with respect to a certain unconfirmed and located private land claim in Baldwin County, Ala., in so far as the records of the General Land Office show said claim to be free from conflict.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the lands situate in section 44, township 1 north, range 2 east, and section 49, township 1 north, range 1 east, containing 639.97 acres, in Baldwin County, Ala., known as the Francis Girard grant, shall be, and the same are, in so far as the records of the General Land Office show the said land to be free from conflict, hereby directed to be granted, released, and relinquished by the United States, in fee simple, to the respective owner or owners of the equitable titles thereto and to their heirs and assigns forever as freely and completely, in every respect whatever, as could be done by patents issued therefor according to law.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall in any manner abridge, divest, impair, injure, or prejudice any valid right, title, or interest of any person or persons in or to any portion or part of the lands mentioned in the said first section, the true intent of this bill being to relinquish and abandon, grant, give, and concede any and all right, interest, and estate, in law or equity, which the United States is or is supposed to be entitled to in said lands, in favor of all persons, estates, firms, or corporations who would be the true and lawful owners of the same under the laws of the State of Alabama, including the laws of prescription, in the absence of the said interest and estate of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the Department of the Interior shall cause patents to issue for such lands, and such patents shall issue in the name of the original claimant, and when issued shall be held for the use and benefit of the true and lawful owner or owners, as provided in sections 1 and 2 of this act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the gentleman tell us what this is.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, this bill seeks to acquire title to about 414.5 acres of land that were acquired under the Girard grant. It was always assumed that the grant was confirmed by the act of 1819, but the Interior Department says that is not true. It says it was not approved. The bill only seeks to confirm the title to that portion of the grant which is not in conflict, and the Interior Department says that the 414.5 acres are not in conflict. The Interior Department in its letter suggests an amendment to the end that the Federal Government will not be seeking to confer title to some one, being left in the attitude of an insurer of title. We have modified the bill and amended it so that it meets with the approval of the department. The department's letter is of date July 24, 1912, signed by the Assistant Secretary, Samuel Adams. He recommends it. The bill was before his predecessor, Mr. Ballinger, and he recommended it. The land has been occupied and owned and held for so long that I think there can be no possible objection to the bill. The same care about confirmations and perfecting of title did not prevail then that is now present. There can be no possible objection to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out line 4 and insert "persons, estates, firms, or corporations, who would be the true and lawful owners of the same under the laws of Alabama, including the laws of prescription had the private land claim of the said Francis Girard been confirmed by the third section of the act of March 3, 1819 (3 Stat., 528)."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURT AT NEWARK, N. J.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 28094) to amend section 96, chapter 5, of the act of Congress of March 3, 1911, entitled "The Judicial Code."

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 96, chapter 5, of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1911, and therein designated "The Judicial Code," be amended so that the same shall read as follows:

"SEC. 96. The State of New Jersey shall constitute one judicial district, to be known as the district of New Jersey. Terms of the district court shall be held at Newark on the third Tuesday in January, the first Tuesday in May, and the third Tuesday in October, and at Trenton on the first Tuesday in April, the third Tuesday in September, and the first Tuesday in December. The clerk of the court for the district of New Jersey shall maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Newark and at Trenton, each of which offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court; and the marshal shall also maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Newark and at Trenton, each of which offices shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. What is the necessity for holding court at Newark?

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, the necessity arises from the fact that most of the business done in the United States courts in the district of New Jersey arises in the northern counties. More than half of the population of the State is in those northern counties and still there is no term of court held except in Trenton.

Mr. MANN. I suppose this bill was prepared after some consideration and possibly consultation. It was introduced on January 15, reported on January 28, and nearly every date that was in the original bill is changed by amendments. Is this in conformity with the wishes of the people over there?

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, the bill as introduced provided for six terms, three in one place and three in another, but after consultation with the two judges of the United States district courts and with attorneys in the northern part of the State it was agreed that the four terms would be sufficient—two in Newark and two in Trenton.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. This bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. McCOY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 10, page 1, strike out the words "the third Tuesday in January" and the word "May" and insert in place of the word "May" the word "April."

Line 11, page 1, strike out the word "third" and insert in place thereof the word "first." Strike out the word "October" and insert in place thereof the word "November."

Line 1, page 2, strike out the words "first Tuesday in April the" and the word "September" and insert in place of the word "September" the word "January."

Lines 2 and 3, page 2, strike out the word "first" and insert in place thereof the word "second." Strike out the word "December" and insert in place thereof the words "September of each year."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. McCOY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, BATON ROUGE, LA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 25762) for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near Baton Rouge, La.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Baton Rouge Bridge & Terminal Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Louisiana, its successors and assigns, be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge, and all approaches thereto, across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La., at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That said bridge shall be so constructed, maintained, and operated that, in addition to its use for railroad trains and trolley cars, it shall provide for a separate roadway and approaches and continuous use by the public as a highway bridge, to be used for all kinds of highway traffic and travel, for the transit of which reasonable rates of toll may be charged and received, but no rate for passage of a single passenger on a railroad train shall exceed 25 cents.

SEC. 2. That the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have authority to make rules and regulations for the use of this bridge by any other common carrier engaged in interstate commerce at any time any other such common carrier may desire to use it jointly, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to fix charges for any such joint use, and such charges shall be based upon the relation that the proportionate use of each carrier bears to the interest of the net income from the sale of bonds to the amount of the actual cost of construction.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice the War Department reports that this bill is in the usual form, which it is not. I would like to ask the gentleman who has charge of the bill why there is a departure in this bill from the usual form with reference to bridge bills, and why we should pass a bill authorizing the charge of 25 cents to each passenger on a train crossing the bridge. The bill says not to exceed 25 cents, and I assume it is 25 cents. I would like to ask why it is not left within the control of the War Department, which would have control under the general bridge act without this specific provision in it?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois will notice that the committee has stricken out that portion of the bill to which he refers.

Mr. MANN. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I said the gentleman from Illinois will notice that the committee has stricken out that portion of the bill to which he refers.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon, it has done nothing of the kind; the gentleman is mistaken. The committee has reported striking out section 2, but what I refer to is in the first section, under the proviso, the last part of which reads, "but no rate for passage for a single passenger on a railroad train shall exceed 25 cents."

Mr. BROUSSARD. The proviso reads:

Provided, That said bridge shall be so constructed, maintained, and operated that, in addition to its use for railroad trains and trolley cars, it shall provide for a separate roadway and approaches and continuous use by the public as a highway bridge, to be used for all kinds of highway traffic and travel, for the transit of which reasonable rates of toll may be charged and received, but no rate for passage of a single passenger on a railroad train shall exceed 25 cents.

Mr. MANN. The last part is what I read.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Now, the gentleman asks, as I understand it, why the 25 cents was put in this bill. It was only a restriction upon the charges that may be placed upon passengers going across this bridge.

Mr. MANN. Well, I think it would be construed as authority to charge 25 cents, whereas without that provision the War Department may determine that 10 cents is enough, as it probably is.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am perfectly willing for that to go out, if the charge seems to be too high, because what we are seeking to secure by this bill is a bridge across the Mississippi River where five great roads run to the river at a little town across from the capital of the State, Port Allen, and to be permitted to cross the river on a bridge provided for by this company organized for that purpose, and if the charge for passengers be too high in the gentleman's opinion, I am perfectly willing to eliminate that charge. In fact, as the gentleman will see by section 2, we wanted the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix the charge.

Mr. MANN. I take it it is a railroad and wagon bridge.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Yes; that is what it is.

Mr. MANN. That is all covered in the general bridge act without this proviso in the bill.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I am perfectly willing to strike out the proviso. We wanted the commission to regulate the charges on this bridge as we originally introduced the bill, but the Interstate Commerce Committee thought proper to strike out that provision.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman may not understand that under the general bridge law the Secretary of War can regulate this absolutely.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Without any specific declaration?

Mr. MANN. Without any specific declaration at all.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I should welcome the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. MANN. They have that authority, and that is far better for the security of the people than even the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BROUSSARD. I will strike out that portion of the bill which limits the charge which shall be made for passengers going over the bridge. What we are seeking to do is to get the bridge.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman would be a great deal better off if he would move to strike out the proviso in section 1. He will be in better position to get the bridge.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the proviso in section 1.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how far this bridge would be from the city of New Orleans?

Mr. BROUSSARD. It will be about 80 miles up the river.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. That is, the distance from New Orleans to the capital of Louisiana?

Mr. BROUSSARD. From New Orleans to Baton Rouge.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it to be a fixed bridge or a drawbridge?

Mr. BROUSSARD. It will be a drawbridge, and a modern one that will not interfere with navigation on the river.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to interfere with the gentleman's project nor his section of the country, but the Government is spending large sums of money on the improvement of the Mississippi River for a distance, all told, of about 2,500 miles from the Lakes to the Gulf, and the distance from Baton Rouge to New Orleans, as the gentleman has stated, is about 80 miles, so that this bridge would probably be the southernmost bridge on the Mississippi River up to the present time. I wanted to ask about the navigation. The gentleman says the bridge would be constructed so it would not impede the navigation, and that it would be a drawbridge so that masted vessels might get through. Has the gentleman any information with regard to the effect of this bridge and its abutments upon floods that occasionally break out in this vicinity on the Mississippi River?

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, to be perfectly frank with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], I have not that information beyond this, that the people who are interested are not interested because they propose to have any stock in this company organized in Louisiana to build the bridge, but because of the fact that the people in that section of Louisiana where I live can, by virtue of this proposition, get to New Orleans, by retracing the line of railroad west, an hour earlier; and so will the mail reach western Louisiana and southeastern Texas one hour sooner than it does now by crossing on the ferry at New Orleans. So that, inasmuch as the people whose lands are subject to overflow are petitioning for this bridge to be built in order to convenience them in their travel, and to convenience the mail in reaching destination in that populous section of the country, I judge that they have considered the matter, and if they are not fearful of any results that might come from any impediment of the flow of the river to the sea, by which there might be a greater danger in protecting their lands from overflow, we should not be.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Baton Rouge is on comparatively high ground, is it not? Does it not stand well up above the river?

Mr. BROUSSARD. It stands well up above the river. In fact, Baton Rouge is on a hill, and we who come from the side of the river where I live—the western side of the river—will have to meet very high hills on the Baton Rouge side, the eastern or capital side of the river, and this bridge will have to be built so as to meet the ridge above the capitol. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, besides that, that the War Department has recommended that this bill be passed.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Yes; I have seen that in the report.

Mr. BROUSSARD. It will not interfere with navigation, according to the United States engineers, but besides that it gives a quicker access to New Orleans, which, in my judgment, will be the city to which all the trade of the Mississippi River Valley will come after the Panama Canal is completed. All the western country that is reached by the Texas & Pacific Railroad and by the Southern Pacific Railroad will find its terminus in order to reach these markets, whether on the Atlantic side of South and Central America or on the Pacific side of South and Central America, and in the Orient as well. And the Frisco system, that recently has come to Port Allen, is anxious to cross the river and get on to the western side and carry freight on to the Pacific coast.

Besides the Colorado Southern and other roads, five in all, as I am informed, meet at that point just across the river from Baton Rouge, being able to cross by bridge, will reach the Atlantic seaboard, and reach the Panama Canal, and reach the western part of this hemisphere, and reach the Orient as well. All of these roads centering at Port Allen, across from Baton Rouge, will be able to save 1 hour in crossing so far as passengers are concerned, and possibly 24 hours in crossing so far as freight is concerned, and get on the other side of the river and reach their destination so much the sooner.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I sincerely trust that that development will take place, but I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that 2,500 miles of this navigaion will land up against this bridge, once constructed, and if it impedes the commerce that is being carried on on this navigable stream it would be a serious matter.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman does not want to destroy this bill.

Mr. MANN. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will not destroy this bill.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded, and if anybody objects, the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable. Every Member has the right to call for the regular order when he chooses.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. In view of the demand for the regular order, is it not in order to make the point that no quorum is present?

The SPEAKER. It is always in order to make that point.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland moves that the House adjourn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I trust the gentleman will withhold that motion until I can submit a request.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. I will withhold my motion, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. The demand for the regular order is a closure measure. I do not wish to defeat the measure that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD] has in hand.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order. Let it go over until next week.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I do not want to prejudice this bill.

Mr. MANN. Unless the gentleman himself objects to it, it does not go off the calendar.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go over until next week without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet at 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until 10.30 o'clock to-morrow morning. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. We have not got through the appropriation bills, and we shall have to meet at 9 o'clock pretty soon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] asked me to announce that the House will sit late to-morrow night in order to finish the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on the Library was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 28575) to provide a commission to secure plans and designs for a bridge as a memorial of peace and union, to be known as the "Grant-Lee Bridge," and to be constructed across the Potomac River from a point in the city of Washington near the site selected by law for a memorial for Abraham Lincoln to the national cemetery at Arlington, in the State of Virginia, and the same was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with the order previously made, adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 4, 1913, at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks that the form of the petition, without the signatures, be printed in the RECORD, and that the petition in its entirety be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The petition is as follows:

STATE OF OREGON, County of Lane.

HON. JONATHAN BOURNE, JR.,
United States Senator from Oregon:

We, the undersigned residents of the Siuslaw National Forest Reserve, hereby petition our honorable Senators and Representatives in Congress to return the Siuslaw National Forest Reserve to settlement, subject to homestead entries and settlement. In support of our claims we do hereby state the following reasons:

1. That a national forest is a detriment to the people who live in its vicinity.
2. That all kinds of natural resources within the national forest are withheld from use.
3. That the national forests are run so as to favor the big man and not to help the home builder.
4. That the homestead is taken away from settlement for ranger stations.
5. That the forestry officers are opposed to the settlers and are anxious to keep the country a wilderness by reporting against all claims whether good or bad.
6. That the forestry officials are eastern theorists who know nothing about the West.
7. That the timber sales are handled in the interest of monopoly for the Lumber Trust.
8. That the forest reserve prohibits settlement and improvement, thereby reducing the amount of taxes for schools and roads, which are greatly needed in the Siuslaw National Forest.

Dated this — day of ———, 1912.

Mr. SIMMONS. I present a joint resolution passed by the General Assembly of North Carolina, declaring the views of that body with reference to interstate passenger and freight rates and charges. I ask that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint resolution declaring the views of the General Assembly of North Carolina with reference to interstate passenger and freight rates and charges, and for other purposes.

Resolved by the house of representatives (the senate concurring):

First. That in the view of the General Assembly of North Carolina, Congress should declare illegal, under any and all circumstances, any greater charge by any public-service company for transporting passengers or freights of a given kind and quantity a shorter distance than is charged for transporting the same a longer distance in the same direction when the shorter haul is included in the longer.

Second. That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State be, and they are hereby, requested and respectfully urged to support a bill repealing the first and second proviso to section 4 of the interstate-commerce act and to support such other amendments as may be necessary to make effective the policy declared for in the first resolution above.

Third. That pending the enactment into law by Congress of the principles above declared for it should, in the opinion of the General Assembly of North Carolina, be the policy of the State to press before the Interstate Commerce Commission objections to the injustice of allowing any discrimination against North Carolina points in favor of other points outside of the State to which hauls are longer than to the North Carolina points, and which longer hauls include the hauls to such North Carolina points.

Fourth. That in addition to the powers conferred on the North Carolina Corporation Commission to institute and prosecute cases before the Interstate Commerce Commission for relief to the people of North Carolina for discriminatory and excessive charges by common carriers, power is conferred upon the governor to institute and prosecute such cases, either independently or in conjunction with the North Carolina Corporation Commission in his name on behalf of the people of the State or in the name of any combined association or body of citizens, or in the name of the North Carolina Corporation Commission, and for such purpose the sum of not exceeding $5,000 a year is appropriated, out of any money in the State treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid on the order of the governor.

Fifth. That the secretary of state shall transmit to each of the United States Senators and Members of Congress from this State a copy of these resolutions.

That this resolution shall be in force from and after its ratification.

In the general assembly read three times and ratified this 30th day of January, 1913.

E. L. DAUGHTRIDGE,
President of the Senate.
GEO. W. COSMOS,
Speaker of House of Representatives.

1. The fourteenth amendment, which provides: "No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property without due process of law."

2. Article I, section 8, of the Constitution, which provides that the Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several States. * * *

These two constitutional provisions the liquor interests have insisted are cities of refuge to which the traffic could flee when assaulted; but years ago the Supreme Court of the United States forced such interests to abandon this fourteenth amendment as either a defense or shelter, and it is now a fact that the only provision of the Federal Constitution to which such interests may retreat is Article I, section 8, known as the commerce clause of the Constitution.

As to the fourteenth amendment, the court has met and answered every argument, and a few cases will render this clear:

In one case the Supreme Court of the United States said that the sale of intoxicating liquors "is not one of the rights growing out of citizenship of the United States." (Bartemeyer v. Iowa, Wall., 129.)

In another case that court said: "And if any State deems the retail and internal traffic in ardent spirits injurious to its citizens and calculated to produce idleness, vice, or debauchery, I see nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent it from regulating and restraining the traffic or from prohibiting it altogether if it thinks proper." (The License cases, 5 How., 576-577.)

In another case the court said: "The law of a State prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. That question is now no longer open in this court." (Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S., 201, 206.)

In still another case it is said the State has the right to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors within her limits and prohibit all sale and traffic in them in the State, "and such legislation by a State is a clear exercise of her undisputed police power, which does not abridge the liberties or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor deprive any person of property without due process of law, nor in any way contravene any provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States." (Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S., 1, 16.)

And again in another case it is said: "A prohibition simply upon the use of property for purposes that are declared by valid legislation to be injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community can not, in any just sense, be deemed a taking or an appropriation of property for the public benefit. Such legislation does not disturb the owner in the control or use of his property for lawful purposes nor restrict his right to dispose of it, but is only a declaration by the State that its use by anyone for certain forbidden purposes is prejudicial to the public interests." (Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 668-669.)

Article I, section 8, of the Federal Constitution provides that Congress shall have power to regulate commerce among the several States. In thus vesting in Congress this power the Constitution impliedly forbids any State the right to exercise it without the consent of Congress. Without such consent the State has no power to regulate commerce among the several States, but with such consent the State has unlimited power.

Under this clause of the Federal Constitution the rule of law is that the silence of Congress, or its failure to act, on the subject of commerce among the several States is to be taken as legally equivalent to its declaration that such commerce shall be free and unrestricted.

But with respect to interstate commerce in intoxicating liquor Congress has not been silent and it has not failed to act. In 1890 it enacted a law, known as the Wilson Act, providing that all intoxicating liquors transported into any State shall, upon arrival in such State, be subject to the operation and effect of the laws of such State. The liquor interests attacked that statute, but the Supreme Court of the United States upheld it as valid and constitutional; but it was the judgment of the court that the words "arrival in such State" included delivery to the consignee. Therefore, under the court's construction of this Wilson Act, interstate commerce did not cease until the liquor had actually reached the hands of the consignee. (Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S., 412-421.)

The pending Kenyon bill proposes to advance one step beyond the provisions of the Wilson Act.

This Kenyon bill is, in fact, a simple measure. It does two things: First, it withdraws the power of Congress over interstate commerce in so far as intoxicating liquor is involved; second, it consents that the power of the State shall attach to such commerce immediately upon the arrival of the interstate shipment across the State's boundary line and before the article is delivered to the consignee.

Under the Kenyon bill the statutes of the State will control liquor from and after the arrival of the liquor in the State and before its delivery to the consignee.

This is a mere recognition of the doctrine of State rights.

Is there any sound reason to be assigned in opposition to this bill?

Should not the people of each State have the free and unobstructed right to control their domestic affairs in their own way? Should not each State in the American Union have the right to expect the cooperation of the Federal Government in the due, impartial, and thorough administration and enforcement of the laws involving the State's public policy and internal affairs? Is it not both reasonable and right for the Congress of the United States to say to each State, "We voluntarily withdraw our constitutional power over interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors, and we consent that the State's power over such commerce shall attach immediately upon the arrival of any such liquor within the boundaries of the State and before it shall have been delivered to the consignee"?

This is the sum total of the Kenyon bill; and the supporters of the bill represent 71 per cent of the land area of the United States, as against 29 per cent represented by those who reside in "wet" territory. Fifty-one per cent, or forty-six and one-fourth million of the people of the United States live in "dry" territory. Nine American States are 100 per cent "dry," 39 are more than 50 per cent "dry," 25 are over 85 per cent "dry," and 19 are over 90 per cent "dry."

The Members of Congress and the people at large who favor this bill represent a majority of the inhabitants of the United States, and they represent almost three-fourths of the land area of the Nation.

The advocates of this bill in and out of Congress stand for the rule of the people, the right of the people in each several State to enforce State laws without Federal obstruction, and to administer their own internal affairs without statutory or constitutional hindrance on the part of the General Government.

The people of each State have the undoubted right, as American citizens, to determine for themselves whether their State shall be "wet" or "dry," and the Federal Government should freely grant to the State and its people the right to protect themselves by an unembarrassed enforcement of the law.

It is true that the Supreme Court of the United States has said: "Liquor, however obnoxious and hurtful it may be in the judgment of many, is a recognized article of commerce." (Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky, 214 U. S., 218, 222.)

But that court has also said: "The purpose of the Wilson bill was to make liquor, after its arrival, a domestic product and confer power upon the State to deal with it accordingly." (Pabst Brewing Co. v. Crenshaw, 198 U. S., 17, 27.)

And again:

"Congress, sedulous to prevent its exclusive right to regulate commerce from interfering with the power of the States over intoxicating liquor, by the Wilson Act, adopted a special rule enabling the States to extend their authority as to such liquor shipped from other States before it became commingled with the mass of other property in the State by a sale in the original package." (Delamater v. South Dakota, 205 U. S., 93, 98, 99.)

It is apparent that since the passage of the Wilson Act the settled purpose of the Supreme Court of the United States has been to differentiate intoxicating liquors from other objects of interstate commerce, and to distinguish between the decisions which have reference to ordinary articles of commerce between the States and those which concern intoxicating liquors.

In their literature, addressed to members and nonmembers, sent out by the liquor interests in opposition to the passage of this Kenyon bill, the assertions are made that "this bill is the most dangerous measure ever aimed at the liquor traffic"; that "this bill must be killed"; and "the passage of the Kenyon bill will be the biggest victory ever won by the Antisaloon League."

The liquor interests attempt to support their opposition by assigning but one reason, and that reason is that the bill interferes with the citizens' rights and personal liberty; but the Supreme Court of the United States has long since expressly overruled such an objection.

The sale of intoxicating liquors "is not one of the rights growing out of citizenship of the United States." (Bartemeyer v. Iowa, 18 Wall., 129.)

The following are quotations from decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States:

Mr. Chief Justice Taney:

"It is equally clear that the power of Congress over this subject does not extend further than the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the several States; and that beyond these limits the States have never surrendered their power over trade and commerce, and may still exercise it free from any controlling power on the part of the General Government. Every State therefore may regulate its own internal traffic according to its own judgment and upon its own views of the interest and well-being of its citizens." (License cases, 5 How., 574.)

The State "is not bound to furnish a market for it, nor to abstain from the passage of any law which it deems necessary or advisable to guard the health or morals of its citizens, although such law may discourage importation or diminish the profits of the importer or lessen the revenue of the General Government. And if any State deems the retail and internal traffic in ardent spirits injurious to its citizens and calculated to produce idleness, vice, or debauchery, I see nothing in the Constitution of the United States to prevent it from regulating and restraining the traffic or from prohibiting it altogether, if it thinks proper." (Id., 576, 577.)

Mr. Justice McLean:

"The acknowledged police power of a State extends often to the destruction of property. A nuisance may be abated. Everything prejudicial to the health or morals of a city may be removed. * * * It is a power essential to self-preservation, and exists, necessarily, in every organized community. It is, indeed, the law of nature, and is possessed by man in his individual capacity. He may resist that which does him harm, whether he be assailed by an assassin or approached by poison. And it is the settled construction of every regulation of commerce that under the sanction of its general laws no man can introduce into a community * * * anything which contaminates its morals or endangers its safety. * * * Individuals in the enjoyment of their own rights must be careful not to injure the rights of others." (Id., 589.)

Mr. Justice Grier:

"It is not necessary for the sake of justifying the State legislation now under consideration to array the appalling statistics of misery, pauperism, and crime which have their origin in the use or abuse of ardent spirits. The police power, which is exclusively in the States, is alone competent to the correction of these great evils, and all measures of restraint or prohibition necessary to effect the purpose are within the scope of that authority. There is no conflict of power or of legislation as between the States and the United States; each is acting within its sphere and for the public good; and if a loss of revenue should accrue to the United States from a diminished consumption of ardent spirits, she will be the gainer a thousandfold in the health, wealth, and happiness of the people. (Id., 631.)

Mr. Justice Woodbury:

"How can they (the States) be sovereign within their respective spheres without power to regulate all their internal commerce, as well as police, and direct how, when, and where it shall be conducted in articles intimately connected either with public morals or public safety or the public prosperity?" (Id., 628.)

Mr. Justice Harlan:

In Mugler v. Kansas (123 U. S., 660) it was insisted that, under our system of government, the State may not control the tastes, appetites, habits, and drink of the people except as to the individual's conduct to others, leaving him sole judge as to all that only affects himself.

Mr. Justice Harlan said:

"It will be observed that the proposition and the argument made in support of it equally concede that the right to manufacture drink for one's personal use is subject to the condition that such manufacture does not endanger or affect the rights of others. If such manufacture does prejudicially affect the rights and interests of the community, it follows, from the very premises, that society has the power to protect itself by legislation against the injurious consequences of that business.

"Government may require 'each citizen to so conduct himself and so use his own property as not unnecessarily to injure another.'" (Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S., 113, 124.)

Mr. Justice Bradley:

"If the public safety or the public morals require the discontinuance of any manufacture or traffic, the hand of the legislature can not be stayed from providing for its discontinuance by any incidental inconvenience which individuals or corporations may suffer. All rights are held subject to the police power of the State."

The police power of the State extends "to the protection of the lives, health, and property of the citizens, and to the preservation of good order and public morals." (Beer Co. v. Mass., 97 U. S., 25, 32, 33.)

Mr. Chief Justice Waite:

The law of a State prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors is not repugnant to the Constitution of the United States. That question is now no longer open in this court. (Foster v. Kansas, 112 U. S., 201–206.)

Mr. Justice Lamar:

The State has the right to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors within her limits, and prohibit all sale and traffic in them in the State, "and such legislation by a State is a clear exercise of her undisputed police power, which does not abridge the liberties or immunities of citizens of the United States nor deprive any person of property without due process of law." (Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S., 1.)

Mr. Justice Shiras:

"The evils attending the vice of intemperance in the use of spirituous liquors are so great that a natural reluctance is felt in appearing to interfere, even on constitutional grounds, with any law whose avowed purpose is to restrict or prevent the mischief." (Scott v. Donald, 165 U. S., 58, 91.)

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller:

"The Constitution does not provide that interstate commerce shall be free, but, by the grant of this exclusive power to regulate it, it was left free except as Congress might impose restraint. Therefore it has been determined that the failure of Congress to exercise this exclusive power in any case is an expression of its will that the subject shall be free from restriction or impositions upon it by the several States." (In re Rahrer, 140 U. S., 545, 555.)

"No reason is perceived why, if Congress chooses to provide that certain designated subjects of interstate commerce shall be governed by a rule which divests them of that character at an earlier period of time than would otherwise be the case, it is not within its competency to do so." (Id., 562.)

"All property in this country is held under the implied obligation that the owner's use of it shall not be injurious to the community." (Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 665.)

"By the settled doctrines of this court the police power extends at least to the protection of the lives, the health, and the property of the community against the injurious exercise by any citizen of his own rights." (Patterson v. Kentucky, 97 U. S., 501, 504.)

"A prohibition simply upon the use of property for purposes that are declared by valid legislation to be injurious to the health, morals, or safety of the community can not, in any just sense, be deemed a taking or an appropriation of property for the public benefit. Such legislation does not disturb the owner in the control or use of his property for lawful purposes, nor restrict his right to dispose of it, but is only a declaration by the State that its use by anyone for certain forbidden purposes is prejudicial to the public interests." (Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 668, 669.)

"There is no justification for holding that the State, under the guise merely of police regulations, is here aiming to deprive the citizen of his constitutional rights, for we can not shut out of view the fact, within the knowledge of all, that the public health, the public morals, and the public safety may be endangered by the general use of intoxicating drinks; nor the fact, established by statistics accessible to everyone, that the idleness, disorder, pauperism, and crime existing in the country are, in some degree at least, traceable to this evil. If, therefore, a State deems the absolute prohibition of the manufacture and sale within her limits of intoxicating liquors for other than medical, scientific, and manufacturing purposes to be necessary to the peace and security of society, the courts can not, without usurping legislative functions, override the will of the people as thus expressed by their chosen representatives. * * * And so, if, in the judgment of the legislature, the manufacture of intoxicating liquors for the maker's own use as a beverage would tend to cripple, if it did not defeat, the effort to guard the community against the evils attending the excessive use of such liquors, it is not for the courts, upon their views as to what is best and safest for the community, to disregard the legislative determination of that question." (Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S., 662.)

SPEECH OF SENATOR JOSEPH WELDON BAILEY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have had a great many requests for copies of the speech delivered in the Senate by Senator Bailey on the 2d day of January last. I am unable to supply the calls that have been made on me for copies, and I ask that it be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Senator from Virginia say that the speech was delivered in the Senate?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes; the speech was delivered in the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I wish to say to the Senator that the Joint Committee on Printing have refused at all times to have printed as a public document any speech delivered in either House of Congress.

I may state while I am on my feet the reason for this action. If we undertake to do that, then any Member of the House or Senate could deliver a speech upon any subject and have it not only in the RECORD but printed as a public document and send it, without expense to the Senator or Representative, to any part of the country he saw fit.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator objects, of course that disposes of the matter. I might say that I have had personal requests for perhaps as many as 20 copies of that speech, and I am unable to supply them.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to think——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I thought if it could be printed so that this demand could be supplied it would be very agreeable to me. That is all there was in it, so far as I am concerned, and the objection disposes of it.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want the Senator to think that it is a captious objection.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Not at all.

Mr. SMOOT. I want simply to say that the joint committee have agreed upon that course and have followed it out strictly so far.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I understand the situation. I am not thinking that it is a captious objection at all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. LAHA, executive clerk, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts and joint resolutions:

On February 1, 1913:

S. J. Res. 158. Joint resolution approving the plan, design, and location for a Lincoln memorial.

On February 3, 1913:

S. J. Res. 157. Joint resolution to enable the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay the necessary expenses of the inaugural ceremonies of the President of the United States on March 4, 1913;

S. 6919. An act to amend subchapter 2 of chapter 19 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia;

S. 7508. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to reincorporate and preserve all the corporate franchises and property rights of the de facto corporation, known as the German Orphan Asylum Association of the District of Columbia"; and

S. 1072. An act to amend section 895 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia.

PUNISHMENT OF MURDER IN THE DISTRICT (S. DOC. NO. 1062).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying bill, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

To the Senate:

In response to the resolution of the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring) of January 30, 1913, I return herewith Senate bill No. 7162, entitled "An act to amend section 801 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia."

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1913.

OFFICERS FOR AVIATION DUTY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no further morning business, the morning business is closed.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Jersey rise for morning business?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I rose for inquiry as to a matter regarding a bill which was passed yesterday, the bill (H. R. 17256) to fix the status of officers of the Army and Navy detailed for aviation duty, and to increase the efficiency of the aviation service. I wish to offer an amendment to that bill at the proper time. Would it be proper at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain a motion affecting the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I presume I should move a recall of the bill from the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be necessary for the Senator to enter a motion to reconsider the bill and ask for its recall.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. If that be proper at this time, I ask respectfully a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can enter a motion to that effect and move to recall the bill.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I enter the motion, then.

Mr. CULBERSON. Will it not be necessary to recall the bill from the House?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was about to state——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I move that the Senate request the House to return House bill 17256.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves the recall from the House of the bill indicated by him, with a view to its reconsideration by the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator from New Jersey what is the bill to which he refers?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It is the bill (H. R. 17256) to fix the status of officers of the Army and Navy detailed for aviation duty, and to increase the efficiency of the aviation service.

Mr. SMOOT. That bill was passed yesterday.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It was passed yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey to request the return from the House of Representatives of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Now, I desire to offer——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion in reference to the bill is not in order until the bill shall have been returned to the Senate by the House of Representatives.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 25002. The bill was brought to the attention of the Senate yesterday upon the call of the calendar.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. Mr. President, I want to say that so far as any objection I made to the bill on yesterday is concerned I withdraw it. I presume the bill to which the Senator from Iowa refers is the same bill which I asked on yesterday be carried over, is it not?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Maryland. I withdraw the objection to the bill I then made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 25002) to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. Let the bill be read for information, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill, but was interrupted by——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, that is sufficient; I now remember the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, may I suggest in a moment what the bill is?

Mr. CULBERSON. I have no objection to the consideration of the bill. I recalled the bill after a portion of it had been read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think it is due to state to the Senate what the bill proposes to do. The act of 1894 made unlawful certain combinations and conspiracies substantially as the antitrust law does. Section 73 of that act is not amended by this proposed act in any other way than by inserting the words "as agent or principal." Those words are not very material, but it was thought better to insert them.

I will state the chief amendment proposed in section 76 of that act. Section 76 gave to the Government the right to seize property that was being transported from State to State in violation of the terms of section 73. Articles that were imported into the United States under such a combination or conspiracy were not included in the act of 1894, and the only purpose of this amendment is to enable the Government more effectively to administer the law by giving it the power to seize and confiscate articles coming into the United States which would be in violation of section 73.

I think there can be no objection to the proposed legislation. It is to correct a weakness in the law that has been discovered in certain prosecutions which have heretofore been instituted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated in their order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask that the first committee amendment shall be disagreed to, because it was made without remembering that the act of 1894 did not receive the approval of the President, but became a law without his approval. Therefore that amendment should be disagreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary will be stated.

The first amendment was, on page 1, line 4, before the word "August," to strike out "of" and insert "approved," so as to read:

That section 73 and section 76 of the act approved August 27, 1894, etc.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary was, on page 1, line 5, after the words "eighteen hundred and ninety-four," to insert "entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes'"; in line 7, after the word "same," to strike out "is" and insert "are"; on page 2, line 21, after the word "property," to strike out "owner" and insert "owned"; in line 23, before the word "and" and after the word "thereof," to strike out the parenthesis marks; in line 24, after the word "Act," to strike out "and" and insert "imported into and being within the United States or"; and on page 3, line 1, after the word "transportation," to strike out "from a foreign country into any State, or," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 73. That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations either of whom, as agent or principal, is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter. Every person who is or shall hereafter be engaged in the importation of goods or any commodity from any foreign country in violation of this section of this act, or who shall combine or conspire with another to violate the same, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any court of the United States such person shall be fined in a sum not less than $100 and not exceeding $5,000, and shall be further punished by imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, for a term not less than 3 months nor exceeding 12 months."

"SEC. 76. That any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy, and being the subject thereof, mentioned in section 73 of this act, imported into and being within the United States or being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to or from a Territory or the District of Columbia, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether or not this bill applies to anything but violations of the Sherman antitrust law?

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not. The act of 1894 provides:

SEC. 73. That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations either of whom is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter.

That is made unlawful. The act, in a subsequent section, limited the power of the Government to seize property that was owned in violation of law and that was being used in violation of law to property being transported from one State to another, and did not include property that was imported into the United States and had not passed beyond the limits of the State into which it was imported. For instance, property coming into New York under the act of 1894 and owned illegally, as I have read, if it were passed from New York to New Jersey would be liable to seizure, but if it remained in the city of New York it could not be seized. This proposed act is intended to give the Government the same power to take the property before it enters into transportation between the States that it now has to take it if it does enter into transportation between the States.

Mr. GRONNA. So that the property which comes into this country in violation of the Sherman antitrust law would be subject to seizure under that law but under no other law?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is a little difference between the antitrust law and the act of 1894, although they are intended to carry out the same general policy. The section which we are now proposing to amend refers only to the goods that are condemned under section 73 of the act of 1894.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee to the title of the bill will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act approved August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the title as proposed to be amended. I ask him if he does not think the word "approved," the first word in the third line from the end, should be changed to the word "of"?

Mr. CUMMINS. The bill has been so amended. The amendment reported by the committee in that respect has been disagreed to because that act was not approved by the President, but was allowed to become a law without his approval.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. An amendment was made in line 4, on the first page of the bill, but not in the title in the place I have indicated, in the third line from the end.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true. That amendment to the title should be made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the amended title as reported by the committee it is proposed to strike out the word "approved" and insert "of," before the word "August," so as to read: "A bill to amend section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled 'An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes.'"

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amended title as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Now, Mr. President, the bill having been passed, I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, upon request of the Senator from Connecticut, the bill as passed will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill as passed is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 73 and section 76 of the act of August 27, 1894, entitled "An act to reduce taxation, to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 73. That every combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is hereby declared to be contrary to public policy, illegal, and void when the same is made by or between two or more persons or corporations either of whom, as agent or principal, is engaged in importing any article from any foreign country into the United States, and when such combination, conspiracy, trust, agreement, or contract is intended to operate in restraint of lawful trade, or free competition in lawful trade or commerce, or to increase the market price in any part of the United States of any article or articles imported or intended to be imported into the United States, or of any manufacture into which such imported article enters or is intended to enter. Every person who is or shall hereafter be engaged in the importation of goods or any commodity from any foreign country in violation of this section of this act, or who shall combine or conspire with another to violate the same, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof in any court of the United States such person shall be fined in a sum not less than $100 and not exceeding $5,000, and shall be further punished by imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, for a term not less than 3 months nor exceeding 12 months."

"SEC. 76. That any property owned under any contract or by any combination, or pursuant to any conspiracy, and being the subject thereof, mentioned in section 73 of this act, imported into and being within the United States or being in the course of transportation from one State to another, or to or from a Territory or the District of Columbia, shall be forfeited to the United States, and may be seized and condemned by like proceedings as those provided by law for the forfeiture, seizure, and condemnation of property imported into the United States contrary to law."

CONNECTICUT RIVER DAM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, has morning business closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business has closed.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to prefer a request for unanimous consent before the morning business is closed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will consider it open for that purpose.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask the Secretary to read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement which I handed to him a moment ago.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Thursday, February 6, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 8033, calendar No. 1001, authorizing the construction of a dam across the Connecticut River, and before adjournment on that legislative day will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, all amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill through regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

This agreement shall not interfere with the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on January 11, 1913, concerning Senate bill 4043, to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases, nor with appropriation bills, conference reports, or the consideration of the commemorative resolutions which are on the calendar for Saturday, February 8.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the proposed unanimous-consent agreement is the same, I presume, as that submitted yesterday morning.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; it was read from the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, Mr. President, I give notice that I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill to-morrow, on the return of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. NELSON].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The notice will be entered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I think perhaps it may be well to have the parliamentary status of this bill determined before we proceed any further with its consideration. Two reports have been filed—one was filed for the committee by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]; the other was filed, signed by a majority of the committee, though in this case called the "minority report." The status, therefore, is that a majority of the Committee on Commerce file a report proposing to strike from the bill, as proposed by the Senator from Ohio, a certain proviso. When this bill comes before the Senate I should like to know who will have charge of the bill, whether or not it will be the minority or majority of the committee?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is not now before the Senate. The Senator from Connecticut simply gave notice that at a certain time he would ask that it be taken up.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I misunderstood the Senator. We can determine that question, then, when the bill comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Secretary to state the notice which the Senator from Connecticut gave?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reporter will please read it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I can state it again, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reporter can read it.

The reporter read as follows:

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Then, Mr. President, I give notice that I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill to-morrow upon the return of the chairman of the Committee on Commerce [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no doubt that that request will be granted by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will say that if it is not, I will call up the bill myself.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought the Senator was through.

Mr. BURTON rose.

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I should be ready to make that motion now, but the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], made an earnest request that action be not taken on the bill until his return. He will return to-morrow morning. In any event, I give notice that whether the bill is brought up for consideration or not I shall seek to address the Senate on the bill immediately after the close of the routine morning business to-morrow.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I shall not oppose the order which is to be moved by such concert of action; but I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that I am perfectly willing that the bill shall be made the unfinished business.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That would be the effect if the motion prevailed to proceed to its consideration and the debate upon it continued until after 2 o'clock, as I understand.

Mr. BORAH. That depends upon the hour at which the motion is made.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection whatever to the consideration of this bill, but I want it to come at a time when we can give it some consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator and I are entirely in accord in that respect.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming for a moment.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, at an earlier day conferees were appointed on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], who was unavoidably called away and who will be away for some time, requests that his place upon the conference committee be filled, and I ask the Chair to fill it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the statement of the Senator from Wyoming, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER] will be excused from service upon the conference committee, and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] will be appointed in his place.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. FOSTER], who is detained from the Chamber by illness in his family. I therefore withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MASSEY] and will allow my vote to stand. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. WATSON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRIGGS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THORNTON. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. FOSTER] on account of illness in his family, and also that he is paired with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 4, 1913.

The House met at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art the God and Father of all men, who hearest and answerest prayer, take away from us unrighteous thoughts, ignoble desires, selfish ambitions, that we may dwell with our fellow men in the spirit of brotherhood, striving in our daily life to do unto them as we would have them do unto us. In the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

J. P. CORNES—LEAVE TO WITHDRAW PAPERS.

Mr. DANFORTH, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of J. P. Cornes (H. R. 21555, Sixtieth Congress), no adverse report having been made thereon.

RATIFICATION BY DELAWARE OF INCOME-TAX AMENDMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the secretary of state of Delaware announcing the passage of the general assembly of that State of a concurrent resolution ratifying the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States relative to the income tax.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, H. R. 28499.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 28499) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, with Mr. RODDENBERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose on the day it was last considering this bill the committee was dividing on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER]. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 46, line 14, strike out "$1,200" and insert in lieu thereof "$1,300."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the amendment will be withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Birney and annex, Brookland, Bryan, Curtis, Dennison, Force, Gage, Gales, Garfield, Garnet, Grant, Grover Cleveland, Henry, Johnson and annex, Langdon, Lincoln, Lovejoy, Miner, Monroe and addition, Peabody, Seaton, Sumner, Webster, Strong John Thomson Schools, 24 janitors, at $720 each; 24 laborers, at $300 each; in all, $24,480.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill why it was necessary to increase the janitors from 20 to 24 in this department?

Mr. BURLESON. To serve in new school buildings that have been brought into commission since the last appropriation bill was passed.

Mr. FOWLER. What additional schools have been instituted?

Mr. BURLESON. The Ross School, the J. Ormond Wilson Normal School, the Randle Highlands School, and, I think, one other.

Mr. FOWLER. There are no additional or new janitors on account of increases in numbers at old schools, are there?

Mr. BURLESON. We increased the compensation allowed to a number of janitors because of the earnest recommendation of a special committee that had been appointed by the District Committee, which made an investigation of the janitor service.

Mr. FOWLER. You have not increased the salaries of the janitors in these schools in this paragraph?

Mr. BURLESON. Not in this particular paragraph.

Mr. FOWLER. The increase in the number was the only question that was troubling me. I did not know what was the occasion for increasing the number.

Mr. BURLESON. The compensation allowed these janitors was not increased, because it was not estimated for and was not asked for by the school authorities. The increase in the compensation of a number of janitors was because of the necessity arising from the fact that new school buildings had been brought into service.

Mr. FOWLER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the event of the absence of any engineer, assistant engineer, janitor, assistant janitor, laborer, fireman, or caretaker at any time during school sessions the board of education is hereby authorized to appoint a substitute, who shall be paid the salary of the position in which employed, and the amount paid to such substitute shall be deducted from the salary of the absent employee.

In all, $122,940.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire if, in line 9, before the word "absent," it would not be well to insert the word "unauthorized"?

Mr. BURLESON. I think the amendment is not necessary, although I have no objection to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am not insisting on it. I notice in line 11 it is only to apply during school sessions. I think there has to be a janitor around in vacation time.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that an unauthorized absence on the part of these engineer employees would mean that he had severed his connection with the school.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; they may have been given a vacation.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield, I understand the purpose of this is to appoint a substitute and have the substitute paid in the absence of the engineer. It is to save the doubling up of salaries.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I only called the chairman's attention to it; I have no criticism to make.

Mr. BURLESON. In the event of the absence of the engineer without authority there would be no question but that the school board could put in a substitute and pay him a salary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical inspectors: Chief medical inspector of public schools, $1,800; 12 medical inspectors of public schools, 1 of whom shall be a woman, 2 of whom shall be dentists, and 4 of whom shall be of the colored race, at $500 each; in all, $7,800: Provided, That said inspectors shall be appointed by the commissioners only after competitive examination, and shall have had at least three years' experience in the practice of medicine or dentistry in the District of Columbia, and shall perform their duties under the direction of the health officer and according to rules formulated from time to time by him, which shall be subject to the approval of the board of education and the commissioners.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order that this is not authorized by law. I will reserve the point of order for the present.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a letter from Dr. Woodward, health officer, in explanation of the creation of this new office.

The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
HEALTH DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 9, 1913.

Hon. ALBERT S. BURLESON,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: As stated to you this morning, I am very much interested in the medical inspection of schools and hope that something can be done this year to make our service more efficient.

There are now 10 medical inspectors and 2 dental inspectors, each a part-time employee. No adequate provision has ever been made for the supervision of their work, and no provision has even been made for following up its results through school nurses. The pending tentative appropriation bill marks, therefore, in my judgment, a step in the right direction, inasmuch as it does provide for efficient supervision.

The basic principle upon which the medical inspection of schools in the District of Columbia is organized is embodied in section 1 of the regulations governing the service, which is as follows:

"SEC. 1. No pupil will be permitted to attend the public schools of the District of Columbia who is suffering from any defect or disease which renders his presence materially detrimental to the welfare or the safety of other pupils, nor will any pupil be permitted to attend school when such attendance will materially jeopardize his own health and the condition out of which such jeopardy arises is of a temporary character."

During the fiscal year 1912 the 10 medical inspectors made 8,258 visits to schools and 37 to the homes of pupils. The total number of examinations of pupils by medical inspectors was 10,603. The pupils examined were in 6,328 cases in attendance at school at the time of examination, and of these pupils 725 were found to be in such physical condition as to render it advisable that they be excluded. The pupils not in actual attendance at school at the time of examination were those who had been absent for varying periods and various causes and who were examined merely to determine whether they were in condition to resume their school duties, and all were readmitted. The usual examinations were made of applicants for admission to the normal schools.

By confining the work of each of the two recently appointed dental inspectors to one school at a time instead of having them go from school to school as medical inspectors do, there has been no loss of time on the streets. As a result, these two inspectors, during the school year, examined 4,165 pupils. Of these pupils 3,441 had teeth with 17,128 cavities, 9,012 of which had progressed so far as to be in need of filling at the time of examination. Eight hundred and thirty-one pupils had lost one or more teeth, of which 1,687 were of the second or permanent set. Eighty-six pupils had abscesses. Reexaminations were made of 1,600 pupils, and in only 180 cases had the dental work recommended by the dental inspector been done.

I append a table showing the number of children excluded from school and the principal causes for such exclusions by reason of the work of the medical inspection of schools and under authority of section 1 of the regulations governing the service set forth above. Most of these children excluded, probably all of them, would have remained in school to the detriment of other pupils, to their own detriment, or possibly to the detriment of the community had it not been for the medical-inspection service.

Yours, very truly,

W. C. WOODWARD,
Health Officer.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, this is clearly subject to a point of order. It is the creation of a new bureau, and it is one, if it should be tolerated at all, that should not be under the school board but under the board of health and come under that head.

On yesterday I noticed on the calendar on motions to discharge committees a bill to authorize the appointment of dental surgeons in the United States Navy. It certainly seems to me that the taxpayers throughout the length and breadth of this Nation should not be called upon to pay for the physicians who render medical service to all those who happen to be within the school age in the District of Columbia. Here there is a minimum school age, but there is no maximum school age. The school reports show persons in attendance as old as 66 years. So if a man wants his teeth fixed free of charge, all he has to do is to go to school one day and then have dental services free. If he is not well, no matter how old he is, all that is necessary is for him to go to school one day, be subjected to this medical examination, sent away from school, have a physician paid for out of the Public Treasury, then have nurses, paid for out of the Public Treasury, to go and nurse him. I say there is no warrant of law for anything of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question. If this is only an instrumentality for protecting the thousands of children of the public schools against contagion and the contracting of disease, why is it not inherent within the power of the Appropriation Committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It more properly belongs to the board of health. The board of health may take cognizance of it, and no doubt would have authority to go there, but I maintain that the school board is clothed with no such power.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the medical inspectors are under the direction of the chief health officer of the District. The gentleman from Kentucky is laboring under a misapprehension as to the purpose and effect of this provision. It does not provide for free dental service; it does not provide for free medical attendance; it provides for the inspection of the mouths of children, with a view to ascertaining whether their teeth need attention, and if they ascertain there is necessity for attention to report that fact to the parents. There is no burden on the treasury of the District to supply this dental service.

It is simply an examination, and upon that examination, if an unhealthy condition is discovered, there is a report made by this medical inspector to the parent that the child's mouth needs attention, or if an illness is discovered there is simply a report made to the health officer, and the health officer requires the withdrawal of the child from the school. There is no free medical attendance furnished at all under this paragraph of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Texas a question. How is the vaccination of school children supervised here at the present time?

Mr. BURLESON. It is all under this paragraph in the bill. If it is ascertained that a child has the smallpox or the chicken pox or any contagious disease, that child is immediately sent home and a report made to the health officer of the fact that the child has a disease, and the parent is advised, and then the parent provides medical attention for the child.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is, under the law, the duty of the officers of the board of health to ascertain these facts for themselves directly and not indirectly through these sinecures herein provided for. If these people are to be paid to examine their teeth, why not have them paid to examine their feet? You can go from one end of the pupil to the other, and there is just as much authority for one as there is for the other.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that there is authority for examination of the feet of the child. If the child has the itch and it is discovered, a report of that fact is made to the parent of the child, and the child is excluded from the school, and that is the only means of protecting the school from an outbreak of contagious diseases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, every State in the Union has a board of health, I believe, and all of these quarantines and getting a diseased child out of the schools is done by the board of health; and I hope, before we have gone a very great deal further in the bill, to show the importance of why this item should come under the board of health and not under the school board. I hope to be able to show that this is designedly put under the head of the school board instead of under the board of health. That we will reach by and by.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that under the wording of the paragraph, if he will turn to it, he will see that these officers shall perform their duties under the direction of the health officer and according to the rules formulated from time to time by him.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If so, then it ought to be paid for out of the appropriation for the health department and not out of this appropriation.

Mr. BURLESON. That merely looks to the arrangement of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I beg to differ with the gentleman and say that there is considerably more in it than the mere arrangement of the bill. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire to be heard?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I think there ought to be a word of explanation to the committee. I want to state that these inspectors are under the direction of the health officer of the District of Columbia. This is the medical inspection that is furnished to protect the children of the public schools from an outbreak of contagious disease, and the gentleman from Kentucky is mistaken when he thinks that it affords free dental service or free medical service. All that this paragraph requires or all that it authorizes is that these medical inspectors shall examine the school children from time to time, and if a contagious disease is discovered, or if an unwholesome condition of their teeth is discovered, a report is made by the medical inspector to the health officer, and the health officer advises the parent of the child as to the facts. I think it should not be stricken out.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I simply wanted to suggest to the gentleman that I know personally that the educational institutions generally throughout the country, the teachers' associations, and so forth, are heartily in favor of this medical inspection as it is provided in this bill.

Mr. BURLESON. That is true. Every progressive city in the United States affords this service for the children.

Mr. WILLIS. Absolutely, without exception.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The duties of these medical inspectors being as stated by the gentleman, what is the special advantage of employing a chief medical inspector?

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman from Illinois had been here a moment ago——

Mr. MANN. I was here a moment ago and I heard the letter read.

Mr. BURLESON. I had a letter read from the chief health officer.

Mr. MANN. I heard it read.

Mr. BURLESON. They have been insisting for a number of years that we did not have as adequate medical inspection as the city should be given. The health officer was very insistent that he should have a chief inspector in order that he might supervise the work of the other medical inspectors for the purpose of securing more efficient service and to cover a larger number of pupils than have heretofore been covered by the medical inspection.

Mr. MANN. I heard the letter read from the health officer, but that does not answer the question. What will this chief medical inspector of public schools do?

Mr. BURLESON. The chief medical inspector is to devote his entire time to this work——

Mr. MANN. But what is he to do?

Mr. BURLESON. Why, he performs the duties of an inspector as well as supervises the other medical inspectors under the direction of the chief health officer.

Mr. MANN. I take it the chief medical inspector himself is not going to go around to all the schools and examine pupils as to disease or the condition of their teeth. Is he to be a sort of detective and see whether the others do their work? If so, you will require one detective for each inspector.

Mr. BURLESON. No; he is not to perform service as a detective, but he is to visit all the schools and is to devote his entire time to this work. He has to look after the other inspectors and see that they are properly discharging their duties under the requirements.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me, with due respect to the gentleman and the health officer, if he wants to get additional service performed he had better divide the $1,800 among the inspectors rather than have a chief medical inspector who probably would have very little to do with the work of medical inspection.

Mr. BURLESON. On the contrary, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that he is to devote his entire time to this service, whereas the others only devote a part of their time to the service, and I am free to say that we followed the advice and suggestions made by the chief health officer.

Mr. MANN. That is the best reply the gentleman has given.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill why it is that this new position should be created when the bill provides that all of these medical inspectors shall perform their duties under the direction of the health officer, there being a health office department in this city?

Mr. BURLESON. It is utterly impossible for one health officer to inspect these schools. He must have assistants to aid him in the proper discharge of his duty.

Mr. FOWLER. You provide for 12.

Mr. BURLESON. We need more.

Mr. FOWLER. And you provide for a chief inspector.

Mr. BURLESON. We need a chief inspector for the reasons I have given, and I will read to the gentleman what the superintendent of schools had to say on this subject:

> Dr. DAVIDSON. Dr. Woodward, the health officer of the District, recommends that this item be recast, and that it shall provide for a chief medical inspector of the public schools at a salary of $1,800 a year. The medical inspection of the schools is under the guidance and direction of the health officer, who has from the very beginning felt that the work of inspection needed closer supervision than it is now receiving. He now desires to place the work under a chief medical inspector whose whole time shall be devoted to the supervision of the staff of medical inspectors and their work in the schools.

Now, if I were to talk a week I could not make more of an explanation than I have offered, and I ask the gentleman to permit us to vote on this proposition and proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to delay the House one moment in the consideration of this bill. I realize the shortness of the session and the amount of work to be performed, and yet if this chief medical inspector is created here it appears to me that he rather conflicts with the efficiency of the health department of this city.

It is a criticism of the health department. You have already had this medical inspection bureau of 12 members since 1904, and now you propose to create a head while these men have been acting under a head, to wit, the health department of the city.

Mr. BURLESON. But he can not give it that close supervision which he thinks it should have.

Mr. FOWLER. Then why not have the chief as the health officer and increase the force if it is inadequate?

Mr. BURLESON. Because the health officer thinks this office should be created, and in his recommendation he is supported by the unanimous action of the District Commissioners and the school board.

Mr. FOWLER. You are getting too many big men here at the expense of the little men. One health department appears to me to be sufficient if there is a sufficient amount of assistants under this department.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] that it is analogous to having a chief of police and inspectors of police under the chief of police.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] has expired.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word before we vote on this provision for the appropriation of $7,800 for the medical inspection of the children in the schools of this District of Columbia. This is an important item, and is one that ought to have serious consideration. We know this, that children are liable to a great many contagious diseases, and then doctors are continually finding children among a lot of other children who are so afflicted, and it is important that there should be a head of this department so there may be a proper inspection of school children at the regular time, when their attention may be called to it by the teacher. And I think this is such an important proposition that it ought not to be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. This paragraph provides that these medical inspectors shall perform their duties under the direction of the health officer and according to the rules formulated by him from time to time. Does not that give a head?

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say this, that in here provision is made for one chief medical inspector, who is supposed to give his whole time to this work, at $1,800 per year. Now, I want to submit to my colleague that a salary of $1,800 a year, living in the city of Washington, for a competent physician who has had three years' practice here, is not an exorbitant one.

Mr. FOWLER. I am not complaining of the expense.

Mr. FOSTER. It is necessary that some one should be at the head of this work. Now, of course, we have the health department, and I want to submit to my colleague that the health department of the city of Washington is not an extravagant one. There is a good deal of work to be done so that the city shall have that proper attention which shall keep the city in a sanitary condition so that it shall be as healthy as possible.

Mr. FOWLER. Do you not think that if these medical examiners were under the health officer that the health officer constitutes a chief sufficient to give all proper instruction?

Mr. FOSTER. I think in the health department of the city that may be true, and yet I submit to my colleague that in the matter of thousands of little children, some of them coming from the kind of houses in which they live, this is an important matter. It is of such importance that I do not think it should be stricken from the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I request recognition in order to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] a question. He has given a good deal of time and attention to matters pertaining to the health of the people of this city during his service here. Under the present law is it not the duty of the health officer to look after the sanitation of the school buildings and see that they are kept in proper condition?

Mr. FOSTER. I think so. I think it very necessary we should have some head of the department to do that.

Mr. DYER. It is the duty of the health officer, is it not, to look after the sanitation now?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; he is the head of all of it.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is familiar with the health department here. Its work is limited. For instance, the health department does not give any attention practically to the public hospitals and institutions. Those are under the direction of what they call the Board of Charities.

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir.

Mr. DYER. And that the health commissioner has nothing else to do except to look after sanitation, practically?

Mr. FOSTER. I will state to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] that if he gives that the attention it should have it will take his entire time, because no doubt the gentleman realizes, from his service on the Committee on the District of Columbia and visiting different parts of the city, that it is very necessary some one from the health department should visit these different places and try to keep the city in as sanitary a condition as possible.

Mr. DYER. I agree with the gentleman on that, Mr. Chairman. I further think that it is a bad precedent that has grown up here in the District of Columbia to have so many people unconnected, unresponsible to one another, looking after the health of the public. I believe that the responsibility should be centered, that it should be put into the hands of some one man, and that he should be held responsible for the sanitation and public health, including that of the schools. Inspectors should be furnished to assist him in this work, but some one should be held responsible to the public instead of dividing it up into half a dozen heads, with poor satisfaction in many instances.

Mr. FOSTER. This department is under the jurisdiction of the health officer.

Mr. DYER. And he is to be held primarily responsible?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly——

Mr. BURLESON. By the very terms of this paragraph.

Mr. DYER. That is what I am in favor of, and I will say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] that I think this whole health business in the District of Columbia should be put under one responsible head, instead of having a lot of men who have no responsibility looking after public institutions.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that the health office of the District of Columbia is under one officer, the health officer.

Mr. DYER. I am speaking of hospitals and the poor.

Mr. BURLESON. I am inclined to agree with the gentleman about that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to withdraw the motion to strike out, and offer an amendment to the paragraph by striking out "Chief medical inspector of public schools, $1,800" and changing the amount from "$7,800" to "$6,000." In other words, the substance of my amendment is to do away with the creation of this new office.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] withdraws his pro forma amendment and offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 48, lines 21 and 22, strike out the words "Chief medical inspector of public schools, $1,800" and change the amount in line 25 from "7,800" to "$6,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a division.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman did not rise soon enough. But I do not want to be captious, and I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Texas is right. A division is asked for.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 7, noes 15.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase and repair of tools, machinery, material, and books, and apparatus to be used in connection with instruction in manual training, and for incidental expenses connected therewith, $25,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Is that the paragraph under which the school-book item comes, or is it under the next—line 10—or where does it come?

Mr. ROUSE. On line 14, page 50.

Mr. BURLESON. It comes in a subsequent paragraph.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the pro forma amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For textbooks and school supplies for use of pupils of the first eight grades, who at the time are not supplied with the same, to be distributed by the superintendent of public schools under regulations to be made by the board of education of the District of Columbia, and for the necessary expenses of the purchase, distribution, and preservation of said textbooks and supplies, including one bookkeeper and custodian of textbooks and supplies, at $1,200, and one assistant, at $600, $65,000: Provided, That the board of education, in its discretion, is authorized to make exchanges of such books and other educational publications now on hand as may not be desirable for use.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the paragraph just read, page 50, line 25, the following: Provided further, That no money appropriated by this act shall be expended for the purpose of furnishing textbooks or any school supplies to any pupil whose parent is able to purchase them; and every parent shall be deemed able to so purchase unless the contrary appear by the sworn statement of the parent and to the satisfaction of the superintendent of public schools for the District of Columbia."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The point of order is not good. This is a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is reserved.

Mr. BURLESON. I will withdraw the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and let the committee pass upon the merits of the proposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The point of order is not good, because the amendment clearly comes within the Holman rule. The question is simply this, Mr. Chairman, as to whether the people all over this country shall be taxed for the purpose of buying schoolbooks for the children of the very many rich people who reside in the District of Columbia. I am unquestionably of the opinion that people who live in the District of Columbia, and especially those who are very rich, should buy schoolbooks for their own children and not compel a tax to be imposed upon all the country for that purpose.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman know of any number of rich people in the city of Washington who send their children to the public schools?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know who send their children, and I do not know who do not send them.

Mr. DYER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that in practically all the large cities now textbooks are furnished to the children of the public schools free by the people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That may be true, but where that is done the local taxpayers pay for it, while here the local taxpayers pay half of it and the taxpayers in every quarter of this Nation pay the other half.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman will agree with me that the people of Washington pay whatever proportion is taxed up against them.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; and it is the proportion that I am objecting to. I do not see any reason why anybody should want to make it possible to have the poor people in the States taxed to buy books for their own children and then contribute to the purchase of schoolbooks here for the rich. We are all willing to be taxed everywhere to purchase schoolbooks for the poor children, but not for the children of the rich.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to inquire of the gentleman what the practice is in his home section in regard to the furnishing of textbooks for children in the schools?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In the State of Kentucky the parent of every child who is able to furnish textbooks for his children must do so, and those who are not able to purchase them go to the county court judge and get them free of charge.

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to inquire of the gentleman, further, how that works out in practice?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It works admirably.

Mr. MURRAY. Will the gentleman inform the committee whether or not any considerable number of children in the public schools of his State are furnished textbooks free?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, yes; a very large number of them. Practically every negro in the State gets his schoolbooks free. Many of the white people and nearly all the negroes have their textbooks furnished free.

Mr. MURRAY. Has there been any agitation at any time of a proposition to have all the school children furnished with books at public expense?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; and the legislature refused to pass such a bill.

Mr. MURRAY. Recently?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; only a few years ago. But I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Massachusetts to this fact, that in his immediate locality and in mine a local tax is imposed to pay for the purchasing of schoolbooks for the children of that locality, while under this provision there is a tax levied upon the gentleman's locality and mine to pay for textbooks for children here in Washington.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes; but the objection the gentleman makes is a fundamental one against the system in vogue here. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, and he might well, and I think in the course of time he will, work out some plan by which we may escape from all that sort of thing; but it does seem to me to be rather unwise to single out a particular object of taxation like this for reduction, while we permit the existing system to remain with respect to other things.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have not found one so easily selected as this. Neither have I found any other which is so horribly discriminative as this.

Mr. MURRAY. I understand, from a hasty reading of the gentleman's amendment, that those children who bring certificates that their parents can not furnish them, and are not financially able to furnish them, with books are to be given books for their children free.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, yes.

Mr. MURRAY. Is not that likely to make a discrimination among the different pupils in schools which will be rather unfortunate?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, no; they do not have to go to the schoolroom to do it. All that is necessary is for the parent to go to the school board and there make a satisfactory showing that he is not able to buy the books. He will then get them free.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. MURRAY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MURRAY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. Chairman, it is seldom that I differ with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and I do not like to do so in this instance. It is because of that dislike that I have asked him these questions, in order to get clearly in my mind the proposition contained in his amendment. I have never known the time since my earliest school age in Massachusetts when there was such a discrimination among the pupils in the schools as this amendment would make.

Some years ago there was an agitation in my State on this subject, and the time came in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts when by law the textbooks in the public schools were furnished free. It was first proposed that those parents who were able to furnish their children with textbooks should be required to do so; but the fatal objection was made that that made a discrimination among the children and singled out perhaps one child in a schoolroom who was known as having parents who were financially unable to furnish textbooks, while perhaps sitting alongside of that child was another child who felt superior to him because his parents were financially able to purchase books.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I wonder if the gentleman has had time to make an analysis of the States that have laws providing for the furnishing of free textbooks and those that have not?

Mr. MURRAY. No, Mr. Chairman; I have not, because this amendment came up so suddenly that there was not time for me to obtain the information.

Mr. FARR. I can give the gentleman some information on that.

Mr. MURRAY. I have no information about that. I would that all States in the Union would take the stand that my own Commonwealth of Massachusetts has taken, because I am very sure that the plan we are now working under is working well. It is only recently that one man in a campaign was very severely criticized because he seemed to advocate a return to the old days of discrimination among the children.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I will yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask the gentleman if in his State where textbooks are furnished you have any trouble with reference to the children taking the textbooks home to use for the purpose of preparing their lessons for the next day?

Mr. MURRAY. That is what they are given them for.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not a fact that the control of the textbooks is left entirely with the teacher, and that it is wholly discretionary with the teacher?

Mr. MURRAY. Absolutely.

Mr. FOWLER. Is it not that way in this city now?

Mr. MURRAY. I am not sufficiently familiar with the practice in this city to answer the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. And do not the children have to go to the teacher and ask the teacher in order to get permission to take the book home to study?

Mr. MURRAY. That was the practice in my school days.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman think that system is a wise one?

Mr. MURRAY. It was wise enough in my day, because we could always get permission to take the books.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think that the children ought to have free use of the textbooks to take them home whenever they choose?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. FOWLER. Does not the gentleman think that furnishing the public textbooks without the free use is a detriment instead of a working benefit?

Mr. MURRAY. In practice that is not the result of it at all. It was always perfectly easy for me to take home my schoolbooks when I had an ambitious inclination to do it. There was no difficulty about it whatever. If the gentleman believes the passage of this amendment would be to encourage education and make it possible to take home textbooks where it is not possible now, he certainly is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. FOWLER. I had an experience in this city, and I find on examination of children to be promoted to the higher grades this month only a very small percentage of them passed the examination.

Mr. MURRAY. That is most regrettable.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. Is it not a fact that free textbooks necessarily follow a compulsory system of education?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly; they go hand in hand.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to ask the gentleman, if it develops that only 12 States out of 48, one-quarter in the aggregate, has free textbooks, does not the gentleman think it is time enough to have free textbooks when a majority of the States adopt it?

Mr. MURRAY. Oh, no; I would not wait for that.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. MURRAY. Certainly.

Mr. COX. The question of free textbooks was a vital issue in my State during the last campaign, and the gentleman is discussing an interesting subject to me. I would like to ask him if he has any data as to how much it costs the State of Massachusetts to furnish free textbooks?

Mr. MURRAY. I have not the details as to the cost. It can be obtained from the annual reports of the various school boards of the cities and towns. I think I ought to say that some gentlemen seem to think there is going to be a financial loss to the cities and towns by reason of furnishing free textbooks. At the beginning of the school year every pupil is given him to take home a blank in the nature of a receipt for the books issued, and the parents of the children sign that receipt. If at the end of the school, or at any time during the term, the child may have lost or destroyed the books charged to him, the parent is compelled to pay for them before new books can be issued or before the child can continue with his classes. That is a reasonable regulation and nobody objects to it.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. It will be a decided step backward educationally and a humiliation to the people who are making a struggle to educate their children. Speaking from the standpoint of economy, I am certain that the District saves 20 per cent in the cost of books, without considering the additional life given to the textbook and the increased efficiency of the school work.

I have an amendment on my desk in favor of free textbooks to high-school pupils. I think they ought to be given to every high-school student. That is where the parents are having the hardest struggle to educate the children, and books ought to be free. We have had free textbooks in Pennsylvania since 1893. In one city, Pittsburgh, as the result of the law, in one year 3,000 children went into the public schools. The tendency was to increase the children in attendance in all grades, and in many cases the number attending high schools was doubled. Even in Massachusetts, where they have had compulsory education since the seventeenth century, one of the significant things following the adoption of free textbooks was an increase of 10 per cent in the attendance on high schools.

There is a benefit in many ways in free books. The knowledge of the benefits that follow free books is spreading all over the country, and in the course of a few years there will hardly be a State in the Union that will not furnish them free of charge to the pupils. It is more economical. They last longer. The efficiency in the schoolroom is greater. I recall an instance where there were 79 children out of 300 in attendance at a school who either did not have any books or not enough books. Think of the feelings of a child without a book sitting beside those having books and the inefficiency of the school work that must follow a condition like that.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FARR. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIS. I want to ask whether the gentleman has considered this fact, that if this amendment carries it puts the badge of dishonor on free books and makes it humiliating to the child who uses them.

Mr. FARR. Yes; decidedly. One child, because it is poor, getting its books free and the other having them bought by its parents, the child on that condition getting the free books is humiliated and its individuality weakened.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman how one child is to know how the other gets its books.

Mr. FARR. Oh, the gentleman can trust the child for that. It will know.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If there is anything in the gentleman's argument that there is humiliation carried with it, the child is not going to tell. Under my amendment all the parent has to do is to go before the school board and show his inability to buy, and then the school board turns over the books.

Mr. FARR. Why should a parent be compelled to go before the school board and show that he is unable to purchase school books?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, if a man is in the poorhouse, that humiliates him, and so on all along the line. Carried to its last analysis, if a man is poor, that humiliates him, and where is this socialism going to stop?

Mr. FARR. We do not want to subject the children who are not able to buy books to that humiliation. It is hurtful to the child.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The same reason would apply to the purchase of a suit of clothes.

Mr. FARR. I want to say that if the gentleman lived in a State where free books are furnished he would not offer an amendment of this kind. We had a provision in Pennsylvania whereby books could be furnished to indigent persons, but it was not practical. We enacted a law that in one day provided free school books and school supplies to a million children, with the result that there was a large increase in the attendance in the lower grades and the nearly doubling of the attendance in the high-school grades in various parts of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] is correct in his position that the line of development now is toward free textbooks, a necessary concomitant of compulsory education, beginning with the elementary grades and advancing toward the higher studies. An investigation of the educational conditions of this country would show a most startling situation with regard to the education of about 94 per cent of the American children. About 6 per cent get an education. Ninety-four per cent do not get an education. That is a broad statement, but it is essentially correct. The little instruction they do get is largely lacking in the elements that bear upon the great facts and laws of life—writing, arithmetic, spelling, and grammar—this is all. The average American child leaves school to-day before the age of 12. One of the important reasons why they leave is the question of supplying textbooks. In addition, the line of progress is for free textbooks in order that the State and the community may more carefully determine the nature of the instruction. The time has come when education in this country should include instruction along vocational and vital lines, and that can come best with—I do not say only with—the practice of providing free textbooks. For my part I propose to vote against this amendment for these fundamental reasons.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, just a word with reference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. For many years before we made provision in the District appropriation bill for free textbooks the State of Maryland had provided for free textbooks throughout all the elementary grades and the high schools. An agitation was started in the District of Columbia for free textbooks. A paragraph was embodied in this bill furnishing them for the grades. After a child passes from the grades to the high school the parent is required to purchase all the textbooks. That was before the law compelling compulsory education. After that law was passed the policy of furnishing free textbooks for the grade schools was continued just as it is carried in this bill. I can not for my life see how we are going to enforce the compulsory education law unless we furnish the children in the grades with free textbooks. [Applause.] Furthermore, gentlemen, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] struck the crux of this issue when they stated that if we adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] it would stigmatize the children of the poor. We all know that if this amendment is adopted that many, many children will avoid the schools because they do not want to be put in the attitude of asking for free textbooks when other children attending the schools are furnished textbooks by their parents. Personally I think we ought to furnish textbooks for the high schools, because I feel, as has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, there is a considerable percentage of the children who finish the grades and are unable to continue their education because they can not procure the necessary textbooks to enable them to attend the high schools.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Not now—but that would be a matter of legislation which we have not attempted upon this bill, and I shall make the point of order against the amendment when it is offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania because it is not authorized by law; but I do sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky will be voted down.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman.

Mr. BURLESON. Just for a question, because I want to get on with the bill.

Mr. J. M. C. SMITH. Will the gentleman please inform us what the average daily attendance of the schools is in the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. It is about 53,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out on line 14 and the beginning of line 15, page 50, the words "of the first eight grades."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 50, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words "of the first eight grades."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment on two grounds—that it is not authorized by law, and next that it increases the appropriation.

Mr. FARR. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. FARR. Mr. Chairman, I want to supplement my former remarks with the statement that, after all, the stock in trade of the poor boy is education. If we do not provide free books for him in these high schools, we are preventing hundreds of the young men and young women in Washington from getting a high-school education. Dr. Schaeffer, State superintendent of education of Pennsylvania, makes the assertion that the boy who does not get a high-school education is prevented from working in 40 different avocations. Now, I want to ask this intelligent Congress if we want to stand in the way of the American boy earning a livelihood in one of the 40 different avocations from which he would be precluded if he does not get a high-school education such as Washington so splendidly offers him?

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order for a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to keep the House long on this question, but I want to emphasize what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FARR] has said. A careful investigation has shown that if a boy stops school at the age of 14, at the age of 25 his average wage will be $2. If he stops at the age of 16, two years longer, at the age of 25 his average wage is $4; it has been doubled. Furthermore, a more extensive investigation shows that of the 10,000 leaders in America 7,700 are recruited out of 2½ per cent of our people who get a college education. It shows this, that if a boy goes to college the chance is 1 in 40 that he will become one of the 10,000 leaders. If he only goes through the high school, the chance is 1 in 400. It is reduced tenfold, and if he only goes to the common school it is reduced twentyfold more. There is only 1 chance in 8,000, and the difference between the common school and the high school makes a twentyfold difference in the earning capacity of the citizen in the end. I would now like to discuss the point of order. In the public schools of Washington it is now the law that textbooks can be furnished free.

In the true spirit of the law why should you say one grade higher or one grade lower should not have the books? I believe the principle should be settled in this ruling that Congress can give free textbooks to the public schools of Washington City irrespective of grades, and I wish to advance this for not sustaining the point of order.

Mr. FARR. May I suggest there will not be necessarily an increase in the amount appropriated, should my amendment be adopted, on account of the fact that there will be a 20 per cent reduction in the cost of the books furnished those pupils promoted to the high schools, and the boys and girls now in the high schools will have books.

Mr. HOBSON. Irrespective of that fact, the law providing for free textbooks is not the law that, broadly interpreted, you can have for certain grades and not for other grades. The interpretation of existing law should go below the specification of grades, and I do not believe should be subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RUBEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 17256) to fix the status of officers of the Army and Navy detailed for aviation duty, and to increase the efficiency of the aviation service.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For utensils, material, and labor, for establishment and maintenance of school gardens, $1,200.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 7, page 51, strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,500," so that the paragraph will read:
"For utensils, material, and labor, for establishment and maintenance of school gardens, $1,500."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that.

Mr. WILLIS. I am willing to have the point of order disposed of. It is not subject to a point of order. I want to discuss the amendment on its merits. I will ask for a ruling by the Chair. This expenditure is authorized by existing law, and is not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] make the point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. I doubt whether the point of order is good. I have made it in order that the gentleman might have an opportunity to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] withdraws the point of order. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is recognized.

Mr. WILLIS. This amendment provides that instead of appropriating $1,200 for the school gardens we shall appropriate $1,500 for that purpose. It may be recalled that there was a good deal of discussion of this item a year ago; $1,200 was provided for it in 1911. Last year it was cut down to $1,000. Some of us tried to increase the amount to $1,200, but failed. This year the superintendent of schools asked for $1,500; the committee allowed $1,200, the amount we tried to get last year, and I am proposing by this amendment to give simply what the superintendent asks. I refer to the hearings, page 120, where the chairman of the committee is questioning Supt. Davidson:

Mr. BURLESON. You ask for an increase of $500 for the maintenance of school gardens.

Dr. DAVIDSON. The money required, Mr. Chairman, is for soil and manure for more than 100 school yards; for bulbs and seeds for the flower gardens on the school premises, and for the care and maintenance of the school gardens proper.

Mr. TAYLOR. Do you buy the seed?

Dr. DAVIDSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. The boys themselves do the work on these gardens, but the people who have the necessary technical skill direct them.

In other words, the superintendent asks for $1,500 for the school garden work. Now, I want to congratulate the committee on their liberalty to some extent. The appropriation, as stated, for the current year is $1,000. They are proposing to raise it to $1,200, $200 over what it was the year before. But I think that amount is not sufficient to properly carry on the work. What has been the result of the decreased appropriation? As a matter of fact, of these school gardens, where the boys and girls in the city of Washington are getting into "God's great out of doors" and raising vegetables and flowers and putting in their time, as they ought to, it has been necessary for the authorities to close two in the past year. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, at a time when this country is aflame with the idea of teaching agriculture in the schools, it is not desirable or wise to be rather niggardly in this appropriation.

I am frank to say, as I said before, that the committee has given something of an increase, but I believe not enough to properly carry on the work.

There is another effect of the reduction. Not only have two of the gardens absolutely been closed, but it has been found impossible to secure a proper amount of material and fertilizers so as to carry on this work as it ought to be carried on. I call attention to the fact that this appropriation has to be divided between about 109 or 110 schools, and in some of those schools, where the scholars are too small to do the heavy work, it is necessary to employ labor; and if it is necessary to have the work done as it ought to be done, it is necessary to employ some kind of instruction. Some of the teachers have been working through the summer helping the boys and girls without pay or with only nominal pay. Such work can not be carried on in a haphazard way and get the best results. I want to say that in all the schools where the scholars are big enough to do the work they do it. In some schools where the children are too small to do the work of spading the ground and other like work, it is necessary to employ common labor; but aside from that, the boys and girls of the city of Washington are doing the actual work. They are raising vegetables and flowers, and the inquiry has been made as to what is done with this product. In the first place the important thing is not the vegetables or the flowers, but the important thing is the boy or the girl and the training they get in this work. Incidentally, I may say that these vegetables and flowers are taken into the schoolroom and used as a means of nature study in absolutely the best possible way in which that important subject can be brought to the attention of the pupils.

I invite attention to another fact—that a large portion of this appropriation was expended in what you might call individual work; that is to say, individual plats of ground were assigned to a boy, and that boy was made to understand that that plat of ground was his and that the product of that ground would be his. There is the idea of ownership, which is one of the best things to develop in citizenship, I think.

Those boys cultivated those plats of ground. There was a healthy spirit of rivalry among them to see which boy should raise the biggest and best crop of vegetables or the finest flowers, and those products were carried to the teachers or the parents. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that there is not anything finer or more beneficial than that, and I think we ought to join in the spirit that is abroad in the land and increase this appropriation in the name of the 50,000 school children of Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, your committee in dealing with this particular paragraph gave it careful consideration, and were very liberal with the school gardens. This item was intended to supply the means of conducting these gardens not by hired employees but by the school children themselves. We believe it would not be good policy to provide a fund out of which the labor should be provided for these school gardens. We thought that the children should perform such light labor for themselves as the cultivation of a garden required. We believed that it would make them self-reliant. We believed that it would not only make for the health of the pupils, but it would make for their self-respect if we allowed them to provide a little something for themselves, and have furnished in this item as much money as has ever been provided for this purpose.

By the same process of reasoning as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] has brought forward here, we might increase this item to $5,000. If $1,200 is good, $1,500 would be better, and $5,000 would be still better. I think we have been liberal, and I ask that the committee vote down the amendment in order that we may proceed with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. I yield.

Mr. WILLIS. Has the gentleman noticed the statement of the director of school garden work, in which it is made clear that none of this money is expended for labor except in three schools in which the children are too small to perform the actual manual labor of spading the ground? After that is done the children themselves do the work.

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; we gave that matter consideration.

Mr. WILLIS. So that the work is actually done by the boys and girls big enough to do the work.

Mr. BURLESON. We did give consideration to that subject. The people in charge of this work are enthusiastic, as they should be. We are glad to know that they are deeply interested in it; yet no matter how much we allow, they will always feel that we should allow just a little more. I think the appropriation is adequate. It is as much as has ever been appropriated, and I ask the committee to vote down the amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOBSON. I do that simply to point out the wisdom of having the educational part of this bill, which I believe the committee realizes, increase with the increased attendance on the public schools.

When you apportion the $1,200 among 110 schools it makes about $10 or $11 to a school. Now, very clearly, that does not entail any element of extravagance, and the $1,500 would be only about $14 to a school. The money is not being used for labor, as has been pointed out by the gentleman who offered the amendment, and it would be in line with proper attention to the increase of school attendance and the extension of life study. It is in line with the latest development in educational work; that is, by the object-lesson method, the tangible contact with nature by the children who are learning these subjects.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to suggest to him, in answer to the remark made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], that no portion of this money is used in the purchase of seeds or bulbs? The seeds and bulbs and shrubbery are purchased by the teachers and pupils themselves out of their own money, and this is for the purchase of material aside from that.

Mr. HOBSON. Yes. I notice that the Department of Agriculture is going to lend a hand more and more to the development of school gardens in all the schools of the country, particularly in the agricultural and rural districts, and that is a wise line of development. A small, reasonable increase of $300 out of a $1,200 fund, which is only one in four for this particular purpose, certainly looks reasonable to me, and in the line of proper development.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOBSON. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 12, noes 17.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WILLIS. Under the permission just granted I desire to add a statement from the report made last year by the teacher who acted as director of the school-garden work.

The statement is as follows:

I hereby submit to you an itemized statement of the expenditures under the school-garden appropriation for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1911. The appropriation reads:

"For utensils, materials, labor, and for establishment and maintenance of school gardens, $1,200."

Of this $800 has been apportioned to the white schools, $400 to the colored schools. You will note the expenditure for tools was small—$50.97—the larger part due to the opening of a new garden at Deanwood. Old tools are repaired every year at no expense to the District of Columbia. No unnecessary tools are on hand.

Under the head of materials, nothing but bone meal, manure, and soil has been bought, and the fencing for the Deanwood School. The soil and fertilizer, costing $549.93, have been distributed to 109 school buildings for lawns and shrubbery as well as the cultivated gardens. All the labor has been performed by children, except at three schools where the children were too small. At the Franklin there is no grade higher than the third, so a man was necessarily employed. Approximately 43,560 children, or all the children in the elementary schools, receive benefit from this expenditure of $549.93; for, after the yards have been properly fertilized, the gardens are planted and cultivated by the children and the flowers and vegetables raised are used for nature study in the schoolrooms.

No portion of the appropriation is used for the purchase of seeds, bulbs, or shrubbery. They are purchased by teachers and children.

We have used the remaining money—$550.79—in maintaining five gardens, four white and one colored, for sixth-grade boys, where each boy has his own garden plot and is taught elementary agriculture. The number of boys has fluctuated from 300 to 500 according to the land available. It was the wisdom of the committee wording this appropriation that no teacher was necessary for this number of boys or the subject. To obviate such conditions the Board of Education appointed the undersigned, in addition to her regular work as a training teacher in Normal School No. 1, supervisor of gardens of the District of Columbia at an annual salary of $1, such salary to be paid from the $1,200 appropriated. This salary has never been drawn.

The work with the boys' classes is started in February in the schoolroom by the regular teachers guided by the supervisor. Outdoor classes begin in April and last until October. During school months the undersigned and her assistant conduct the classes as stated before in addition to their regular work. During July and August there must be guidance. For four summers the undersigned devoted her entire vacation to directing the boys, without remuneration. Later, several young teachers in the white schools expressed their willingness to enroll as laborers at 25 cents per hour. Their average pay has been $4 per week. It has been somewhat more expensive in the colored schools as no one could be procured at such low rates. These persons have been called upon to perform every kind of laboring work connected with the garden except plowing, and at the same time have been teachers of elementary agriculture at less pay than street laborers, with such success that the attendance in some of these gardens has been between 90 and 98 per cent during the hottest days of August.

The appropriation proposed for 1913 is reduced $200, because the expenditure for labor is considered excessive. In other cities there are laborers employed by the year for school gardens, the city of Cleveland employing a number, the pay of these laborers being from $50 to $60 per month.

Our labor has been an intelligent one—by the day or hour, as needed. Anything less than the amount we have had will necessitate the closing of the community gardens until a corps of teachers is provided.

Respectfully submitted.

SUSAN B. SIPE,
Training Teacher in Normal School.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of a motor car for the superintendent of schools at a cost not exceeding $1,000, and for the purchase of a motor delivery vehicle, at a cost not exceeding $2,000, the maintenance of the said motor vehicle, including the hire of drivers of both vehicles, not exceeding $600 per annum each, $4,200.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. COX. I will, if the gentleman from Texas wishes to make a statement, but I will make the point of order later on.

Mr. BURLESON. I think it is not subject to the point of order, and will discuss that question if the Chair desires it, but I want first to give the reason as to why we put this item in the bill.

The superintendent of schools of the District of Columbia came here from a city that was paying him a larger salary than he receives under the provisions of this bill. He has nearly 200 schools under his care, and if he is to discharge properly the important duties imposed upon him it is absolutely necessary that he visit these schools at least once a year, and frequently it is necessary that he visit a particular school more than once during the year.

Mr. COX. What means of transportation has he?

Mr. BURLESON. Last year the superintendent of schools—notwithstanding the fact that he received a salary of only $5,000 from the District of Columbia while the Nebraska city from which he came offered him $6,000—was compelled to pay $500 out of his own pocket for means of transportation to visit these schools. We thought that it was only an act of justice to him that he be furnished with the means of transportation, in order to enable him to make these visits. I contend that this item is not subject to a point of order, because it simply furnishes to an officer authorized by law the means for properly discharging the duties imposed upon him.

With reference to the other items embodied in this bill, we authorize the purchase and maintenance of a motor vehicle. Last year there was paid from the contingent fund of the District of Columbia the sum of $3,147 for a transportation charge that must be met, transportation that is absolutely necessary in order that these schools may be properly conducted and supplied. We reached the conclusion that it was in the interest of economy to provide a motor vehicle at $2,000 and a maintenance charge of $600, thereby saving this annual cost of $3,147.13. This is not just one isolated year, taken for the purpose of illustration. We went back through a series of years, and the average cost for transportation which must be met is in excess of $3,000 each year; and your committee, believing that it would save money for the Government and the District to provide this motor vehicle, embodied this item in this paragraph.

Mr. COX. What does the gentleman mean by saying that the cost of transportation aggregates $3,000 a year? What is that transportation for?

Mr. BURLESON. I will read the gentleman the item. It is fully set forth in the hearings.

Mr. COX. I have not had time to read the hearings on this subject.

Mr. BURLESON. In 1908 the contract for hauling was $2,255.89; special hauling, $6.37.

In 1909 the contract for hauling was $2,645.52, and special hauling of furniture from the various schools to the property yard and storage, absolutely necessary to carry on the schools, was $2,762. We maintain a storage department, and when a new school is opened, or when desks or other school furniture are required, they must be sent, and this hauling is absolutely essential.

In 1911 the contract for hauling was $3,312. In 1912 the contract for hauling was $3,144.13.

Mr. COX. Is this for the hauling of school supplies?

Mr. BURLESON. School supplies and school utensils, and all those things that are necessary for the proper conduct of the schools.

Mr. COX. Then the contemplated purchase of this motor vehicle is for the purpose of buying an auto to haul those supplies?

Mr. BURLESON. A motor truck to haul school supplies.

Mr. COX. The hearings have been handed me, and the gentleman has read some of them into the record. In 1908 there was a contract for hauling. Was that let out in one contract or is that the sum total of contracts making that amount?

Mr. BURLESON. I think it is not all carried under one contract. I think there are a number of contracts aggregating that amount.

Mr. COX. To one contractor?

Mr. BURLESON. I am not sure of that, but I know the expense entailed on the District during the years I have incorporated here is as I have read it. I know it is in the interest of economy that this item be continued in the bill.

Mr. COX. It looks as if the gentleman had made out a strong case for the motor delivery vehicle, but how about the cost of the motor car for the superintendent? Does the gentleman think that is a meritorious item?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that the estimate for this motor car was $1,500. Your committee, with a view of economizing wherever economy could be practiced, made an inquiry, and we reached the conclusion that a suitable vehicle could be secured for $1,000. We also reached the conclusion that $600 was as little as we could possibly hope to provide a driver and the fuel for the vehicle.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think he can get two drivers for these cars for $600?

Mr. BURLESON. Six hundred dollars each.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman think that for the sum total appropriated here, $4,200, he can purchase both cars and hire the drivers and pay for the cost of maintenance?

Mr. BURLESON. We thought so, but to be candid with the gentleman the matter was discussed in the subcommittee and there was some little apprehension expressed that perhaps $600 was not enough to pay for a driver and for the fuel for the automobile that is to be furnished for the school superintendent. A suggestion was also made that the superintendent might learn to run his own car.

Mr. COX. That is a good suggestion.

Mr. BURLESON. I assure the gentleman from Indiana that every effort has been made to economize, and we put the item in the bill because we believed it was economical and only just and fair to the superintendent.

Mr. COX. Is this the first time that the gentleman's committee has ever embarked on the scheme of providing transportation for the superintendent of schools?

Mr. BURLESON. No; in years gone by we furnished a horse and buggy, and for that service, I think, we allowed $320. The horse and buggy afforded slow means of transportation, and the superintendent was unable to make the character of examination of schools which he thought they required, so he abandoned the horse and buggy and utilized a motor vehicle last year, for which, as I say, he paid $500.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURLESON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. We now provide, as I understand, a garage for the automobile owned by the superintendent?

Mr. BURLESON. I think the garage has not been provided.

Mr. MANN. I do not know that it has been actually provided, but it is authorized in the current appropriation law.

Mr. BURLESON. I think it is authorized, but I think it has not been provided. I think the quarters have not been secured, but there was an authorization.

Mr. MANN. Provided for in the last appropriation bill.

Mr. BURLESON. I think it has not been secured as yet, but there is an authorization for it in last year's bill.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say just now that this item is intended to pay for the gasoline, and so forth, for the superintendent's car and for the motor vehicle. That is not the way the item reads.

Mr. BURLESON. We think the word "maintenance" covers gasoline.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the word "maintenance" does not apply to the superintendent's motor car. The language is quite explicit.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that this is the language of the estimate, and we thought it would cover the charge for gasoline.

Mr. MANN. But it does not. The language in the bill provides for the purchase of a motor car and the purchase of a motor vehicle and for the maintenance of the motor vehicle. I take it that where you authorize in one paragraph the purchase of a car and a vehicle and provide for the maintenance of the vehicle that that does not include the maintenance of the car.

Mr. BURLESON. I am free to say that I am not familiar with the language ordinarily used in connection with automobiles.

Mr. MANN. If it is intended to provide for the maintenance of the car it ought to say so, because plainly it does not say so now.

Mr. BURLESON. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that the matter can be remedied easily by adding the letter "s" to vehicle, making it plural.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will offer an amendment——

Mr. MANN. I do not care to offer the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. After the point of order is disposed of I will offer it.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman one more question. Is this the first time that we have ever purchased a motor car for the superintendent of public schools?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes; it is the first attempt to provide him with a motor car. I will state to the gentleman that in last year's bill provision was made for an allowance to the superintendents of schools of $300 each for the hire of the horse from a livery stable and of an automobile from a garage.

Mr. COX. That is in last year's bill?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It is in the current law?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, at first blush, this looked to me like a useless expenditure of the people's money, but after hearing the explanation of the gentleman from Texas I think he has made a very strong case. I do not desire to cripple the public-school service of the city of Washington, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 51, line 11, strike out the word "vehicle," after the word "motor," and insert the word "vehicles."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of fixtures, apparatus, specimens, and materials for the laboratories of the departments of chemistry and biology in the Central, Eastern, Western, Business, and M Street High Schools, J. Ormond Wilson Normal School, and Normal School No. 2, and the installation of the same, $2,100.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the chairman a question. The question has no relation whatever to the pending item. I notice in the committee report an estimate at page 93 for sanitary drinking fountains. There is no item in the bill that I can find, and I wondered whether provision was made in the bill for that item.

Mr. BURLESON. We make provision for a number of sanitary drinking fountains.

Mr. MANN. I will refer the gentleman to page 49, line 21.

Mr. WILLIS. Very well. I see it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the construction of a new Central High School on the site purchased for that purpose and toward the grading and other work necessary to prepare the site, the grading of an athletic field, the construction of retaining walls, and the construction of an athletic stadium, and the total cost of said work shall not exceed $1,200,000, under contracts which are hereby authorized therefor, $3,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. It is legislation unauthorized by law.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, under the District appropriation bill of last year an unexpended balance of a sum appropriated for the purchase of a site for this school was reappropriated for the purpose of securing the services of an architect to prepare plans for the Central High School building, to have a seating capacity of 2,500 students. Inasmuch as under former appropriation acts we have appropriated $250,000 for the purchase of a site, and inasmuch as we have reappropriated an unexpended balance of that sum appropriated for the site for the purpose of engaging the services of an architect to prepare plans for this school, I contend that this is a work in progress and is not subject to a point of order. I desire to read to the chairman the language carried in the last appropriation act with reference to this particular school:

The Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to use so much as may be necessary of any unexpended balances remaining in the appropriation for the purchase of a site for a new Central High School and for the purchase of a site for a new M Street High School, contained in the District appropriation act for the fiscal year 1912, approved March 2, 1911, for the employment of architectural services in the preparation of plans and specifications for said high schools, and for such other personal services and expenses in connection therewith as may be necessary: Provided, That the plans for the Central High School shall provide accommodations for not less than 2,500 pupils.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe that this is the first time in the history of the Congress that anybody has contended that the erection of a new, unauthorized building was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman proceeds, I desire to state that I will concede that if this is the first time an effort was made to provide for the erection of this high school by the purchase of a site and appropriation of money therefor, it would be subject to a point of order. The Chair must remember that in a former appropriation bill an amount was appropriated to purchase a site for a Central High School. The site has been purchased. Under an appropriation act an unexpended balance of the amount appropriated for the purchase of a site was directed to be expended in the preparation of plans for this high school and a limitation upon the cost of the high school was indirectly embodied in the bill by fixing 2,500 as a seating capacity of the school. Consequently my contention is that this is a work in progress; it has been begun, the site purchased, plans have been prepared, now followed by an attempt to appropriate money to erect the school.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, Congress was willing during its last session to spend some money for the preparation of plans and specifications for a new building, to see whether or not they would afterwards make the appropriation. The architect who has made these plans and specifications frankly admits in the hearings that instead of the plan for an $800,000 building that he brought in a plan for a $1,200,000 building. The Chair will find on page 522, paragraph 3790, of Hinds' Precedents, that an appropriation for the construction of a new schoolhouse is subject to the point of order. That same ruling applies also to playgrounds. Then the Chair will find in Hinds' Precedents, fourth volume, page 576, paragraph 3860, that all preliminary work necessary, and so forth, is subject to the point of order; and, in section 3859, that an authorization to prepare estimates does not authorize, and so forth, and also paragraph 3782, the making of a survey does not authorize the beginning of a work. The precedents are quite numerous and have never been departed from in this House. I therefore make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authorized the purchase of a site for the construction of a public building, the Committee on Appropriations would thereupon be authorized to appropriate for the purchase of that site, but the Committee on Appropriation would not be authorized to proceed thereafter to appropriate for the construction of a building on this site until the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has further authorized the construction of a building thereon. It is clear that the Committee on Appropriations might insert in an appropriation bill a provision for the purchase of a site for a central high school, being moved by various reasons. One reason might be, in the opinion of the House, the point of order would not be insisted upon, or that at that time the site might be acquired much more advantageously than at some later time, although the House or the committee might not be inclined at that time to proceed with the construction of a building; and the point of order against that proposition not having been made at that time, the Chair is not of opinion that the failure to lodge the point of order against the appropriation for the acquisition of the site waives the right to make the point of order against the Appropriations Committee providing for the construction of the building unless in legal manner the authorization according to law has first been had. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chairman in his ruling stated that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds would have jurisdiction over the construction.

The CHAIRMAN. The District of Columbia Committee.

Mr. BURLESON. Did the Chair give consideration to that part of the bill directing the expenditure of the unexpended balance for the preparation of plans for the high school?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair read in the last appropriation bill the provisions in that respect in connection with the paragraph against which the point of order was lodged and was of the opinion that the authorization of the plans did not amount in law to an authorization for the construction of a building. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Toward the construction of a new M Street High School for colored pupils, on the site purchased for that purpose, and toward the grading of said site, and the total cost of said building shall not exceed $550,000, under contracts which are hereby authorized therefor, $150,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of ground adjacent to the Petworth School, $15,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the point of order is made against lines 17 and 18?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky, as the Chair understands, reserved the point of order on lines 17 and 18.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I did not.

The CHAIRMAN. On lines 19 and 20.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Nineteen and twenty was my point of order.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I think they are not subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the paragraph is—

For the purchase of ground adjacent to the Petworth School, $15,000.

Now, the Chair will find in the Manual, page 404—

The purchase of land for a work already established has been admitted under this principle, and also additions to existing buildings in cases where no limits of cost have been shown.

The CHAIRMAN. What page?

Mr. OLMSTED. Page 404, section 821, Manual of the Sixty-second Congress, second session. I do not know whether this land is actually adjoining or not. If it is, it is certainly in order to appropriate for this building. It is a question of fact which I am unable to answer. The language is "adjacent," which comes pretty near to "adjoining." You will find authority in section 3774 of the fourth volume of Hinds' Precedents for the proposition that—

The purchase of additional ground and the erection of an addition to an existing building was held to be in continuation of a public work.

The CHAIRMAN. What was the section the gentleman just read?

Mr. OLMSTED. Section 3774 of the fourth volume of Hinds'. If it is an entirely independent plat or in no way connected or related to the property already owned, it would be a new work. But if it is, as I understand, really adjoining the Petworth School, then the provision is in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. May I submit to the Chair a word in this connection, simply carrying out the point suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED]? If the Chair will look at the next page, in paragraph 3776, it seems that the distinction is made as to whether this is a separate tract or lot, not contiguous or adjoining to other tract, or whether it is adjoining the existing tract. If it is a separate and detached lot, it can not be purchased under the precedents. If it is adjoining, and in addition to a lot already owned, upon which there is an existing building, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, it is not subject to a point of order. Section 3776 says:

A proposition to purchase a separate and detached lot of land for an Army target range was held not to be in continuation of a public work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The point of order is overruled. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of lots 7, 8, and 9, square 511, as a site for an annex to the John F, Cook School, $8,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that paragraph. It is for the purchase of a site.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, that is stated in the paragraph to be a site for an annex. If the land is adjoining land already owned, it is in order. I am not advised as to the facts in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] if the lots 7, 8, and 9, square 511, are adjoining and adjacent to the John F. Cook School?

Mr. BURLESON. They are, but the difficulty could be obviated—and I have no objection to it—by inserting after the word "eleven" the word "adjoining." I will state to the Chair that is the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will accept the statement. It is not necessary for the Chair to rule, but the Chair would have to overrule the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Major and superintendent, $4,000; assistant superintendent, with rank of inspector, $2,500; 3 inspectors, at $1,800 each; 11 captains, at $1,500 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,000; clerk and stenographer, $1,500; clerk, who shall be assistant property clerk, $1,200; 3 clerks, at $1,000 each; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $720 each; additional compensation for 20 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $4,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary; 13 lieutenants, 1 of whom shall be harbor master, at $1,320 each; 46 sergeants, 1 of whom may be detailed for duty in the harbor patrol, at $1,250 each; 491 privates of class 3, at $1,200 each; 100 privates of class 2, at $1,080 each; 49 privates of class 1, at $900 each; amount required to pay salaries of privates of class 2 who will be promoted to class 3 and privates of class 1 who will be promoted to class 2 during the fiscal year 1914, $2,729; 6 telephone operators, at $720 each; 14 janitors, at $600 each; messenger, $700; messenger, $500; inspector, mounted, $240; 55 captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted, at $240 each; 64 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on bicycles, at $50 each; 18 drivers, at $720 each; 3 police matrons, at $600 each; in all, $907,789.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman I make the point of order against the entire paragraph that it is not authorized by existing law.

Mr. BARTLETT. None of it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. None of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the entire paragraph on the ground that it is not authorized by existing law. The Chair will hear the gentleman on that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to taking the lead in the matter for the purpose of facilitating matters. I will make this brief statement relative to it: The Metropolitan police force was first organized, I believe, in 1861. During the continuance of the war of 1861–1865 the United States Government paid the Metropolitan police force. After the war was over and found conditions still unsettled, the Metropolitan police was carried along and paid for by the Federal Government until, perhaps, by the act of June 20, 1874. It might have assumed a new form, but the Federal Government nevertheless continued to pay the cost of the Metropolitan police force. When the act of June 11, 1878, was passed, in which was embraced the half-and-half plan, then it devolved upon the Federal Government to pay half and upon the government of the District of Columbia to pay the other half of the cost of maintaining that force. I wish to invite the attention of the Chair particularly to this fact, that here we have two governments—the Government of the United States and the government of the District of Columbia. The act of June 11, 1878, otherwise known as the "organic act," containing, as I just said, the half-and-half principle, went a little further with the police and the schools and the fire department and the streets than that act went with any other contingent expenditure of the government of the District of Columbia. The organic act just referred to recited in specific terms that the cost of maintaining the schools, the police and fire departments, and the building of the streets should be borne half by the Federal Government and half by the District of Columbia.

By that act the Federal Government incurred the expense of one-half of the maintenance of the Metropolitan police force. I repeat that, Mr. Chairman, by the act of June 11, 1878, the Federal Government incurred the expense of paying one-half of the cost of the Metropolitan police. But, Mr. Chairman, in the sundry civil appropriation bill which passed Congress on June 20, 1878, or, in other words, just nine days after the passage of the act of June 11, 1878, this language occurs:

And the said commissioners are hereby authorized to fix the salaries to be paid to the officers and privates of the Metropolitan police until otherwise provided by law, and to require the Washington Gaslight Co. to light the city lamps at such price as shall to said commissioners appear to be just and reasonable, and all the expenses heretofore incurred by the General Government for the board of health, for the Metropolitan police force, and for gas inspection shall hereafter be a charge upon the government of the District.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I contend that, while it must be admitted that by the act of June 11, 1878, the Federal Government incurred the expense of one-half of the cost of maintaining the Metropolitan police force, yet by the words contained in the sundry civil appropriation act which passed Congress just nine days thereafter that expense was transferred in every way, in every part, from the Federal Government to the government of the District of Columbia.

That, Mr. Chairman, is my point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I call the attention of the Chair to the act of Congress approved February 28, 1901, which carries this provision:

The Metropolitan police force shall consist of 1 major and superintendent, 1 captain and assistant superintendent, and such number of captains, lieutenants, sergeants, privates of class 2, privates of class 1, desk sergeants, and others as Congress may from time to time provide.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. BURLESON. From the act of Congress approved February 28, 1901.

The CHAIRMAN. Following the argument of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] as best the Chair could, the contention he makes is, that about nine days after the act of June 11, 1878, was passed, by a paragraph in the sundry civil appropriation act it was enacted that the Metropolitan police hereafter should be paid for exclusively from the revenues of the District of Columbia. Now, in what way does the act of 1901, cited by the gentleman from Texas, alter that act of June 20, 1878, providing the manner of payment, as cited by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]?

Mr. BURLESON. I did not quite catch the point made by the gentleman from Kentucky. As I understand it, though, the point of the gentleman is that the expenses incurred by the Metropolitan police force should be borne exclusively from the District revenues. Is that the gentleman's point?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is the point.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the point the gentleman makes.

Mr. BURLESON. I will ask the Chair to indulge me until I can look up the law on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. While the gentleman from Texas is looking up the law, and while the matter will be considered as pending, let us see if the mind of the Chair and the mind of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] and the mind of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] meet upon what the proposition is. It is conceded by the gentleman from Kentucky that under the act of June 11, 1878, the expense of keeping up and maintaining the Metropolitan police was chargeable half and half from the revenues of the General Government and the revenues of the District of Columbia.

And the gentleman from Kentucky maintains that in nine days thereafter an act was passed providing that thereafter the entire expenses of the maintenance of the Metropolitan police force should be charged against the revenues of the District government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And in that connection, Mr. Chairman, I wish to present this further idea to the Chairman: That theretofore, as long as the Federal Government was participating in the payment of the police, the number was limited, and the salary was limited to $800. But by the act of June 20, 1878, nine days after the organic act was passed, imposing the payment of all the cost of the Metropolitan Police force on the District of Columbia, all limitations were taken off. The Commissioners of the District of Columbia, because they were to pay for it, were permitted to appoint as many police as they saw fit. Neither was there any further limitation upon the salaries paid until 1901, when the commissioners themselves succeeded in getting through Congress an act setting out or describing of what the Metropolitan Police should consist—of a major, and so forth, and so on—and fixing their salaries. But that does not shift the obligation as to who is to pay that debt.

Mr. BURLESON. I should like to ask the gentleman the date of that law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The date is stated on the top of it there—June 20, 1878, nine days after the passage of the organic act.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman furnishes me with a paper memorandum, but I do not find the date on it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The date is stated on it. I am giving the gentleman the correct date.

Mr. BURLESON. I wish the gentleman would furnish the text of the law, so that we can see the law rather than an isolated excerpt from it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] requests that the item be passed for the present, with the point of order pending.

Mr. BURLESON. With the point of order pending.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. For the further information of the gentleman I will say that the act of June 20, 1878, is in volume 20 of the statutes, and this part of it is on page 208.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] that this paragraph be passed for the present with the point of order pending?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

To aid in the support of the National Bureau of Criminal Identification, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, provided the several departments of the General Government may be entitled to like information from time to time as is accorded the police departments of various municipalities privileged to membership therein, $200.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order against that paragraph for the same reasons as just stated relative to the preceding paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be passed with the same limitations as to unanimous consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Let them all go together; yes.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous: For fuel, $4,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I understand that my point of order extends to the item of "Miscellaneous: For fuel, $4,000," also. I make the point as to that upon the same ground.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be passed under the same conditions with the point of order pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and improvements to police stations and grounds, $5,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The item will be passed subject to the same conditions.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous and contingent expenses, including the purchase of new wagons, rewards for fugitives, modern revolvers, maintenance of card system, stationery, city directories, periodicals, telegraphing, telephoning, photographs, printing, binding, gas, ice, washing, meals for prisoners, furniture and repairs thereto, beds and bed clothing, insignia of office, purchase of horses, horse and vehicle for superintendent, bicycles, motor cycles, police equipments and repairs to same, harness, forage, repairs to vehicles, van, patrol wagons, motor patrol, and saddles, mounted equipments, and expenses incurred in the prevention and detection of crime, and other necessary expenses, $29,500; of which amount a sum not exceeding $500 may be expended by the major and superintendent of police for the prevention and detection of crime, under his certificate, approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended: Provided, That the War Department may, in its discretion, furnish the District Commissioners, for the use of the police, upon requisition, such worn mounted equipment as may be required.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order against that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the paragraph will be passed, subject to the same conditions.

The Clerk read as follows:

For five motor patrol wagons, at $2,500 each, $12,500.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the same point of order as to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be passed over like the preceding ones.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance of motor vehicles, $2,500, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order as to that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, it will be passed, subject to the same conditions.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $54,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order as to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed subject to the same conditions. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Harbor patrol: Two engineers, at $1,000 each; watchman, $540; 2 deck hands, at $540 each; in all, $3,620.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the same point of order as to that paragraph; they all go together.

Mr. BURLESON. This has no connection with the Metropolitan police service.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We will see whether it has or not. I reserve the point of order, and we will let it be passed with the others. If I do not show that it comes under the same provision, it would do no harm.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the paragraph will be passed, with the point of order pending.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, construction, maintenance, repairs, and incidentals, $2,000; in all, $5,620.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against this item, the same as the other.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, this paragraph will be passed with the others, with the point of order pending.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Chief engineer, $3,500; deputy chief engineer, $2,500; 3 battalion chief engineers, at $2,000 each; fire marshal, $2,000; deputy fire marshal, $1,400; 2 inspectors, at $1,080 each; chief clerk, $1,800; clerk, $1,200; 37 captains, at $1,400 each; 39 lieutenants, at $1,200 each; superintendent of machinery, $2,000; assistant superintendent of machinery, $1,200; 25 engineers, at $1,200 each; 25 assistant engineers, at $1,100 each; 2 pilots, at $1,150 each; 2 marine engineers, at $1,200 each; 2 assistant marine engineers, at $1,100 each; 2 marine firemen, at $720 each; 39 drivers, at $1,150 each; 39 assistant drivers, at $1,100 each; 219 privates of class 2, at $1,080 each; 42 privates of class 1, at $960 each; hostler, $600; laborer, $480; in all, $553,870.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the figures "$1,200," in line 14, page 58, and I also make a point of order against the figures "$1,200" at the end of line 15. They are increases in salary.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. COX. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that the change was made so that the salaries would conform to those being paid other engineers throughout the District service. It was made not only upon recommendations of the commissioners, but upon those of labor organizations, which claimed that the compensation which these engineers was receiving was inadequate, and that it was in nowise equal to the compensation for engineers engaged in similar employment by private firms. It is an increase, but was made to conform to the other increases made in the salaries of other engineers.

Mr. COX. I have no doubt that the purpose stated by the gentleman is true and genuine. Eleven hundred and fifty dollars is a pretty good salary, and I must insist on the point of order in both instances.

The CHAIRMAN. The points or order are sustained in both instances.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert, after the word "at," on page 58, line 13, in the blank occasioned by the sustaining of the point of order, the figures "$1,150."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 58, line 13, by inserting, after the word "at," the figures "$1,150."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. I now move to amend by inserting, after the word "at," at the end of line 15, the figures "$1,150."

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting, after the word "at," at the end of line 15, page 58, the figures "$1,150."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEALTH DEPARTMENT.

Health officer, $4,000; assistant health officer, who hereafter shall be a physician and during the absence or disability of the health officer shall act as health officer and discharge the duties incident to that position, $2,500; chief clerk and deputy health officer, $2,500; clerks—1, at $1,400; 5, at $1,200 each; 4, at $1,000 each; 1, at $720; chief sanitary inspector, $1,800; sanitary inspectors—8, at $1,200 each; 2, at $1,000 each; 2, at $900 each; chief food inspector, $1,600; food inspectors—5, at $1,200 each; 6, at $1,000 each; 5, at $900 each; chemist, $1,800; assistant chemist, $1,200; assistant bacteriologist, $1,200; skilled laborer, $600; messenger and janitor, $600; driver, $600; poundmaster, $1,200; laborers, at not exceeding $50 per month each, $2,000; in all, $63,620.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph for the same reasons that I set out in making the point of order relative to the Metropolitan police. Upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas in charge of the bill, I make a point of order now to each item under the health department.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, it is understood that the same point of order is directed to each item under the health department until we reach the provisions relating to the courts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We have an understanding that I am not to rise at the end of each paragraph and renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Texas ask unanimous consent that each paragraph under the division of health department be passed with a point of order pending against each paragraph with the right to recur to it hereafter.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what effect will that have on amendments?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, if the point of order was sustained there would be nothing to amend. If the point of order is not sustained it will be open to amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If I understand the Chair correctly, if the matter should go out on a point of order there would be no amendment in order to that part which is stricken out. I do not understand the Chair to hold that an amendment to the bill would not be in order, because, if these items requiring the Federal Government to participate in the payment should go out on that point, I myself shall offer an amendment to the bill continuing all of these things at the expense of the District of Columbia, where the law puts it.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the whole paragraph is passed, and, as I understand, if it is held to be in order, it will be open to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands it so, and by unanimous consent it will be so ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the items are to be read, and if the gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to offer an amendment I am willing that he should offer it and consider it as pending, to be passed upon after the Chair has ruled upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph.

The Clerk read as follows:

Not less than 12 of the sanitary and food inspectors above provided for shall be employed in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto and in the inspection of dairies and dairy farms.

For the enforcement of the provisions of an act to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1897, and an act for the prevention of scarlet fever, diphtheria, measles, whooping cough, chicken pox, epidemic cerebrospinal meningitis, and typhoid fever in the District of Columbia, approved February 9, 1907, and an act to provide for registration of all cases of tuberculosis in the District of Columbia, for free examination of sputum in suspected cases, and for preventing the spread of tuberculosis in said District, approved May 13, 1908, under the direction of the health officer of said district, and for the prevention of other communicable diseases, including salaries or compensation for personal services, not exceeding $10,000, when ordered in writing by the commissioners and necessary for the enforcement and execution of said acts, and for the prevention of such other communicable diseases as hereinbefore provided, purchase and maintenance of necessary horses, wagons, and harness, purchase of reference books and medical journals, and maintenance of quarantine station and smallpox hospital, $24,000: Provided, That any bacteriologist employed under this appropriation shall not be paid more than $6 per day and may be assigned by the health officer to the bacteriological examination of milk and other dairy products and of the water supplies of dairy farms, and to such other sanitary work as in the judgment of the health officer will promote the public health, whether such examinations be or be not directly related to contagious diseases.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I wish it understood that I reserve the point of order upon all of the two preceding paragraphs, not only for the reasons heretofore stated, but for the additional reason that under any and all circumstances it is legislation.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I had in mind and which we discussed is to the paragraph on page 60 of the bill. I assume that the Chair understood that I did not wish to have the paragraph passed without submitting the amendment. I ask to have pending the amendment to line 11, page 60, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Page 60, line 11, strike out "$1,200" and insert "$1,500."

Mr. BURLESON. To that I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves the point of order, and the amendment will be considered as pending.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against the whole paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands, the gentleman from Kentucky has already reserve the point of order against the paragraph. The Clerk will read:

The Clerk read as follows:

The action of the commissioners in locating a pound and stable for the health department on reservation No. 290, located along James Creek Canal at the intersection of South Capitol and I Streets SE., under the authorization contained in the District appropriation act approved March 2, 1911, is ratified and confirmed, and the jurisdiction and control over said reservation is transferred to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the District of Columbia shall pay to the United States as compensation for the land contained in said reservation one-half the estimated value thereof, namely $4,100, and there is hereby appropriated, entirely from the revenues of the District of Columbia, said sum of $4,100, which shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States, and thereafter the title to said reservation shall be in the name of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, at the conclusion of the reading of that I wish to know if it is understood that I have reserved all points of order against everything which has gone before under the head of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. BURLESON. Undoubtedly. The point of order, as I understand it, is that the expense should all be borne by the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is one point of order that I made. This is the second time that I have risen at the end of the particular paragraph for the purpose of stating that if that point of order should be overruled, I still am in the attitude of reserving points of order against legislation which occurs in the item just read as well as in the other items.

Mr. BURLESON. I have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is understood that the gentleman from Kentucky reserves all points of order on the several paragraphs.

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. First, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. While the point of order is pending here to this paragraph is it in order to offer this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to offer amendments and have them read and remain pending, subject to such disposition as may be made of the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Very well. I offer the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 23, page 64, the following: "Provided, That hereafter the tuberculosis hospital shall be under the direction and control of the health department."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves the point of order to the amendment, which will be pending, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

COURTS.

To pay the reporter of the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia for volumes of the reports of the opinions of said court, authorized to be furnished by him under section 229 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia as amended July 1, 1902, 22 volumes, at $5 each, namely, 11 copies each of volumes 40 and 41, $110.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of getting some information. I would like to ask the chairman in charge of the bill whether the law mentioned in this paragraph fixes the price of these reports at $5. The reason I make the inquiry is that it strikes me as a very high price to pay for a supreme court report. The supreme court reports of the State of Indiana, I think, now sell at $1.50 each, at least at not more than $1.75 each, and I imagine they are about as large in bulk as these reports are. They may not contain as much law, though I doubt that.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, to be candid with the gentleman, I do not know to whom these particular volumes are furnished. It is evidently required by law that 22 volumes be furnished certain of the officials of the District of Columbia, and for which the reporter is entitled to make a charge of $5 per volume.

Mr. MANN. Eleven volumes.

Mr. BORLAND. There are two numbers, 40 and 41—22 volumes altogether, 11 of each.

Mr. BURLESON. The item has been carried in the bill for many years. We made no inquiry about it. It is only these officials of the District of Columbia who can complain about it, and there has never been any complaint laid with the committee or with the commissioners that the charge is excessive.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have just had handed to me the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia, section 229 of the code, which provides for the publication, but the organic law itself does not seem to fix the price at which the volumes are to be sold. It seems to have been fixed in the appropriation act.

There is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated such sums as may be necessary to pay said reporter therefor at the rate of not exceeding $5 per volume, and said appropriation shall be deemed a permanent and annual appropriation, and one-half thereof shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. It is an indefinite, continuing appropriation.

Mr. COX. A permanent appropriation.

Mr. BURLESON. And the $5 per volume has been fixed and is chargeable. They pay it and have never complained of it being excessive. We have never had any complaint from any quarter about it.

Mr. COX. Well, I take it under this law these reports are furnished to the various courts of the District, are they not?

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand it, the reporter is authorized to charge not to exceed $5 a volume for the report.

Mr. COX. He furnishes it to the courts, does he not?

Mr. BURLESON. There are furnished 11 copies of each report to certain officials of the District, probably a copy goes to each court.

Mr. COX. Well, I take it the attorneys here in this city are interested in buying these same reports.

Mr. BURLESON. I do not know about that.

Mr. COX. The gentleman does not know, in other words, whether or not the attorneys here buy them at one price and the courts pay for them at another price?

Mr. BURLESON. We pay this amount to the reporter for the volumes that he is required by law to furnish to certain officials in the District.

Mr. COX. I understand, but the gentleman does not know what he sells them at to attorneys?

Mr. BURLESON. I have no information on that point.

Mr. COX. It strikes me as a very high price.

Mr. BORLAND. If the gentleman from Indiana will yield, $5 is a high price for law reports, and it is true that that is higher than the average of the supreme courts of the various States. The cost of that volume of law reports depends to a great extent upon the number of copies that are published, and in a very small jurisdiction like the District of Columbia the initial cost of getting up the volumes is the same, and the number of copies that can be sold is very much smaller than in the State of Indiana, and it controls very largely the price.

Mr. BURLESON. It is probable that very few volumes of these reports are published, and that, of course, as stated by the gentleman from Missouri, would entail an additional or greater cost on those who purchase the particular volume, because there are a very few of them required.

Mr. COX. If I remember correctly, the Supreme Court Reports of the United States only cost about $3 or $3.50.

Mr. BURLESON. But those reports are required by all the lawyers throughout the United States.

Mr. COX. What I was particularly interested in getting information if I could was whether or not this reporter was getting a certain price for them, to wit, $5 a volume for furnishing the courts, and then letting lawyers in the District who buy them have them at a less price.

Mr. BURLESON. I think in the legislative bill there is an item carried authorizing the reporter to charge persons in the District who desire this volume $5 per volume. I have that impression.

Mr. COX. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Police court: Two judges, at $3,600 each; clerk, $2,200; deputy clerks—1, $1,600; 1, $1,500; 2, at $1,200 each; deputy financial clerk, $1,500; 7 bailiffs, at $900 each; deputy marshal, $1,000; janitor, $600; engineer, $900; assistant engineer, $720; fireman, $480; 2 assistant janitors, at $300 each; matron, $600; 3 charmen, at $360 each; in all, $28,680.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the figures "$2,200," in line 7, and also on the figures "$1,600," in the same line.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. COX. I will reserve it.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that the clerk of this court has been in the service of the District government for 40 years, and in the last 6 or 8 years his labors have materially increased by reason of the increased litigation in this court and the lawyers of the District and the District Commissioners have repeatedly importuned us to increase his salary, stating that he was entitled to an increase by reason of the increased duties that have been imposed upon him. Now, those are the facts in this case. It is subject to the point of order.

Mr. COX. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt of the sincerity of the gentleman in charge of the bill, nor do I have any doubt of the sincerity of the gentlemen who have importuned him and his committee to increase this, but $2,000 is a good deal of a salary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting, after the word "clerk," page 66, line 7, "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "clerk," page 66, line 7, "$2,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RODDENBERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 28499, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

STATISTICS ON IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 1340).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By joint action of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Treasury Department, committees of those two departments have recently made a careful investigation of the methods of preparing the statistics of the imports and exports of the United States.

These committees have unanimously recommended that the laws relating to the preparation of shippers' manifests be amended in such manner as to compel the preparation by exporters of accurate and complete lists in regard to merchandise sent out of the United States. Without such amended laws these committees deem that it is impossible for the customs officers to obtain with accuracy the figures of our export trade. The existing law regarding statistical returns of exports by sea was enacted in 1821, and naturally fails to meet conditions existing at the present time, when methods of communication and transportation, classes of articles entering international commerce, places of production of such articles, and the demands of business for information in reference thereto have greatly changed. A large proportion of the merchandise now being exported originates in the interior of the country, and is of such character and variety that a proper description thereof can not be made at the port of exportation. It is recommended, therefore, that a measure be enacted which will remedy the unsatisfactory conditions in our export statistics.

This new measure should provide that persons forwarding merchandise from interior points for exportation shall supply to the transportation company receiving such merchandise a manifest similar in general form to that required at the port of exportation, which manifest shall be conveyed by the transportation company to the port of exportation and delivered to the collector of customs.

For any omission from or incorrect description of the merchandise in any manifest, whether originating in the interior or at the port of exportation, as to kind, quantity, or value, the owner, shipper, or consignor, or agent of either, should be made liable to a fine of $50, unless it be shown that such omission was due to a mere clerical error. If it be shown that the incorrect statement has been willfully or fraudulently made, the person responsible therefor should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and rendered liable to fine or imprisonment.

The bill should also provide a penalty for the failure of the transportation company to procure from the exporter at the original place of shipment the manifest noted above, and likewise a penalty for failure to transmit it to the collector of customs at the port of exportation, or for failure to deliver it to any other transportation company to which it may deliver the merchandise en route, and the company so receiving should be also required under penalty to forward to the collector of customs the said manifest.

The bill should prohibit, under penalty for violation, the disclosure by any officer, employee, or other representative of a common carrier of any information regarding the kind, quantity, value, destination, or consignee of any of the merchandise carried by it for exportation and described in the manifest above referred to.

It is believed that a measure embodying these suggestions into law would fully meet the objections now offered to the proposition that interior shippers shall supply manifests of the goods forwarded for exportation. The chief objection has been that information regarding their business might be disclosed by employees of the common carriers transporting the merchandise and receiving statements as to its character, valuation, destination, and the consignee. The plan, if carried into effect, would, it is believed, protect the original exporter against disclosure of his business, give to the customs officers at the port of exportation sufficient information to enable them to properly describe and value the mechandise, and also assure much greater accuracy as to the true value of the merchandise being exported.

I suggest, as equally important, an amendment to section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, making the law conform to the present practice by which vessels are permitted to file a supplementary manifest within four business days after the clearance of the vessel, a practice without authority of law, but sanctioned by the customs regulations (art. 128).

The provisions of section 4197 of the Revised Statutes requiring the master of the vessel to file a complete manifest of the cargo before a clearance is granted, a measure enacted before the utilization of steam power in ocean traffic and prior to the transaction of business with the aid of telegrams, cablegrams, and telephonic communications, can not be carried out under present methods of commercial transactions. To demand a strict compliance with the requirements of the statute in this particular would congest traffic, delay travel and the transportation of the foreign mails, paralyze business, and jeopardize our international commerce. It is found that there has been no enforcement of this part of the statute at the larger ports of the United States for upward of 30 years. It is believed that the law for the clearance of vessels and filing of cargo manifests should be in harmony with the law requiring the presentation of shippers' manifests. The amendment proposed to the law would be justified by many years' experience and careful consideration of this important subject. It would add no burdens to the duties of steamship companies. Instead it would simplify the preparation of the manifest and legalize the present custom of filing supplementary manifests. It should fix the same penalty ($500) for failure to file a manifest and obtain a clearance for a vessel, and should provide a penalty of $50 for neglect of entering merchandise in the manifest. It should grant the same period for filing a supplementary manifest as the current practice under article 128 of the Customs Regulations.

The recommendations of this message have received the approval of the two departments whose work and functions will be most affected by them—the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce and Labor.

If a bill or bills embodying the suggestions of this message would be useful to the Congress or to any committees thereof considering the subject, they will be forwarded on request.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 4, 1913.

NEW YORK AND NEW JERSEY JOINT HARBOR LINE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 1339).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following veto message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return to you without my approval the joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

When it was first proposed to me that an officer of the Corps of Engineers should be made a member of a State commission proposed to be created by the States of New York and New Jersey to investigate and report upon port conditions in the port of New York, I expressed myself as being heartily in favor of legislation which would permit such an officer to be so designated. I believed and still believe that there are many matters affecting the said port, some of which are mentioned in the resolution of the Legislatures of the States of New York and New Jersey which creates the said joint commission, in the treatment of which conference and cooperation between the Federal and State authorities would be highly desirable. It has since been brought to my attention, however, that one of the objects embraced in the said resolution of the State legislatures, as to which the proposed joint board was to make investigation and report, was the question of the "extension of pierhead lines." Jurisdiction and authority over the location of pierhead lines in New York Harbor is at present vested wholly in the Federal authorities—that is, in the Secretary of War, acting on the advice and recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, and the New York Harbor Line Board, consisting of three officers of the United States Corps of Engineers. They exercise their duty, not in the interests of New York or New Jersey alone, but in the interest of the commerce of the entire Nation passing up and down the Hudson River and in and out of the port of New York. Since this resolution was first introduced, and since my attention was first called to the subject, there has arisen a sharp difference of opinion as to the location of the pierhead line in the Hudson River, in the said port of New York, between these Federal authorities and the local authorities of that neighborhood, including the very members of the two State commissions of New Jersey and New York, who constitute six of the proposed seven members of the joint board above mentioned. These local authorities and these State commissioners have urged the adoption of a pierhead line which would materially narrow the existing fairway of the Hudson River at its narrowest point, and their application has been denied by the Federal authorities. The proposal to narrow the Hudson River at that point has been passed upon by four successive Secretaries of War, including myself when I held that office. They have uniformly decided against the proposition. I myself hold firmly the conviction that any further encroachments upon the existing fairway of the Hudson River at that point would be most shortsighted and eventually destructive of the commercial interests of the Nation, which it is the duty of the Federal authorities to conserve. I regard the question as one which, in the light of these successive decisions, ought to be considered as finally and irrevocably settled. If a decision, made so carefully and uniformly by so many disinterested officers of the Government, can be now successfully opened and reversed upon the insistence of local officers or local business interests, there can be no assurance of any permanent, farsighted protection of the needed width of the great river upon which the prosperity of the commerce of the greatest port of this Nation ultimately depends.

Although the authority granted by the States of New York and New Jersey to this proposed joint commission is merely advisory, nevertheless, if it were permitted, with the sanction of Congress and with the presence in its membership of a Federal engineer, to investigate and recommend upon this subject of the location of pierhead lines, it would inevitably be claimed by those interested that its recommendation should be controlling upon the question. Its conclusions would either be urged upon the Federal authorities to induce them to surrender their independent judgment or they would be made the basis for an appeal directly to Congress to overrule that judgment and arbitrarily to fix the pierhead line by statutory enactment. I believe that such conditions could only operate injuriously to a proper decision. I deem it of the highest importance that this authority over the location of harbor lines shall be exercised, not by local officials, subject to the bias and prejudices of their locality, but by officers of the General Government after careful judicial investigation, as at present, exercising their functions with a vision broad enough to embrace the interests of the entire Nation.

I therefore return the joint resolution without my approval, suggesting that it be amended by a proviso that the authority of the joint commission of which such officer shall be a member shall not extend to the consideration of or recommendation upon the location of any harbor lines within the said port.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 4, 1913.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution referred to in the President's veto message be passed, the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. And upon that motion I desire to be heard when it is proper that I should be.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] moves that on reconsideration the House shall pass the resolution; the objection of the President to the contrary notwithstanding. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution (H. J. Res. 210) authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized to designate an officer of the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, whose assignment of duty relates to harbor work in, or in the neighborhood of, New York Harbor to act as a member of the said New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission: Provided, That no expense shall accrue to the United States by reason of such appointment, and the officer designated may receive such compensation for his services on said commission as may be provided by the States aforesaid.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is with naturally a great reluctance that I rise to make this motion, as a first-term Member. But the reading of the veto message discloses clearly that the President lacked certain essential information in writing as he did. I quote, Mr. Speaker, from the message wherein the President says:

When it was first proposed to me that an officer of the Corps of Engineers should be made a member of a State commission proposed to be created by the States of New York and New Jersey—

And so forth.

That commission, Mr. Speaker, had been in existence more than a year—I believe two years—when it was suggested to the President that he appoint an officer of the Corps of Engineers to make a seventh member of it. And in spite of that fact, the message dated yesterday, refers to this as a "proposed commission." Further, in the veto message the President writes:

Although the authority granted by the States of New York and New Jersey in this proposed joint commission—

Again displaying the fact that, in the multitude of duties which engage his attention at this time, he has not been correctly informed as to the fact, which is that this commission which he twice refers to as a "proposed commission" has for two years been diligently at work endeavoring to adjust the differences existing between the States of New Jersey and New York in respect to that most momentous question, the harbor line.

It was my honor first to suggest to the President that, complying with the request made by the Legislature of New Jersey, he should appoint a seventh member of this commission The Legislature of New York, by resolution, did its part in creating this commission and appointed three commissioners; the Legislature of New Jersey did its part in creating this commission and appointed three commissioners, but added to its resolution a request that the President should appoint a seventh commissioner. When I had the honor to wait upon the President at the request of Gov. Wilson to ask him to comply with the request of the New Jersey Legislature, he took the matter under consideration, and with courteous promptness informed me that he believed he required the authority of Congress to appoint that seventh commissioner. I introduced the resolution authorizing him to do so; it was referred to the House Committee on Military Affairs, investigated, referred also, of course, by the House Committee on Military Affairs to the Secretary of War, reported favorably by the House Committee on Military Affairs, and passed this House. It went to the other body of this Congress and was there passed, after proper investigation. The resolution then went to the President for his signature, completing the legal requirements, so that he might comply with the request of these two States and appoint a seventh commissioner.

Gentlemen here need not be instructed as to the necessity of the seventh commissioner. Naturally the three commissioners representing New York and the three commissioners representing New Jersey might arrive at a tie vote in respect to matters properly coming before them under the authority of the resolutions creating that commission. I call the attention of gentlemen here to the fact that in this message of the President he says:

Although the authority of the States of New York and New Jersey in this supposed joint claim is merely advisory.

That is all of their authority; but that advice is most necessary. It is, indeed, absolutely essential that the great questions which now confront the shipping interests of New York and Newark, and therefore the shipping interests of this whole country, affecting the harbor lines of New York and New Jersey, should be finally settled.

This commission can have no power—no one has suggested that it has any power—to settle the extent of the pier lines on either the Manhattan or Jersey City or Hoboken or Weehawken fronts of the North River. Of course they can have no power. It is not suggested in the resolution, either of the Legislature of New York or of New Jersey. But these two halves of the commission consist of men who in some cases have given a life study to this very vital question, and they are now finally preparing themselves to solve it. They are not a "proposed commission," as described in this veto measure, but they are an existing body of men actively at work. They require the assistance and advice of a seventh member; and, as the resolution which has just been read at the Clerk's desk provides, that seventh member should be an officer of the Engineer Corps of the Army whose duties are related to the waters in and about the harbor of New York.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAY rose.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will yield first to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] next.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman refers to the language of the President about "a proposed commission," and takes exception to that language. I do not think it is very important, but it is quite certain that the existing commission does not consist of seven members, one of them being an engineer officer of the Army, and the "proposed commission," as I understand the language of the veto message, refers to the commission as it would exist if the resolution became a law and an engineer officer of the Army were detailed as a member of that commission. We can not require the State of New York or the State of New Jersey to accept an engineer officer as a member of the commission unless they consent to it, and the "proposed commission" is the one which will be organized with the engineer officer as a member.

But, barring that, does not the gentleman believe that it would be wiser to let the veto message and the resolution go to the committee which reported it for further examination before asking for a vote in the House?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am disposed at all times to accept suggestions of the gentleman from Illinois when given in the friendly spirit in which he now speaks, and under ordinary circumstances I would at this time adopt his suggestion that this matter lie over. But I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois and other Members of the House that this question of the harbor line in New York is urgent and acute, and the gentleman must understand that when I speak of that I am just as much interested as any New York Member, because the waters of New Jersey—that part of New Jersey which I in part represent—are a part of New York Harbor and are so treated in the statutes. I would adopt the gentleman's suggestion if it were not, as I say, that this matter has become acute.

Mr. HAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. In one second I will yield. Trans-Atlantic lines have already launched and are now outfitting steamers which have no berth into which they can be hauled, either on the Manhattan side or on the New Jersey side of New York Harbor. The matter is acute, I repeat, and should be definitely settled as soon as possible.

Mr. MANN. Assuming all that to be true, this resolution passed the House by unanimous consent, being on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, having apparently the recommendation of the War Department. Since then it has gone to the President, and the President has sent his veto message to the House. Now, the gentleman knows that the President in acting upon matters of this sort has the resolution referred to the proper department before he disposes of it, and in this case it is apparent and we have the right to assume that the Engineer Department of the War Department has advised the veto message. In that situation does not the gentleman think that before asking the House to vote the resolution over the President's veto we ought to have an opportunity given to the committee to investigate the matter, or at least that the membership of the House should have an opportunity to investigate it more than it can be done by mere debate?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will withhold my answer until the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs [Mr. HAY] asks his question, which may give the information desired by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HAY. The President recommends a proviso which, if put upon the resolution, will cure the objections he has to it. What objection has the gentleman from New Jersey to the proviso recommended by the President in his veto message?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I ask that that proviso be read again.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proviso, if there be no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

I therefore return the joint resolution without my approval, suggesting that it be amended by a proviso that the authority of the joint commission of which such officer shall be a member shall not extend to the consideration of or recommendation upon the location of any harbor lines within the said port.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, the very purpose of this commission is to locate harbor lines. The President does not say there that this commission shall not determine pier lines. Of course, this commission can only recommend pier lines to Congress or to the Secretary of War.

Mr. HAY. What does the gentleman say as to the contention of the President that the Federal Government has complete control of these pierheads and harbor lines?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I concur in that contention absolutely; but the legislatures of these two States, after repeated delays, have decided in their wisdom that the best way to determine what is essential to cure the existing evils there would be to create this commission. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the commission have been at work for a year or more—two years I believe. They have accumulated data of very great importance; they are earnestly pushing their work in order that they may lay before the departments of the Government and Congress, and the committee of which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] is chairman [the Committee on Military Affairs], data which is important and absolutely essential to proper legislation. They are proceeding upon a matter that, as the President's message says, is of importance to the whole United States, and my objection to further delay is that delay can not be afforded in view of the imminent needs of the shipping interests of the harbors concerned. We are starved for harbor room and harbor facilities, not only in New York, but in Newark. Our commerce in Newark is growing so rapidly that the city of Newark itself is preparing plans to spend millions of dollars for harbor improvement independent of what Federal aid may be given to us.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New Jersey yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. OLMSTED. I understand the gentleman from New Jersey to agree entirely with the President that the question of harbor lines is one over which the Federal Government has entire control. Why, then, should we agree to a commission in which the Federal Government will have only one member out of seven?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will answer the question in this way: An Army engineer goes up to New York. Or there may be three Army engineers if you please. They are scientists. They take hold of certain engineering problems and determine how they shall be carried out. They watch the contractors and see, for instance, that the new channel with which the gentleman is familiar is properly constructed; that the contractors do their work properly.

This joint commission, on the other hand, consists of men familiarly acquainted with the commercial interests of the ports, men who live there, men whose affairs are there. For instance, I know the members of the New Jersey commission personally, and I know that they are men who all their business lives have been concerned with this matter of the expeditious handling of commerce. They are there not because they are assigned there from the War Department scientifically to control certain engineering problems, but they are there eager to arrange this matter so that the commerce of the two ports, which are one port, shall be most efficiently, economically, and scientifically managed. These commissioners have a greater interest in the matter and a different interest than an Army engineer can have. An Army engineer is concerned with his science. He has a channel to build and he designs it, he watches it and controls the work.

But these commissioners want to know how near they can bring a ship to rail, how much they can improve the shipping facilities of the port of New York—or Newark, if you please—part of which I have the honor to represent, by dredging a channel close to unlimited warehouses and manufacturing plants. That is the difference, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. OLMSTED. Could not the Government send its own engineers or commissioners, who could consult with the gentlemen so well informed? Would not that be better than for the Government to send one man to constitute a part of a commission the other members of which would have the power to outvote him six to one, although he is the representative of the Federal Government, which has the right of exclusive control of these harbors?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the gentleman that there is an assumption in his statement that these gentlemen, who are, at least so far as the New Jersey members are concerned, prosperous and respected citizens, and I assume the same as to the New York members, are going to suggest to the Government a program of improvement which is calculated to injure the very medium by which, in part, they conduct their prosperous business.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not suppose they would do it intentionally, but it is a question for the Government itself and not for them to decide.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The Government must decide it in the final analysis, anyway. These gentlemen serve without pay, work hard and diligently, and suggest projects and plans to the Government. They not only suggest them, but they prepare and present to the Government data upon which the Government can intelligently act.

Mr. OLMSTED. What is to prevent them from doing it now, except that they themselves can not agree?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Because their suggestions at times must differ. They are only human beings. There are different and in some respects rival interests in New York and New Jersey which may bring them to a standstill. They are reasonable men, and they will consult with the engineer who, the resolution proposes, shall be added to the commission.

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the proviso suggested by the President that this commission shall have no power to investigate and recommend the location of harbor lines would not in effect take the very meat out of the movement that gave rise to the creation of the commission?

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman suggests the very thought: To say that we shall pass here a resolution assisting in creating a commission which shall not suggest the things they were created to suggest strikes me as evidence that the message of veto was somewhat hastily written.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Was not the resolution passed by Congress in response to an invitation from the New Jersey Legislature that the President of the United States should appoint an engineer officer to serve with a commission that had already been created?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Quite so.

Mr. BORLAND. He was asked to appoint an officer whose powers and duties had been defined by the State Legislatures of New York and New Jersey.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman states the fact.

Mr. BORLAND. We have a right to refuse the invitation, but scarcely the right to say what the States of New York and New Jersey shall do in clothing their commission with the powers that they think important.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The gentleman has stated the situation exactly.

Mr. CARLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. CARLIN. Is it not a fact that the joint commission of New York and New Jersey are powerless to fix the harbor lines without the consent of the Federal Government?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Absolutely.

Mr. CARLIN. This resolution is intended to bind the Government to the result of the deliberations of that board?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I should say not. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, as I was trying to explain to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that this joint harbor line commission is investigating a great many questions not familiar, perhaps, to some gentlemen here. Those questions include the whole Staten Island proposition, they include the far reaches of the river opposite Manhattan, the East River proposition, the harbor line which will be extended by the barge canal coming down there, the Jamaica Bay project, and they also include the extension of harbor lines in many directions which are necessary to accommodate the rapidly growing commerce there.

Mr. CARLIN. The appointment of an engineer is not essential to the investigation by that board.

Mr. TOWNSEND. No; but the indorsement of the engineer will make of much greater value the recommendations of the committee when Congress and the executive departments of the Government find that the recommendations come not only from the joint harbor committee, but from a joint harbor committee acting with the advice of a member of the Engineer Corps.

Mr. CARLIN. Is it not a fact that the Engineer Corps could give the advice without being a member of this commission?

Mr. TOWNSEND. They could, but it is desirable that such advice should be given by an engineer officer who is known as acting with the commission.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. KAHN. To what extent would the activities of this board be circumscribed if the Army officer were to act with them in an advisory capacity, although he made no recommendation as to the amounts to be expended? That, as I understand, is the purpose of the amendment suggested by the President.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will say to the gentleman from California there is no proposal here that this board should recommend amounts to be expended. What they want to do is to so determine for all time, or within vision of human eyes, what it is best to do to establish these hundreds of miles of harbor front; to make a cohesive plan—a plan harmonious and which will equally apply to both States and all the waters not only of New York, the lower bay and upper bay, but at Newark—both the kills and both the rivers. It is a very large and interesting proposition.

These gentlemen have worked diligently; they are gentlemen of intelligence, gentlemen of rectitude and standing; and they now ask the Government to supply them with scientific advice, and the President, laboring, apparently, under the inadvertence of not being informed that this commission already exists, suggests that they be not so advised. That is the effect of the veto.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman stated in the course of his remarks that the President evidently was not fully advised and suggested that the President had used language in his message to the effect that this was a "proposed" joint body. I think the gentleman will find upon examining the President's message more clearly that the word "proposed," as he used it, referred to the legislation on the part of the State of New Jersey and to the State legislation now existing prior to the creation of the body, and that it does not refer to the joint resolution before the House.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Of course the gentleman is at liberty to interpret the language as he sees fit.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I know the gentleman does not wish to place a wrong construction upon the language.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain the House any longer. The House has listened with great patience and courtesy to me. I will read the language, and the gentleman can construe it as he wishes and I reserve the privilege of construing it as I understand it. The President writes in his message:

> When it was first proposed to me that an officer of the Corps of Engineers should be made a member of a State commission proposed to be created—

If the gentleman thinks that the term "proposed to be created" is equivalent to the term "already created," that a proposed thing is a fait accompli, then we differ in our conception of the meaning of the English language and I am doubtless wrong. I also call his attention to this language, on page 4 of the message:

> Although the authority granted by the States of New York and New Jersey in this proposed joint commission.

The joint commission was created more than a year ago, and I am under the impression two years ago, and has been in active operation. If that means that a commission is still to be created, I shall take a new grip upon my study of the English language.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. There is evidently a difference of opinion with reference to the language in the message. I can not quite agree with the construction the gentleman places upon it. I do not know whether his notes——

Mr. TOWNSEND. They are taken verbatim. I had an opportunity to examine the message before it was read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes.

Mr. BORLAND. I will ask the gentleman to yield me time enough to have inserted as a part of my remarks the letter of Gov. Woodrow Wilson requesting this officer and the reply of President Taft.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; I will gladly yield the gentleman enough time to read it at this time.

Mr. BORLAND. Very well; I will read it. I read now from the report of the Committee on Military Affairs, to accompany House joint resolution 210:

> In pursuance with request of the New Jersey Legislature the governor of New Jersey wrote to the President of the United States, as follows:
> "I take the liberty of sending you inclosed a copy of joint resolution of the two houses of the New Jersey Legislature passed and approved in March last.
> "In compliance with that resolution I venture to ask if you would be willing to appoint an experienced member of the Engineering Corps of the Army, acquainted with port conditions in and around New York, to confer with the commissioners from this State and from the State of New York with regard to the matters referred to in the joint resolution. I know the interest felt by the War Department in the important matter of the development of the great port of New York, and I sincerely hope that it will be possible for you to permit us to have the invaluable cooperation suggested.
> "Cordially and sincerely, yours,
> In reply to the above letter the President of the United States wrote to the governor of New Jersey as follows:
> "I am fully in sympathy with the proposition for the joint commissions provided for by your State and New York, but the statutes of the United States are so strict with reference to my appointing commissions without the specific authority of Congress that I have referred your letter to the Secretary of War for consideration as to whether we have any authority. If we conclude that we have not—as is quite likely—then the Secretary of War and I will bring to the attention of Congress the necessity for such action as will enable us to cooperate with you fully in the useful purpose of your commission.
> "Sincerely, yours,
> "WILLIAM H. TAFT."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. BORLAND. I reserved only time enough to read this.

Mr. KAHN. As I heard the letter of the governor of New Jersey, and as I understood it, he asked for an Army officer to confer with this commission—the commission appointed by the two States. He did not ask for an officer to act with them as a member of the commission, but for an officer to confer with them. Is not the President's veto predicated upon the fact that the resolution provided that this officer should act with this commission, and does not the President suggest that the officer simply be placed in a position where he can confer with this commission?

Mr. BORLAND. No. The gentleman from California has not read the veto message with the care necessary to find out that point.

Mr. KAHN. I have not read it at all.

Mr. BORLAND. The President vetoes the resolution upon the ground that the harbor lines in New York have been fixed as recommended by four successive Secretaries of War, including himself, and that that question is not open and ought not to be reopened, and that he will not appoint an Army officer unless the powers of the State commissions herein spoken of are restricted so that they may not recommend any change in the harbor lines. That being the purpose of the commission, of course it would not be possible or wise for Congress to so suggest that they be restricted. It would not be wise if it were possible, and it is not possible. If the President's veto went no further than to say the Army officer should not be a member of the commission, that that would not be a wise thing from the Federal standpoint, that he should be designated to confer with the commission, I am satisfied that New Jersey and New York would accede to that kind of a change in the invitation extended.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, I will not detain the Members longer, except to say this: Here is an opportunity to get some action on this matter of finally determining certain very important points in relation to that one harbor, consisting of the bays and rivers of New Jersey and of New York. This resolution merely empowers the President to appoint a scientific adviser to this joint commission, and I hope that we will not be deprived of that at this very critical time, because we are being pressed on all sides in New Jersey as well as New York for the determination of this question.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I made the suggestion a moment ago to the gentleman from New Jersey that the resolution which was vetoed and the veto message might be sent to the Committee on Military Affairs, which reported the resolution, so that the House might have more full information. May I understand now from the gentleman from New Jersey whether he declines to accept the suggestion that the matter be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, or whether he proposes to insist upon voting upon the veto proposition at this time?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I say again to the gentleman from Illinois I reluctantly declined the suggestion made by him in good faith and——

Mr. MANN. I have no criticism of the gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present. It is quite evident we will have to have the House here before we can act upon a veto message.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that other business pending here would be delayed, I will withdraw my motion, and I do so reluctantly, that the resolution do pass the veto of the President notwithstanding, and move that the resolution and President's message be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey moves that the resolution and the President's veto message be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

THE LATE REPRESENTATIVE SMITH OF CALIFORNIA.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the following order.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That Sunday, February 23, 1913, be set apart for addresses upon the life, character, and public services of the Hon. SYLVESTER CLARK SMITH, late a Representative from the State of California.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the order was agreed to.

RETURN TO SENATE OF H. R. 17256.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following resolution from the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill H. R. 17256, "An act to fix the the status of officers of the Army and Navy detailed for aviation duty and to increase the efficiency of the aviation service."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate is agreed to.

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 28499, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 28499, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. RODDENBERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, there is a point of order pending, made by the gentleman from Kentucky against the figures "$1,600," in line 7, page 66.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I did not make any point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX] made the point of order. I concede the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by adding after the word "one" the figures "$1,500" in line 7, page 66.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 66, line 7, after the word "one," insert the figures "$1,500."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Writs of lunacy: To defray the expenses attending the execution of writs de lunatico inquirendo and commitments thereunder in all cases of indigent insane persons committed or sought to be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane by order of the executive authority of the District of Columbia under the provisions of existing law, including the employment of an alienist at not exceeding $1,200 per annum, $3,500.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to return to the item of the Metropolitan police and that the Chairman hear the discussion on the point of order.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on this paragraph before we leave it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves a point of order upon the last paragraph read. The gentleman from Texas requests that the committee recur to page 54, under the head of "Metropolitan police," on the point of order raised against the paragraph and on the succeeding paragraph.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] desire to have the matter on which my colleague [Mr. FOWLER] reserved a point of order disposed of, so as to get rid of that item before we go back?

Mr. BURLESON. I am perfectly willing to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] reserved a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I can not see any reason for increasing the salary of the alienist in this paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the alienist is an accomplished physician, a man of ability, and repeatedly the District Commissioners have urged that his compensation be increased. Last year we received a number of communications from physicians in the city urging that additional compensation be allowed.

Mr. COX. Does he devote all of his time to this work?

Mr. BURLESON. He devotes most of his time to this work. He is an expert in this line, and he does not devote all of his time to the work, but for a graduated physician $1,000 was considered by the committee as inadequate compensation for this service.

Mr. FOWLER. You can not find a very learned alienist even for $1,200, although he spend only half of his time. Well, Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. I renew the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. FOSTER. I might not want to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] withdraws the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURLESON. I desire to amend by inserting "1,000" in lieu of the "1,200" stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Writs of lunacy: To defray the expenses attending the execution of writs de lunatico inquirendo and commitments thereunder in all cases of indigent insane persons committed or sought to be committed to the Government Hospital for the Insane by order of the executive authority of the District of Columbia under the provisions of existing law, including the employment of an alienist at not exceeding $1,000 per annum, $3,300.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] requests that the committee return to page 54, line 19, the Metropolitan police, and proceed with the consideration of the points of order made against that paragraph and the succeeding paragraphs. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have stated the case, and if the gentleman on the other side, after having been heard, present anything worth while, I may have something more to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order. A point of order was directed to the paragraph on the ground, as stated by the gentleman from Kentucky, that it was not in order, because the item should be paid wholly from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and upon the other points of order on which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] reserved points of order, the Chair is not ready to rule, because the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has not specifically stated what those points of order are. But the Chair is ready to rule on the first one.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I do not care to present any matters to the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia rise to speak in support of or against the point of order?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I intended to give the history of legislation in this matter and show that beyond any question the point of order is not well taken. The history of legislation from the beginning of the formation of the Metropolitan police force down to its abolition and then the appearance of this item in the statute in connection with other matter shows that beyond question the point of order, as I expect to submit to the Chair, is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS]. The Chair will rule. The act of June 11, 1878, creating a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia provided that the expense and cost of maintaining the police force should be paid half and half from the revenues of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia, respectively. On June 20, 1878, the Congress passed in the sundry civil appropriation bill the following provision:

And the said commissioners are hereby authorized to fix the salaries to be paid to the officers and privates of the Metropolitan police until otherwise provided by law and to require the Washington Gas Light Co. to light the city lamps at such price as shall by said commissioners appear to be just and reasonable, and all expenses heretofore incurred by the General Government for the board of health, for the Metropolitan police, and for gas inspection shall hereafter be a charge upon the government of the District.

It is evident from reading that section of the act that the words "government of the District" are not employed as designating the legal title of the District government, because the word "government" begins with a small letter. It relates, then, to the fact of government and not to the form of government; the function of government, not the style of government. The act of 1878 having provided in what way the expenses of government of the District should be paid, the Chair fails to see how in any way the insertion of the paragraph in the sundry civil bill would change or conflict with the existing organic act of June 11, 1878.

In this connection it will be noted that in June, 1878, the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress was in progress. At that time there was no District of Columbia appropriation bill, eo nomine, but the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia were carried from year to year in the sundry civil bill. The same Congress, then, which enacted the clause of June 20, 1878, was the identical Congress that in 1879, at the second session of the same Congress, passed the sundry civil appropriation bill, charging the expenses of the Metropolitan police force equally against the Federal Treasury and the District treasury.

The act of the same Congress, at its second session, recognizing the half-and-half provision, goes of its own weight as an argument if not an implied construction. The same Congress which engrafted onto the sundry civil bill the paragraph upon which the gentleman from Kentucky bases the point of order, in the year immediately succeeding, provided appropriation for and charged the expense of the Metropolitan police force equally against the Federal Government and the District of Columbia. If there were any ambiguity this circumstance might, under the rules of legal construction, be looked to.

The Chair might recount also somewhat the history of the police force and the health board prior to 1878 and subsequent to 1878, but it seems to the Chair that the language of the section of the act upon which the point of order is sought to be based is sufficient of itself to warrant and indeed to impel the Chair to overrule the point of order. The organic act of June 11, 1878, charged the expense of the government of the District jointly and equally against the District and Federal Government revenues. The act of June 20, 1878, in no way changed that law, but in fact reenacted it by charging the maintenance of the Metropolitan police to the government of the District. A reenactment pro tanto. Accordingly the point of order is overruled. The Clerk will read, unless the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] desires to present other points of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that the Chair's ruling embraces also the various points of order directed against the paragraph in the health department.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair intends the ruling to be so construed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I accept the ruling to one as applying to all.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know how far the Clerk had read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk announces that he had read down to and including line 22, on page 67.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He skipped a whole lot.

Mr. MANN. It was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first amendment pending.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I have some points of order reserved through these several pages. I am hurrying all I can to find them.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will indulge the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there is one salary, on page 57, line 19, that is increased from $540 to $600.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] makes a point of order. Which $600 salary does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The hostler, $600.

Mr. BURLESON. I concede the point of order; but I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What page is the health department on?

Mr. BURLESON. On page 59, at the bottom of the page.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] a question in reference to these sanitary and food inspectors?

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that the paragraph as heretofore carried in the bill was very confusing, and we asked last year that the chief health officer reorganize his force, or rather that he rewrite the paragraph of the bill so that it could be readily understood by Members of Congress.

Mr. MANN. That is not what I wanted to ask about. The provision in the new paragraph with reference to 12 sanitary and food inspectors requires that they "shall be employed in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws and the regulations relating thereto and in the inspection of dairies and dairy farms." Has the gentleman been able to ascertain how much the Government is now spending inspecting dairy farms around Washington?

Mr. BURLESON. I am unable to state with any degree of accuracy the aggregate cost to the Government of inspecting dairy farms, but in these paragraphs carrying appropriations for the health service there were various provisions providing for milk inspection and milk inspectors and veterinary surgeons who should be inspectors of dairies. When the item was redrafted by the health officer, in order that the service should not be diminished or impaired in the slightest we aggregated the number of inspectors that were carried in bills heretofore for the milk service, and put this particular provision in the bill, that "not less than 12 sanitary and food inspectors, above provided for, shall be employed in the enforcement of the milk and pure-food laws," because that was the number of inspectors heretofore detailed for that service.

Mr. MANN. Heretofore we have provided specifically in this bill for two inspectors of dairies and dairy farms. You now have here a paragraph that would authorize 12. Of course, it is not expected that those 12 will be engaged in that work. I have no criticism of that, but I wish to know whether the gentleman has received any information as to how much the Government is now expending. Gentlemen understand that the Bureau of Animal Industry, under its general powers, sends inspectors all over this territory tributary to Washington inspecting dairies and dairy farms, so that I think the traveling expenses alone of the inspectors employed in the Bureau of Animal Industry doing this same work amount to more than the entire appropriation for this purpose in the District bill.

Mr. BURLESON. That is probably true, but the gentleman from Illinois knows——

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that, after all, there ought to be some segregation in some bill, and that we ought to know how much we are spending in inspecting the milk of which we happen to partake, as against the rest of the country, which has to pay its own expenses?

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that the very purpose of the re-formation of this item was to simplify it, in order that we might get before us an idea as to how many of these inspectors were engaged in inspecting milk.

Mr. MANN. But it just goes the other way. Now, under the existing law there are two inspectors of dairies and dairy farms. The gentleman cuts out the two and lumps them in with twelve, authorizing the whole twelve to be used for certain purposes, which may be necessary. I do not know about that.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will take the old bill——

Mr. MANN. I have a copy of it in my hand.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman will take the old bill and go over it carefully he will find that a number of these inspectors were required to perform service as milk inspectors. We have aggregated the entire number and have tried to keep just as many in this service as the old bill required or authorized.

Mr. MANN. Under the existing law do the milk inspectors also become inspectors of dairies and dairy farms?

Mr. BURLESON. Some of them.

Mr. MANN. We having specifically provided for inspectors of dairies and dairy farms, do the other inspectors do that same work under the head of milk inspectors?

Mr. BURLESON. Some of them do and some of them do not. Some of them are veterinarians. Those that are veterinarians, in addition to inspecting milk or securing samples to be inspected at the laboratory, are engaged in performing service as dairy inspectors.

Mr. MANN. And then, in addition to that, the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Agricultural Department duplicates the work, and has other inspectors inspecting the same dairies and the same dairy farms.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman remember the amount that the Bureau of Animal Industry spend in duplicating this service?

Mr. MANN. I do not remember the amount. My attention was attracted by a report in regard to traveling expenses, and I ran down the items of the traveling expenses of inspectors inspecting dairies and dairy farms adjacent to Washington.

Mr. COX. According to the Book of Estimates, the amount is between $25,000 and $30,000.

Mr. MANN. I do not remember the amount; but I found a considerable number of inspectors of the Bureau of Animal Industry doing inspecting work during long periods of the year and incurring considerable traveling expenses in addition to their salaries. Whether we get the benefit of their work or not I do not know, but it is quite certain that we are spending a very large sum of money in inspecting the dairies and dairy farms around Washington. It ought to be done by some one bureau or department of the Government and not duplicated by several.

Mr. BURLESON. Of course there is no authorization for any inspector, appointed under the provisions of the Agricultural appropriation bill, making any inspections within the limits of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. These inspectors do not make inspections within the limits of the District of Columbia to any considerable extent.

Mr. BURLESON. Some of them do.

Mr. MANN. To the extent that there are dairies in the District of Columbia, and they are few and far between.

Mr. BURLESON. I will admit that, but there are some.

Mr. MANN. The milk comes from outside, and that is where they do the inspecting.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman that they inspect the dairies which are within the limits of the District of Columbia, too, I doubt not, although it is in violation of law. We have only furnished such inspectors as the District authorities have from time to time insisted were necessary for the proper performance of that service, and in re-forming this item we tried to continue in the District service the same number of inspectors that have heretofore been detailed as milk and dairy inspectors.

Mr. MANN. I am calling the attention of the gentleman from Texas to the situation because as an alternative proposition I hope that next year, if he is the Secretary of Agriculture, as I trust he will be [applause]——

Mr. BURLESON. Upon that subject I have no information. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN (continuing). He will take the matter into consideration there, or, if he is making up the District bill here, he will ascertain how much work is being done by the Bureau of Animal Industry for the benefit of the District at the instance of the health officer here, possibly much of which is duplicated.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, on page 64, beginning at line 7, down to and including line 23, inclusive, I make a point of order that it is legislation; not that this item entirely gives away the public domain, but that it is selling it for a trifle.

Mr. BURLESON. We endeavored to ascertain the real value of these lots, and we accepted the only information that was offered us on the subject. We are trying to impose on the District government the burden of paying one-half of the value of the lots upon which the farm was established.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question with reference to this item?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. If the item goes out and the District does not pay for the land, will not they still have possession of it just the same?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; but the Government will still own the land and the house on it.

Mr. MANN. What good will that do the Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It may be of value some time to the Government, and I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, what became of page 60?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

The Clerk again reported the amendment.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Texas will withdraw his point of order. The situation is this: The poundmaster—Mr. Emil Kuhn—of this city for many years was paid $1,500, which was a very modest and well-earned salary. Last year for the first time it was reduced to $1,200, and he was the only employee in the District, so far as I have been able to find, whose salary was reduced. In addition to that, one subordinate in the department was taken away from him entirely, thus increasing his duties. Since the passage of the last appropriation bill the District Commissioners have imposed on the poundmaster an additional burden of taking care of the cats in the District. That is a very hazardous undertaking, as everybody knows; chasing cats is not usually a profitable or a pleasant pastime. Mr. Kuhn, who holds this position and has held it for some years, has been recommended by all the commissioners as an efficient and diligent officer and he certainly deserves the sum of $1,500, which was paid to his predecessor for a number of years and was paid to him during recent years. I believe the committee will so vote if the gentleman from Texas will not press his point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state that Mr. Kuhn, who holds the position, is a very efficient officer and is discharging his duties in a very satisfactory manner. The salary heretofore in the bill was carried for reasons which were explained last year, and the committee felt constrained to restore the salary to the sum it was before those reasons were brought into existence. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What became of the point of order that I made to lines 7 to 23, inclusive, on page 64?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky was sustained. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

Mr. CARLIN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to return to page 33, where there was a point of order pending against lines 4 to 11, inclusive. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the motion by which the item at the bottom of page 67, line 22, was stricken out on a point of order, so that I may restore the original sum reported in the bill. I desire to state again that the salary paid to this officer, the alienist, is a very small salary for the services he renders. I ask now that the item be reconsidered, that my motion to substitute $1,000 in the blank, after sustaining the point of order, be reconsidered.

Mr. MANN. I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph. In doing so I will say that I made a point of order against this paragraph in the bill of a year ago, but failed to get a ruling going directly to the matter. I have sent to the present occupant of the chair a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing three arguments heretofore made by me upon the subject, and also containing the arguments made by gentlemen who at that time opposed my views. In addition to that, I wish to read an opinion rendered by the attorney general of the State of New York, which throws some additional light upon this subject. The communication which I read is as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK,
OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Albany, November 9, 1875.

Hon. D. C. ELLIS,
Superintendent of Bank Department.

DEAR SIR: Yours of October 29, 1875, with inclosures, was duly received. The attorney general has examined with considerable care the questions propounded to the superintendent of the bank department on behalf of several savings banks in the city of New York, and has come to the conclusion that trustees of savings banks may, under the statutes of this State, lawfully invest the moneys deposited in said banks in the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia, issued under the acts of Congress of June 20, 1874, and February 20, 1875. By chapter 371 of the session laws of 1875, section 26, trustees of savings banks are authorized "to invest moneys deposited in those banks in stocks or bonds of the United States or those for which the faith of the United States is pledged to provide for the payment of interest and principal."

By section 7 of the act of Congress of June 20, 1874, as amended by the act of February 20, 1875, after providing for the issue of the bonds in question, and for the form thereof, it is further provided as follows:

"That the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will [by proper proportional appropriations, as contemplated by this act, and by causing to be levied upon property within said district such taxes as will do so] provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on such bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund to pay the principal thereof at maturity."

The terms of this provision are so similar to those used in our State statute, in regard to investments by trustees of savings banks, as to raise a strong inference that the framers of the latter act must have had the acts of Congress in relation to the issue of these bonds before them and framed the act with special reference to these acts.

That was signed by Daniel Pratt, attorney general.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, as I stated in an argument upon this question upon the floor of the House made on the 12th of January a year ago, when the contemplated purchase of these bonds was under consideration by New York banking institutions, the distinguished Charles O'Conor was employed by them to give his opinion as to whether or not it would be a safe investment for them. That distinguished jurist, after going through the matter, recommended to President Grant that the words "do so" be added to the original act, and when those words were supplied it made the act read:

That the faith of the United States is hereby pledged * * * by causing to be levied upon property within said District such taxes as will do so, provide the revenue necessary—

And so forth. In addition to that, Mr. O'Conor, in treating of the subject, used this language in speaking of the methods adopted by the United States Government to see these bonds were paid:

By naming the methods in which the United States designs to perform its obligation—that is, through taxation on the District.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, were those words inserted according to his suggestion?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They were, and according to the opinion rendered by him they made the obligations payable out of the taxes levied upon the District of Columbia. Mr. Chairman, a year ago I stated as emphatically as I could, but for the benefit of those who did not read what I had to say on that occasion, as well as for those who are present now who were not present then, I wish to make this statement: That the faith of the United States has been solemnly pledged by the Congress to see that these bonds, both principal and interest, are paid. I take the position that as between the United States Government and the bondholder the United States Government is bound to him for the full payment of both principal and interest. That question and that question alone was always discussed by everybody who entered upon a discussion of that subject, but until I took up another feature of the bill a year ago nobody, from 1874 until now, that I could find, had ever discussed the proposition as to the liability existing between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia. My contention is, as I just said, that the United States Government is liable to the bondholder simply as a guarantor, and that as between the United States Government and the District of Columbia the United States Government is only such guarantor.

One of the first questions raised upon the floor of this House upon the subject was raised—I forget the year—by Mr. De Armond, then a Representative in Congress from the State of Missouri, when the House was presided over in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. Mr. De Armond offered an amendment to the sinking-fund and interest clause. After discussion of it, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] rendered a carefully prepared ruling. In that ruling he decided against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond. In rendering that ruling I contend that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] substantiated the principle for which I now stand, because to have sustained the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond, would have overruled my position, but when the gentleman from New York held the point of order good to the amendment offered by Mr. De Armond he then practically sustained the position for which I now contend. That ruling I have also, together with the one rendered a year ago by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], sent to the Chair, and I trust that he has read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the arguments made pro and con upon this question as well as the ruling rendered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], and also that rendered a year ago by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. When the matter was up for discussion a year ago I was taking the position that inasmuch as the law directed that the Secretary of the Treasury should advance the money with which to pay the interest as it accrued that he was also thereby directed to charge it up against the District of Columbia as an advancement upon such appropriations as the Congress might make for the benefit of the District of Columbia. In the midst of my argument upon that occasion I was asked a question by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] as to whether or not the amount set out in the bill for the purposes of the sinking fund and interest was accurate, and my answer, of course, was I did not know; that I had not made the computation, but I did not believe that it had ever been accurate, for the reason that the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States could not in advance say what bonds of the 3.65 denomination would be redeemed during the then next six months ahead of him. Some gentleman upon the floor, I do not recall just who it was, left the floor, went into the cloakroom and used the telephone, and called up the Treasurer of the United States, and asked him if the amount appropriated in the bill had always been accurate, and as to whether or not there was any deficit left from that appropriation, or whether it had ever been exceeded. The answer came back, I can not give the words, but in substance, that the appropriation had always been accurate. Since then the accountant authorized by this House, who is going over the accounts between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, has gone into that subject.

I have in my hand now only a partial report. When this was given to me a day or two ago by the accountant he had not completed the investigation, but the partial report shows that thirty-seven times the amount appropriated by Congress was insufficient to pay this sinking-fund item. The Treasurer of the United States, for the fiscal year ending 1882, in going into the Treasury to get more money than had been appropriated with which to pay the interest on these bonds, states in print in his report that he relies upon section 4 of the act of June 11, 1878, in order to get that money, that section being that the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to pay this interest, or rather to advance the money with which to pay this interest, and then to recoup the Federal Treasury out of the appropriations made by Congress as a subsidy to the District of Columbia. As I said, this partial report which I have in my hand gives the ledger number, the page, the fiscal year, the date of warrant, and the amount in thirty-seven times——

Mr. GARNER. In 37 different years?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not 37 different years, because the interest is payable semiannually, but upon 37 different semiannual payments; and this is only a partial list, the Treasurer of the United States insisting that the authority was conveyed by the last appropriation act, which is exactly similar to this, and relied upon the act which I am relying upon, and he advanced the money to pay this interest.

Mr. COX. What is the variation in the amount?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will read the amounts beyond the appropriation bill in each instance to which the Treasurer went, and then I will insert the whole statement.

The statement is as follows:

[1] Treasury ledger gives as authority U. S. Stat., vol. 21, 465, 466.

Treasurer's published report fiscal year ending 1882 relies upon sec. 4, act June 11, 1878.

As the gentleman sees, the total is $180,485.18.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Were those semiannual?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They were semiannual payments made by the Treasurer of the United States Government, following the directions contained in section 4 of the act of June 11, 1878, for the purpose of paying the interest on these bonds.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. As I understand, the amounts you have read are those paid by the Treasurer in excess of the authorization?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In excess of the authorization, but not in excess of the real authorization. I contend he had a perfect right to do it. He carried it in excess of the amount contained in the appropriation bill, but not in excess of the original act directing him to pay it, and then to charge it back to the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. How does the gentleman account, I would like to know, for the variation in the amounts? The excess on one occasion was $37 and on another occasion it was $24,000. The amounts due semiannually would be the same, presumably, would they not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; there are some coupons on those bonds that have never been sent in.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. He pays them as the coupons are sent in?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As the coupons are sent in, and there are coupons due for thirty-seven and odd years that have never been sent in.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. MANN. What proportion of this is for interest and what proportion for the sinking fund in the appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know and have not the slightest idea.

Mr. MANN. These amounts that were advanced by the Government, as the gentleman states, were charged up to the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They have not been charged up to the District yet, all of which will be shown in a hearing upon which I will begin in the next few days.

Mr. MANN. Those amounts, as the gentleman believes, are simply paid out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They have been paid out of the Treasury of the United States upon a debt that they never owed.

Mr. MANN. Regardless of that part, I wanted to get at the facts if I could. We appropriate $975,408, one-half out of the District treasury and one-half out of the Federal Treasury; now, these excess amounts have been paid wholly out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They have.

Mr. MANN. And not charged to the District at all?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman advances this proposition as a construction of the Treasurer in this letter. I suppose the gentleman wants to go only halfway with the construction. Apparently, the Treasurer construed that he had the authority to pay it out of the Treasury and it did not require him to charge it up against the District?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He did; and I am not here to criticize him for it.

Mr. MANN. It is a question of fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am inclined to the opinion that the Treasurer of the United States, without one word being said about it in this bill, can go and pay that interest. And I base that opinion upon what is done relative to the interest on the Government bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury, under general law, is directed to pay interest on the debt of the United States, and you can search all the appropriation bills and you can not find a specific appropriation made for that purpose.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. OLMSTED. If I correctly understand the gentleman from Kentucky, he says that by the general law, and without any authority to be contained in this bill, the Treasurer of the United States is authorized to pay the interest on these bonds?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. By general law the Treasurer of the United States is directed to advance the money and pay the interest on these bonds, and that direction carries with it a further clause, and that is, that in the adjustment of the account between the District and the Federal Government the amount so advanced shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Mr. OLMSTED. What is the act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The act of June 28, 1874, which reads as follows:

> Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable, and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as herein provided.

Now, Mr. Chairman, my point is this, and I not only wish the Chair to catch it but I wish the Members of the House to get it: That the provision now pending before the House for consideration has only the naked words—

> For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408.

Now, that is a direct appropriation in equal parts from the treasury of the District as well as from the Federal Treasury. My contention is this, that there is no law to authorize that, but there is a law which authorizes that this interest shall be paid with the limitation placed upon it, that—

> The same shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as herein provided.

I insist that that is the law and that when the Committee on Appropriations brings in here a clause expressed in a few words, leaving out the limitation that that money must be repaid by the District of Columbia to the Federal Government, the law has not been complied with. They have no authority, and I defy them to produce any authority, which authorizes the direct appropriation of Federal moneys to the payment of interest on this debt without the qualifying words that it shall be returned to the Federal Treasury to offset the appropriation made by Congress to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. MANN. Suppose this item should go out of the bill and no appropriation should be made. Under the law which the gentleman cites, as I understand from him, the Treasurer would still be obliged to pay the interest. Whether he would be obliged to provide for the sinking fund I am not prepared to say.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The law is as direct in the one case as in the other.

Mr. MANN. Then he would have to pay out of the Treasury this sum of $975,408, and probably some excess, with no means provided by law for getting it out of the District treasury into the Federal Treasury, or any part of it. Where will we be left if we make no appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I announced a year ago, Mr. Chairman, and I repeat it now, that if this item should go out of the District bill now before us I will offer an amendment, to read as follows:

> Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable, and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as herein provided for, and that the sum of $975,408 is hereby appropriated for that purpose.

Then, if the Treasurer fails to make that proper credit, the Attorney General has the right to recover it; and if he does not, we can do in this instance what we did when we found that the District of Columbia was indebted on account of the lunatic asylum to the Federal Government in the sum of $769,000. You can put it on any bill and compel the District to reimburse the Federal Treasury, just as there is an item in this bill now in part to reimburse the Federal Government on that item.

Mr. MANN. I suppose we can pass a law requiring that any sum of money shall be transferred from the District treasury to the Federal Treasury; and if that sum of money is there, it will be transferred. But without legislation nothing would be accomplished. Now, the gentleman refers to deducting this $975,408——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I read the law.

Mr. MANN. Yes; the gentleman read the law and referred to it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; both.

Mr. MANN. I do not know how the appropriation was made at that time, but this appropriation bill is not so made up that that is practicable, as it seems to me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Neither the gentleman nor I made it up.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I will say to the gentleman that I am trying to get information. If you should say that there should be $975,000 deducted from the half of the Government carried in this bill, the natural inquiry would be, "From what items should it be deducted?"

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, I have anticipated all that, and year after year I have seen the attempts made by gentlemen upon this committee to defeat a plain act of Congress, in order that this year nearly $500,000 may be given to the District of Columbia as a present. I have seen former attempts successfully made to make presents to the District of Columbia out of moneys belonging to the people of this Nation of considerably more than that for the same purpose, because the amount of interest is year by year growing smaller. At one time the interest on this debt in your annual appropriation bill was something like $1,300,000. Now upon this $15,000,000 worth of 3.65 bonds, issued to refund the old indebtedness of the District of Columbia, not one dollar of which the Federal Government owed, the Federal Government has been made to pay $22,000,000 in interest, and that upon a debt which was originally but $15,000,000.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Suppose you strike out lines 24 and 25. That brings you back, then, to the act of 1874, under which, as I understand it, the gentleman admits that the treasurer has full authority to pay not only the amount due this year but the entire principal.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It brings it back to the act of 1878, but it also brings it back to the act of 1879 relative to the sinking fund.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Under which acts the treasurer has the absolute authority to pay not only the amount due this year, but the entire amount of the principal and interest for future years until the entire debt is liquidated. Now, how would you secure from the District of Columbia the amount that you claim should be converted into the Treasury of the United States, except by some special provision? What is the gentleman's suggestion on that line?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I have not gone into that feature of the matter with the degree of carefulness that I should have, first to see that the law is complied with in this appropriation bill.

If we can ever get a ruling to the effect that the limitation must go with it, that limitation being that this money must be returned to the Federal Government, then I shall be most willing and anxious to cooperate with anybody to devise any means or measure by which the money can be gotten out with which to pay the interest when it is due, and also to provide for its being refunded to the Federal Government; and I want again to ask that my position be distinctly understood. I stand with the most extreme man here or anywhere else; I stand with the bondholder himself in saying that this is a sacred obligation upon the part of the United States, and that these bonds and interest must be paid; but in paying these bonds and interest I do raise my voice in protest against coming in here in this appropriation bill with a part of this act, and leaving out the qualifying clause that that money shall be refunded to the Federal Government.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman contend, then, that the voluntary assumption by the United States Government of the payment of this particular amount without the limitation removes the right of the Government to recover ultimately from the District?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I am of the opinion that every year when the appropriation bill reads just as it reads now, and there is no remedy to collect that which has been paid—a thing which has been repeated for many years—this proposition makes it a gift, when coupled with the first provision of the bill, which reads that the items hereafter set out in the bill shall be paid upon the half-and-half plan. Now, if the present interest and sinking fund item is taken in connection with the first provision of the bill, which is that all these items in the bill shall be paid upon the half-and-half plan, then the half of this $975,000 becomes a gift to the District of Columbia by the Federal Government, and there is where I contend there is no authority.

There is existing law which authorizes an appropriation to be made to pay this sinking fund and interest, but there is no law which authorizes this committee to bring in a bill leaving out the limitation, leaving out the qualification that this money must, when advanced by the Treasurer of the United States and paid for the District of Columbia, be repaid to the Government of the United States; that is, that the United States Government must have credit upon its appropriation made to the District of Columbia.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the Government of the United States has paid $22,000,000 in interest?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Government of the United States has paid more than $22,000,000 interest upon this $15,000,000 debt, of which it never owed a cent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman know how much was paid in pursuance of authorizations similar to the one in this appropriation bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My opinion is that the accountant who has been going over the matter will prove by their own bookkeeper that it has already been done to the extent of one and one-quarter million dollars; that there is now that much money unquestionably due from the District of Columbia to the Federal Government before this item that now appears in this appropriation bill ever appeared in any appropriation bill, including the amounts which I have just read, as overpayment on interest, and unauthorized by this bill.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If there is one million and a quarter dollars due from the District—I do not quite catch the gentleman—how does he reconcile that with the statement that over $22,000,000 has been paid by the General Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If this item that is now in this bill becomes the law, the half of $975,000 will be the interest payment as a present to the District of Columbia, and that will increase the twenty-two million to that extent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the Federal Government has already paid $22,000,000, which the gentleman from Kentucky says it ought not to have paid, then the District of Columbia would owe more than a million and a quarter dollars to the Federal Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman fails to understand me, or I fail to make myself quite clear. I will endeavor by repetition to concisely go over it again. I have just read a statement showing a payment of $180,000 more than is authorized in the bill. That one hundred and eighty-odd thousand dollars is unquestionably due from the District of Columbia to the Federal Government. Now, there are other amounts like that, but amounts paid, not under the direction as contained in the present bill, which will amount to a million and a quarter of dollars.

Mr. Chairman, a year ago I consumed the time of several hours in arguing this question. My argument now is addressed almost solely to the Chair. Having sent the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the Chair in advance, I suppose the Chair has examined it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman and to the committee that the Chair has examined the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the time the matter was presented, in 1896, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] was the Chairman, and the arguments and ruling of the Chair. He has also examined the very able and extensive arguments presented over a year ago by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TAYLOR] and others, and the arguments made a year ago by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the gentleman from Virginia, and the gentleman from Texas, and others, when this question arose on the last appropriation bill. He has also examined the persuasive ruling made at that time by the Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The Chair in the course of inquiry has also carefully examined, as he necessarily must, the acts of 1874, 1875, 1878, 1879, and the appropriation bills passed early after 1878, and some others. The Chair has given as diligent attention to the important questions involved as time in the last few days would permit. The Chair makes this statement, not to suggest an undue abbreviation of the discussion, but merely to let the gentleman from Kentucky, the gentleman from Texas, and other gentlemen understand that the Chair had given his attention to the subject, so that gentlemen who present arguments may do so with the knowledge that the Chair had looked into the statutes, rulings, and the arguments, and so forth. The point of order presents an important subject, and the Chair is disposed to hear gentlemen fully.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I shall invite the attention of the Chair particularly to the ruling made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], as well as to that made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. I ask that you take these two rulings, go through them carefully, with a view of ascertaining whether or not the ruling made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] does not thoroughly accord with my views. And further, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], in making his ruling, did not leave the main question to one side and rather avoid or evade it, and render his opinion upon another subject entirely.

As I said, I have no desire to consume the valuable time of the House in repeating arguments of a year ago, which took several hours upon my part. In order to avoid that I have sent the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, with everybody's arguments in it, to the Chair, and the Chair having announced that he has read those things, unless some one wishes to ask me a question, I am ready to submit on the arguments heretofore made.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Kentucky one or two questions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FOWLER. Does the gentleman contend that the Government should pay any part of this interest on these bonds?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My contention is this, that the law does not make the Federal Government liable, as between the Federal Government and the District of Columbia, for 1 cent of either interest or principal of these bonds, and that this section of the bill of to-day is an attempt to appropriate money without authorization, to appropriate it without at the same time using the limitation set out in the law.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, if I understand the gentleman correctly, it was an original debt of the District?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Nobody questions that.

Mr. FOWLER. And that the District is responsible for it, and all that the Government ever did on behalf of the District was to become guarantor for the payment of the bonds and interest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say to the gentleman that when these bonds were issued they sold as low as 30 cents on the dollar, but when Attorney Charles O'Conor, from New York, succeeded in having President Grant insert in his message the recommendation that the two words "do so" be added to the act, making it read that they should levy a tax to do so—to raise the revenue to pay these bonds—then those bonds went to par, and they have gone past par; they have gone as high as 128, and the sinking-fund commissioner, who is Treasurer of the United States, has retired those bonds at a premium of 128 with the law staring him in the face that none of these bonds shall be redeemed at more than par.

Mr. FOWLER. Then, if the Government does pay any part of this debt or interest, the gentleman thinks it ought to be chargeable to the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the Government pays any part of it in accordance with law it must be refunded to the Federal Government by the District of Columbia, but if it is paid under this unlawful clause that is now before us, then one-half of it is a gift by the American people to the District of Columbia.

Mr. FOWLER. When did the Government become guarantor?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. On June 20, 1874, when these bonds were authorized. They are 50-year bonds and fall due in 1924.

Mr. FOWLER. I understand that there is a counter contention that the Government assumed to pay one-half of this debt and the interest thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The item in this bill does not disclose whether there is a counter contention or not. I do not believe that there is a legitimate counter contention claiming that the Federal Government, as between the Government and the District of Columbia, owes any part of these bonds, but there is year after year—and most usually it is successful—an attempt to give away half a million dollars of the public money without authorization of law.

Mr. FOWLER. If there is no legal authority for the Government to pay any part of this debt and the interest thereon, then this item of appropriation binds the Government to pay one half and the District the other half.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And for that reason I have made a point of order, and I challenge any man to produce any law or any part of a law which authorizes the payment of 1 cent upon the part of the United States without carrying with it the qualification that that money shall be refunded to the Federal Government by the District of Columbia.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, if the Government, as between itself and the bondholders, is bound to pay the whole of this interest, then a simple proposition in an appropriation bill appropriating the full amount would be in order, would it not?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think so.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then is not an appropriation of one-half of it in order?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; the law and the good faith of the United States so solemnly pledged has not been complied with when that is done. The United States has guaranteed to pay the bondholders all of this interest, and when the United States has paid one-half of it it has broken good faith with the bondholders.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, just one moment. For the purposes of what I shall say I am accepting the construction of law as placed upon this by the gentleman from Kentucky. He says that as between the Government and the bondholders the Government is bound to pay the whole sum, the interest and this money, to the sinking fund. Accepting that as the law—that is, the general law—it certainly authorizes an appropriation of this whole sum out of the Federal Treasury. If it authorizes the appropriation of the whole sum, then the general law clearly authorizes an appropriation for half that amount. This bill does not attempt to decide anything between the Government and the District of Columbia. It says, in the opening lines—

> That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

In other words, so far as the Federal Treasury is concerned, it appropriates half of this interest and sinking-fund money. Now, if, as the gentleman from Kentucky contends——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman pardon me just there for an interruption?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It appropriates it without the qualification and limitation that it must be returned by the District of Columbia to the Federal Government.

Mr. OLMSTED. I was just about to refer to that. Now, Mr. Chairman, if, as the gentleman says, there is a general law under which these bonds are issued requiring that the interest when paid by the Government shall be charged to and collected from the District of Columbia, it is not necessary to reiterate that general law once a year as long as the bonds are outstanding. That general law stands. We simply appropriate the money to be paid by the Treasurer. If, then, the general law requires him to charge that up to the District of Columbia this does not repeal or interfere with it; that law stands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. If the gentleman will permit, this does repeal it, and if this clause of sinking fund and interest is taken in connection with the first provision of the bill which directs that it shall be paid upon the half-and-half plan, it repeals the original law, because the original law, as I again state, carries with it the qualification that this money must be returned to the Federal Government. This not only does away with the provision to return it, but makes it pay the half, and that part which comes from the Federal Treasury goes as a gift.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is the difference between the gentleman and myself. There is nothing in this bill making any gift. Instead of appropriating the whole money to pay the whole in the first instance out of the Federal Treasury we appropriate half of it and make the District of Columbia pay the other half in the first instance. If there is a law requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to charge up against the District of Columbia and collect from it whatever the Government pays, then he will have to collect from the District the half we pay under this bill. This bill attempts to decide nothing between the Government and the District of Columbia except as to the amount of this particular appropriation. One-half is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury. Now, if the law requires whatever is paid out of the Treasury for that purpose to be charged up against and collected from the District of Columbia, why, that will have to be collected in the way as pointed out by the law. This bill would not interfere with that at all, and therefore this appropriation is authorized by law and is in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] has submitted a very extended argument in connection with the settlement of accounts that he has been making between the Government and the District. We are not concerned with that inquiry, and it can in no possible way be of aid to the Chair in the determination of the point of order. I submit that, assuming that the theory of the gentleman from Kentucky on the subject of reimbursement is correct, still even on that theory, as shown by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], the provision in the pending bill is in order. This conclusion is in conformity with the ruling of a year ago, made by Mr. Chairman GARRETT on this identical point.

However, without discussing outside, and irrelevant matters, the committee insists that not only is it in order to appropriate for this sinking fund, as held by Mr. GARRETT, but that the authority is specifically given to appropriate for it on the half-and-half basis. Mr. GARRETT held that it was not necessary for him to rule on this proposition, in order to overrule the point of order. But we go further than his ruling and insist that the positive law commits the Government to the payment of one-half of the District debt. We are not concerned as a committee, with the wisdom or justice of the original assumption, but with the fact. If the assumption was made, the committee must appropriate accordingly, and this item is in order. It is also in order to move to strike it out. I therefore challenge the assertion of the gentleman from Kentucky, that the Government has never assumed the payment of one-half of this District debt.

On the contrary I specifically assert, and intend to maintain, not only by the rulings of preceding occupants of the chair, but from the statute itself, and from the history of this legislation, the proposition that this Government deliberately assumed the burden of one-half of this indebtedness, principal as well as interest. We are not concerned for a moment with the question of the character of that indebtedness. It may, or it may not have been fraudulent. As to this I do not pause to inquire, for there are no sufficient available facts, on which to base an opinion. It is true that a charge to this effect was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Blackburn, during a discussion on the merits of that provision of the act of 1879, which is now before the Chair, and upon which he is asked to rule. In fact Mr. Blackburn's opposition to the provision was avowedly due to the fact that in terms it proposed to charge the Government of the United States with the payment of one-half of a considerable debt which he insisted was largely fraudulent, and justly due to no one. Repeatedly Mr. Blackburn made the charge, and this charge emphasizes the meaning now imputed to this section. It is the same meaning imputed in the debate of 1879. The gentleman from Kentucky must admit that in this debate is nowhere found the suggestion that the Government would be reimbursed. If that is the meaning of the provision, then Mr. Blackburn's remarks were utterly lacking in force and point. A contract of reimbursement would have satisfied the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn], but to a contract of assumption which he declared this amendment to be, he was vehemently opposed.

During the elaborate discussion of the meaning and effect of the report of Mr. Atkins carrying the provision for the payment of one-half of the debt of the District, it was fully understood by both the friends, and opponents of the same, that if it was adopted, the Government would be charged with a new liability, and become immediately responsible for one-half of an alleged fraudulent indebtedness. That this is true, I will fully show by the RECORD.

The Chair has already adverted in another ruling to a principle to which I wish to call his attention in this connection, and that is, that when legislation of an ambiguous character, is enacted, the subsequent action of the Congress which enacts it, may furnish a clue to its meaning, and such action may be appropriately considered by the Chair when he comes to interpret the statute. In the act to which the former ruling related, Congress had legislated with reference to the police department, using language which, it was insisted in debate, charged the whole burden of that department upon the District. But the Chair called attention to the fact that immediately thereafter, Congress proceeded to appropriate for this department upon the half-and-half principle. Hence on this, and other grounds he overruled the point of order. Now the above is this case, only the present one is much stronger on the facts. Immediately subsequent to the act of 1879, Congress began to appropriate for the sinking fund, and has continued to do so in the same language ever since.

There are three acts relating to the half-and-half principle, the act of 1874, the act of 1878, and the act of 1879.

The provision assuming, on the part of the Government, one-half of the funded indebtedness of the District of Columbia is found in the sundry civil bill of 1879, and was fully debated at the time. In the absence of this contemporaneous debate, and without regard to the uniform action of Congress thereafter in appropriating for this sinking fund on the half-and-half basis, some question of difficulty might be presented in the terms of this amendment. The language in some respects is inapt and ambiguous. But in the interpretation of this language, the whole course of dealing between the District and the Government, as illustrated by the three acts of 1874, 1878, and 1879 must be kept in mind. After the body which finally approved the amendment had stamped it with the meaning which it was admitted to carry, it is too late after successive appropriations of over 30 years in strict conformity with this meaning, to challenge its correctness, or to insist that it bears a meaning other than the one imputed to it, when the statute was enacted.

Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to another principle in this connection. It is undoubtedly true that successive appropriations for a project clearly unwarranted by law, however long continued, give no authority for another appropriation. There is no difference of view over that proposition. But if a statute is ambiguous, and year after year, day in, as it were, and day out, the body charged with its interpretation, gives to that statute a definite meaning, as evidenced by the character of its appropriation, and even when it is challenged, refuses to change that appropriation, then such successive acts may be fairly considered in the determination of the true meaning of the provision under consideration. To say the least, it should have a very persuasive effect upon the Chair in arriving at that determination. In addition the Chair should look to any antecedent rulings that may have been made on the question under consideration.

Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to some of this contemporaneous debate. In this connection, I wish to say, that in that House of Representatives there was a division of opinion over the merits of the proposition submitted by the conference report but none over its meaning. Some Members of that body, like Mr. Blackburn, denied that there were any considerations of reason, or justice that justified Congress in assuming this burden. Others insisted that Congress should assume it. But one and all they agreed that if the conference report carrying this provision was adopted, a new obligation would be fastened upon the United States, and they would be required to pay one-half of this indebtedness.

I wish to call the attention of the Chair somewhat in detail to what occurred in the debate upon the sundry civil bill of 1879. This bill at that time carried the appropriations for the District, and the chairman in charge of the same was Mr. Atkins of Tennessee. Mr. Blackburn was asked as to the meaning of the provision under consideration, and replied as follows:

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer that this provision of the report of the committee on conference binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of one-half of the debt.

Can language be plainer than this? The present contention, is that the Government is bound for one-half of the District debt, and Mr. Blackburn, though opposing the conference report insisted in the contemporaneous debate, that such would be the effect of its adoption. Nor is that all. In the course of the debate, which lasted for quite a while, a gentleman named Hendee, took a part. He said in part:

I understand the Government of the United States is just as much bound by proportional appropriations and by the taxation of this District to take care of the sinking fund as it is to provide for the ultimate payment of this debt when it is due and as it is to provide for the interest. We have time and again, year after year, appropriated money from the Treasury of the United States to pay the interest on the 3.65 debt. We did so upon the ground that it was due as the plighted faith of this Government that this interest should be paid. Shall we go on and make no provision for the ultimate payment of the debt by a sinking fund or otherwise by means of taxation or appropriation until 50 years shall have elapsed, and let the whole burden then come at once on the Government? Is that the proposition? I say that would be not only bad faith but bad policy. I say the Government is bound to take charge of and pay a share of this sinking fund in order to pay off this debt of $13,000,000.

In this connection I must refer to the acts of 1874, and 1878 relating to the proportional payments to be made by the Government. These acts clearly commit the Government to the half-and-half principle, and explain the attitude of Mr. Hendee. He insisted that by these acts, apart from the act of 1879, the Government was bound to pay a proportional part of the debt, as well as interest. This proportional part had been fixed at one-half.

So that even then, Mr. Chairman, the contention was that the Government was bound for one-half of this debt without any suggestion of reimbursement. But the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], now insists that a provision for reimbursement should be inserted in this bill, claiming that the original undertaking contemplated such a reimbursement.

I quote further from Mr. Hendee:

The United States are not only bound under that law to take care of the interest or see that it is paid, but we are also bound to take care that the principal is paid or provide a sinking fund for that purpose.

A little further another gentleman, Mr. Mayhem, took a hand in the discussion. Mr. Mayhem said:

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that my distinguished friend the chairman of the Committee for the District of Columbia [Mr. Blackburn] makes any question as to the Federal Government being liable to make provision for the interest on the bonds, and under the plain language of the statute there can be no distinction made between providing for the payment of the interest and the bonds at maturity by the creation of a sinking fund. If the one is binding and obligatory on the Government, the other is equally so. * * *

If the bonds have been issued, and that provision of the statute has been carried out by the officers of the Government, and on the face of that provision of law these bonds have been issued and gone into circulation, then by what principle of justice and good faith can it be said that the Government has to-day been relieved from the obligation of the statute?

Still further, the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Blackburn, who was on the District Committee, made this statement:

All that this sundry civil bill does, is to say that out of the fund thus created, of which the United States Government has agreed to pay one-half, the pledge of the Government to establish a sinking fund shall be fulfilled.

I might multiply these citations; I might increase the number of these references, but to what end?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. What reply, if any, did the conferees in that case make?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Atkins, for the committee of conference, stated that he was opposed to that feature of the report which provided for the assumption of the debt, but he outlined what it was intended to accomplish, agreeing in that respect with Mr. Blackburn and others who were in opposition to the conference report. This was in 1879, not in 1878.

I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the answer of Mr. Atkins to queries propounded by two gentlemen relating to the provision for the sinking fund:

I can answer both the question of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Franklin], and the question of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Reagan], at the same time. The gentleman from Texas asks me to state what the bill provides in regard to the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt of the District. This provision is made: "For the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $1,155,583.55."

The last sentence of the above answer differs from the one found in the present bill only in the amount carried.

So you will note that at the very time that Congress incorporated into this bill the assumption of one-half of the principal of the funded debt, that body began to legislate in regard to its payment precisely as we are now proposing to legislate in respect of the same in the present bill. This item, save as to the amount, has been carried in the District bill in the same language for over 30 years.

Permit me to call your attention to another fact in this connection, and that is that Mr. Blackburn for some years after the act of 1879 was a Member of this body. Yet never thereafter during his service in this House, did he attempt to challenge the proposition that under the above act, the Government was liable for one-half of the District indebtedness. He was in charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill that carried the first provision for this sinking fund. I am advised that this is the fact, by the gentleman to my right, but am not personally apprised that such is true.

Mr. Atkins also stated that:

About $120,000 of that amount is designed to be a sinking fund, one half of which is to be paid by the District of Columbia and the other half by the United States Government.

The language used is most explicit. He continued:

Now, Mr. Speaker, I state with perfect frankness to the House that I did not in conference committee favor that proposition. I would have preferred that that had not been put in this bill. But, sir, I was overruled by a majority of the House conferees, and I am not willing, it is equally frank for me to say, to defeat this bill simply because that feature is in the bill, although I was not in favor of it.

Mr. Blackburn, in a further discussion of this proposition, stated:

This proposition of this section of the bill is to fasten upon the Government of the United States, for the first time, an obligation to pay one half of all funded debt—

Does the Chair note any suggestion on the part of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Blackburn] that after assuming this obligation, the Government was to be reimbursed in whole, or in part? If he had this thought in mind, he certainly failed to give expression to the same. He added:

And leave the people of the District of Columbia, already ground into the earth by taxation, to pay the other half of this debt. The law to-day does not require the Government to pay a dollar.

How is it possible to argue against language so plain as this, used, as I say, by the very men who were opposing this proposition, in the first instance?

How can the Members of this House contend that the section now under discussion, provides for reimbursement, when the body which adopted it, were agreed that a meaning of a very different character attached to the language used? Mr. Chairman, permit me to call your attention——

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will allow me, I agree with him entirely that his position would be very much more thoroughly fortified if the opponents of the measure admitted it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. They did admit it. They brought the meaning of this section to the attention of the House. Hence the debate. Mr. Atkins, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, also brought the effect of this amendment clearly before the House, in explaining his report.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And he himself was opposed to it, but admitted that that was the effect of it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The section was debated upon the theory that it imposed a new and unjust obligation on the Government. In spite of this contention the report was agreed to. From that day forward, the appropriation bill for the District has provided for the sinking fund in the same language, each bill differing from the preceding bill only in the amount provided. As time has flowed by, the debt has been reduced from year to year, and successively smaller amounts have been required.

Mr. Chairman, if you were called upon to pass on this section as a disconnected proposition, unrelated to its environment, and apart from this contemporaneous debate, you might have difficulty in its interpretation. It is not very aptly drawn. But be this as it may, it is a sound principle of interpretation that a body of related legislation must be construed with respect to the general intent, and that the meaning of an individual paragraph, must be sought in the context and in the general intent and purpose of the related legislation. It is also well to have in mind the meaning given to a paragraph or statute, by the persons charged with some duty thereunder. It is a familiar proposition of law that if a contract is ambiguous, and the parties thereto, and living under it, have given the same a meaning, such an interpretation shall bind the parties to the contract, and be taken as its real purport.

If the Congress of the United States passes an act, and that act is debated, and upon consideration all parties are agreed as to the meaning of a section, then they stamp that section with that meaning, when they pass the bill of which it is a part. Such action may be fairly looked to, especially in a case like this, when the discussion took so wide a range, showing most clearly that all parties concerned were acting with knowledge in the final passage of the act.

Certainly this debate, and the subsequent action of Congress in appropriating for the sinking fund, is persuasive authority supporting our contention that one-half of this funded debt was assumed by the Government, and the committee was thereby authorized to appropriate for its discharge.

I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the fact of record, that the first time this appropriation was challenged, was by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond], who moved an amendment to the effect that all of this sinking fund should be paid exclusively from the revenues of the District of Columbia. The point of order was made to this amendment on the ground that it changed existing law. In substance the Chair admitted this contention for the amendment was sustained under the Holman rule which was in effect at that time. As a result of this rule, the point of order was overruled. The Chair will note that this ruling carries an implication that but for the Holman rule, the amendment would have been out of order. The amendment was put to the committee, and rejected. Two years later Mr. De Armond renewed his motion.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SERENO E. PAYNE] ruling on this proposition, held that the De Armond amendment was out of order, the Holman rule having been repealed, or dropped out of the rules. So far from this ruling supporting the contention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], it is decisively opposed to that contention. In the proportional act, the amount to be paid by the Government was one-half in all those cases in which it was required to pay anything.

The motion of Judge De Armond was as follows:

Amend by adding the following at the end of line 25, page 31, "to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia."

The point of order was made to that specific amendment, and sustained on the ground that it changed existing law. If the Government was entitled to be reimbursed under the original contract, the amendment was in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair put a question to the gentleman from Virginia. If it had been the opinion of the Chair that under the law the United States Government was not primarily liable for any portion of the interest or principal, had that been the opinion of the Chair as to what the law was, would not the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond, have been in order, so far as anything appears in the ruling of the Chair made at that time?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Without undertaking to pass upon the effect of that, suppose it was. The Chair however referred to provisions arranging for payments by the Government on the half-and-half basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair held in that case that the Federal Treasury is chargeable on its own account for half of the interest and half of the principal. Now, of course, if that be the law and the Chairman at that time construed the law so to be, then, of course, the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. De Armond, was not in order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Undoubtedly; that is the very point I am making.

The CHAIRMAN. It involved no difficult parliamentary situation once the law was clear. Now, if the law made the entire interest and principal chargeable against the District, would not the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri have been in order?

Mr. SAUNDERS. If it was all chargeable against the District, and the gentleman moved that it should be directed to be paid out of the District funds, of course the amendment would have been in order. Why not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply wanted to ascertain if the gentleman from Virginia could escape from the conclusion based upon this presumption.

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, I do not seek to escape from anything. If the District of Columbia is liable for all of this debt, and an amendment is to that effect, such an amendment might be a superfluity, but it would not be contrary to existing law. On the contrary it would be conformable to existing law. But if the Government was liable for one half of the debt, and the District the other half, and the gentleman from Missouri proposed to make the District pay all of it, then of course his amendment was out of order on the ground that it changed existing law. This is the only view it seems to me that you can take of the ruling made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE].

So much then for the parliamentary precedents, two in number, exclusive of the ruling of Mr. GARRETT. If the Chair takes the view that the bill merely provides an appropriation to pay a debt for which the Government is directly liable, then the Chair will reach the conclusion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT], and will not find it necessary to go further in his investigations.

If the appropriation is made, and the official charged with the duty of interpreting the law, applies the fund contrary to its terms, he will be guilty of malversation. If his action in this respect is directly opposed to the requirements of the law, he will act at his peril. The Chair however will presume that an official charged with administering a fund will do his duty, and carry out the law. For that matter the Government may pay all of the debt principal and interest, before requiring any reimbursement. Even upon the theory of the gentleman from Kentucky that the Government is entitled to reimbursement, there is no time fixed when reimbursement may be demanded. If the Government is liable to pay all the debt, it can not complain, if one-half is paid by the District. The amount for which it might demand reimbursement is thereby diminished.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, may I inquire of the gentleman from Virginia, in that view of it, and if this appropriation bill passes as law just as it stands, does the gentleman know of any general law, the act of 1873 or 1879, that would authorize this appropriation now about to be expended, and the total expenditure thereof, the whole amount be charged against the District of Columbia revenues?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, I deny there is any such law, or proposition of law as that. That is the issue between the committee, and the gentleman from Kentucky.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair only wanted to asceratin if the gentleman from Virginia clearly understood the issue.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, I think I understand it. Our contention is, that if we make an appropriation for a purpose for which the Government is required to appropriate, as for instance for the payment of bonds for which it is liable in the first instance, then such an appropriation is in order, and the matter of reimbursement can be settled thereafter by appropriate action on the part of the Government. The payment of the debt for which the Government is liable is one thing, the demand for reimbursement is another.

The CHAIRMAN. Nor is it a question for the Secretary of the Treasury to determine in any way, that it would justify him in charging the District of Columbia with anything in the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, we are not concerned with that at all. These matters of settlement of accounts are not relevant in this connection. They are utterly foreign to this inquiry. If it is desired to add a provision for reimbursement, conceiving that such is the law, it is perfectly in order for the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] or any other Member on this floor to submit an amendment to that effect, and have it voted upon by this committee. Such an amendment would be in order, if we are entitled to reimbursement. But if we make an appropriation authorized by law, it is not error on our part to omit a provision for reimbursement. It is not required, even if the right exists, to incorporate such a provision in an appropriation for an existing liability. Our right to reimbursement is not lost by failure to make demand for it concurrently with the discharge of a portion of our obligation.

I do not wish to be understood as admitting that the statute of 1879 fairly construed, having reference to its history, its contemporaneous discussion, and the just interpretation of the statutes fixing the policy of the Government in its relation to the District, can reasonably bear the construction, for which the gentleman from Kentucky contends. I submit that the precedents, and the whole body of related statutes properly construed with reference to their general intent, having in mind also the contemporaneous discussion of the act of 1879, and the action of Congress thereafter, all support the action of the committee in providing for this sinking fund, and constrain the Chair to the conclusion that this point of order should be overruled. I submit that having in mind all of these things, not only is this provision of the bill in order, but ample authority is afforded for the contention that Congress deliberately assumed the payment of one-half of the indebtedness of the District of Columbia. We are not concerned to go into the merits of any ancient controversy at this time. Grant that it was charged that these bonds were fraudulent in part? How does that affect the pending situation? The facts are not before us, and if before us would not aid us in the present inquiry. We are only concerned to inquire, if the Government assumed to pay one-half of this indebtedness. If it did, then the item is in order. But the committee is not required to make the appropriation. It can refuse to do so. It can strike out the item.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Suppose there were defaults on those bonds, the Federal Government would be liable, would it not?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes; in part certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It would be liable because of the acts of 1874, 1878, and 1879, taken in conjunction with each other.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Take all of these acts, and they are in pari materia, construe them in conformity with the general purpose running through them all, and it will be clear that the Government assumed to pay this indebtedness to the extent of one-half of the same.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And because of the existence of that liability, as a consequence of these three enactments construed as one, the Government of the United States is bound to pay this money. The gentleman's contention, as I understand it, is, that being an obligation of a Government, it has the right and it is its duty to appropriate without any qualification whatsoever in the proper bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. In other words, whatever may be the interpretation placed on these statutes, whether it be the interpretation of the gentleman from Kentucky, or that of the committee, the Government is under obligation, in fact is in duty bound, to make an appropriation for the discharge of this principal and interest.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And any limitation that exists here is really a limitation upon the bookkeeping in the Treasury Department.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is a matter with which we are not concerned at all.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. That really should have nothing to do with the Chair in determining this question.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, this matter is remitted to your decision.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Chair to bear with me for just a few moments. I will say now as heretofore, the gentlemen who take the other side of this question undertake to avoid a discussion of the act itself, and you can not get them to come up to the proposition and take hold of it and discuss that provision of the law which authorizes an appropriation with a limitation and a qualification. They will not discuss it in any way except laying the limitation and the qualification aside. As to what contemporaneous discussion discloses the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 6, 1878, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, page 3999, shows that this provision was under discussion, and the section which I will now read was discussed, and is, without the dotting of an "i" or the crossing of a "t," now embodied in the statute, and it reads as follows:

That until otherwise provided by law the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest accruing on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia as the same matures, and the amount so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District as herein provided.

Now, while that was considered, what did Mr. Blackburn say—he has been quoted here extensively in discussing the bill as a whole. What does he say? Let us see.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What is the date of that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. May 6, 1878. Mr. Blackburn says this:

I desire to say that if every Member of this House will read one other section of this bill he will see that this bill does not propose to make the Federal Government responsible for one dollar of the debt of the District or one dollar of the interest on that debt. It simply proposes to make the Government of the United States bear one-half of the current expenses of the District.

Continuing, Mr. Blackburn says:

Then it goes on further and provides that as the Federal Government is already bound to guarantee the payment of the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District, every dollar that the Government of the United States pays as interest on that bonded debt of the District shall be accredited to it upon such portion of the current expenses as it assumes. This bill nowhere makes the Federal Treasury responsible for one dollar of the debt of the District, either of the principal or of the interest. But it does say that the Government of the United States shall pay 50 per cent of the current expenses of the District, and that it shall have credit on that payment for every dollar of interest it pays.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, you will observe the gentleman from Kentucky was reading from the debate of 1878, a debate of a different time, under different circumstances, and not related to the matter of the amendment contained in the act of 1879.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But the gentleman will agree with me that he was discussing the 3.65 bond proposition and discussing the very proposition which became a part of the bill.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Not in the light of the amendment that appeared in the act of 1879, and that is the vital part of the pending proposition. My friend from Kentucky says we have not discussed the law of the case. On the contrary I have been discussing this law, and nothing else. The very paragraph which he undertakes to say carries one meaning, in our view carries a very different meaning. I have undertaken to show by the cotemporaneous debate upon this amendment that the debaters both pro and con were agreed on its meaning. Admittedly in that debate it was understood that by the passage of the act of 1879, the Government undertook to pay one-half of the debt of the District. In this connection I wish to read again from Mr. Blackburn's remarks in 1879.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I answer that this provision of the report of the committee on conference binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of half the debt, and binds this Government in its own capacity.

For what? To assume the payment of the whole debt, with a provision for the reimbursement of the whole? Not all. Mr. Blackburn does not suggest anything to that effect. On the contrary he says:

It binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of one-half the debt.

Then Mr. Mills asked—

How much is that?

And Mr. Blackburn replied—

I think about $22,000,000, in round numbers.

Mr. Blackburn stated further that in his judgment a good deal of that debt was not only not proper to be assumed by the Government, but was not justly due by anyone. So that in 1879 Mr. Blackburn when discussing the meaning of the Atkins' report, plainly declared that its adoption committed the Government to the payment of one-half of the municipal debt, not the interest for that had been already assumed, but the principal of the bonded indebtedness. When I am able to refer the Chair to an illuminating cotemporaneous debate like this, construing this particular subject matter, how can it be argued with any sort of plausibility, much less cogency that the Government did not assume the payment of one-half of this debt? It was agreed on all hands that this was exactly what they did undertake to do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will say, Mr. Chairman, in 1913, just as Mr. Blackburn said in 1879, that if the law is today changed by this bill, then the Federal Government will have to pay one-half of this debt, whereas the law creating it never authorized it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Well, Mr. Blackburn seemed to think that the effect of the act of 1879 would be to charge the United States with one-half of the funded debt of the District.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the question presented as raised by the point of order is more of a legal question than a parliamentary one. In fact, it is purely a legal question. Once the legal elements are properly assembled and composed the parliamentary construction is clear. The Chair has carefully considered the ruling of Mr. Chairman Payne, rendered on February 4, 1896, and fully set forth in Hinds' Precedents, section 3883, holding that the payment of this item was chargeable half and half to the United States and the District of Columbia.

The Chair has also with equal care examined the ruling of Mr. Chairman GARRETT holding that the Government of the United States was authorized to appropriate for the payment of the interest and sinking fund, and that it was the duty of the Treasury Department to see that the amount was credited according to the law. The Chair has the greatest respect for the opinion of both Chairmen, and dislikes to rule contrary to their decision, but the Chair, acting in a quasi judicial capacity, feels that it is his duty to rule in accordance with his views of the law.

The Chair is of the opinion that the act of June 11, 1878, and March 3, 1879, authorizes the United States to advance sufficient sums to pay the interest and sinking fund in the District of Columbia, but the entire amount is chargeable to the District of Columbia. In the opinion of the Chair all sums appropriated by the present bill are disbursed in accordance with the provisions of the bill and not in accordance with some other statute law.

The only bearing other acts can have on the question under consideration is whether or not there is law authorizing an appropriation to be made in this bill. Construing the half-and-half provision as it appears on the first page and in the first section of this bill in connection with the item against which the point of order is made, the Chair is forced to the legal conclusion that one-half of the amount would be charged to the United States and one-half to the District of Columbia; that is, that under this act, if it is passed, one-half is chargeable to the District revenues and one-half to the Federal Treasury, and that neither the Secretary of the Treasury nor any other administrative nor disbursing officer could apply it in any other way. The Chair is of the opinion that under the acts of 1878 and 1879 the entire amount is chargeable to the District, and, therefore, is of the opinion that there is no law authorizing the provision as incorporated in this bill. Therefore the Chair must sustain the point of order. The Chair has no sensitive pride of opinion and would be glad to entertain an appeal, so that the committee, composed largely, as it is, of able lawyers, may pass finally, if it may be so construed, upon the question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask time in which to prepare an amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, and I ask unanimous consent that action on the appeal may be withheld until the conclusion of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no discussion, the question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BURLESON) there were—ayes 21, noes 16.

Mr. BURLESON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

Mr. BURLESON. I demand the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. A gentleman close to this vicinity advises the Chair there is no other side.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Seventy-one gentlemen are present, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Will a vote on this indicate whether we sustain the Chair or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The vote on the roll call will be "present."

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RODDENBERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill and, finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 213 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The SPEAKER. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union [Mr. RODDENBERY] reports that that committee having under consideration the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, whereupon 213 Members, a quorum, had responded to their names, and he reports a list of the absentees. A quorum being present——

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not in order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the only motion that is in order, Mr. Speaker. I can cite a precedent for that, if the Chair wishes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it has been ruled on a number of occasions that a motion to adjourn was in order after the report of the Chairman had been stated by the Speaker and before the Speaker had resolved the House back into the Committee of the Whole. I think that has been the ruling on the question. I hope the House will not adjourn.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I was going to discuss whether the motion was in order.

The SPEAKER. Is that where a quorum developed or did not develop?

Mr. MANN. Where a quorum developed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. A motion to adjourn is in order, Mr. Speaker, and that is the only motion that is in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] moves to adjourn. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. BURLESON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 51, noes 81.

Mr. BURLESON. Tellers, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands tellers.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I am anxious to see the names of those who want to put their hands in the Treasury. I demand the yeas and nays myself.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. Those in favor of taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-seven gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The other side, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Those opposed to taking the vote by yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] One hundred and four gentlemen have arisen in the negative. On this vote the ayes are 27 and the noes are 104. Twenty-seven are a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of adjourning will, when their names are called, answer "yea;" those opposed, will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 87, nays 119, answered "present" 9, not voting 166, as follows:

Mr. FORDNEY. I voted "aye." I am paired with the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. KITCHIN, and I wish to withdraw my vote and to be recorded as "present."

Mr. KENDALL. I am paired with the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. SISSON. I voted "no" in the first instance, but I wish to withdraw my vote and to vote "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The House refuses to adjourn, and the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will resume its sitting.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 28499) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, with Mr. RODDENBERY in the chair.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, in order that the membership may know the issue before the committee, I ask unanimous consent that we may have 30 minutes on a side to discuss the ruling of the Chair, so that it may be thoroughly understood. As the Chair knows, this involves at least $30,000,000 if the decision is sustained. It is in effect repudiating the indebtedness of the Federal Government to the District of Columbia to the extent of $30,000,000. Inasmuch as the ruling of the Chair overturns the decision of two former Chairmen, and is in the face of the appropriations in various Congresses——

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the matter is not debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to have the committee grant the gentleman's request. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that there be 30 minutes' debate on a side on the appeal from the decision of the Chair, 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I object because the time is too long. I will not object to 15 minutes on a side.

Mr. MANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate may proceed for 30 minutes, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that there be 30 minutes debate on the appeal, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and 15 minutes by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARDWICK. I desire to know if gentlemen have not, as a matter of right, the opportunity to discuss it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to rule that such a right did exist.

Mr. MANN. But the Chair ought to be willing to hear gentlemen on that question before he rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The question has not been raised or presented to the Chair until it was presented by the gentleman from Georgia in the form of a parliamentary inquiry. There was nothing for the Chair to do except to answer the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. MANN. But before the Chair answers the parliamentary inquiry, which would be a ruling by the Chair on the question, the situation ought to be understood. The House divided on the question of sustaining the Chair. The question comes up de novo, because the question of a quorum was raised and no quorum was ascertained to be present. There was no closing of debate. The proposition was open to debate, too. I take it that it is still open to debate under the limitations of the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call attention to section 5928 of Hinds' Precedents:

A division having commenced, debate is thereby precluded.

On January 20, 1891, the Speaker announced that the question was on the approval of the Journal; and the question being taken, the Speaker said "the ayes seem to have it."

Mr. Roger Q. Mills, of Texas, demanded a division.

The Speaker having announced that a division was demanded, Mr. Mills demanded the opportunity to debate.

The Speaker, Mr. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, held that a division having commenced debate was thereby precluded.

Mr. MANN. What was the question before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The approval of the Journal.

Mr. HARDWICK. The question of no quorum did not arise there.

Mr. MANN. And here the Chair sustained the point of no quorum, so that the whole proceeding was set aside in reference to the vote, and there was nothing left.

The CHAIRMAN. Did it vitiate the division?

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly, it vitiated everything, because if it did not vitiate the division, then the vote would stand. A division was had, and the gentleman then demanded tellers, and he was refused tellers, and then made the point of no quorum. The point of no quorum was sustained and the whole proceeding on the vote was set aside under the practice and rulings of the House for a century.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I would like to suggest that within the last two weeks we have had two or three situations in which we resumed business and the matter came up de novo.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recalls that when the second session of the Sixty-second Congress adjourned there was pending an appropriation bill for certain Spanish War pensions, and a division was had. The question of a quorum was raised, and the House adjourned. The question went over and came up on the first Calendar Wednesday of the present session of the Sixty-second Congress.

The Speaker, Mr. CLARK, held when the matter arose that it was de novo and proceeded to put the question without debate; and upon request for debate being proffered, he ruled that debate was not in order, and the vote was proceeded with. In that case it arose upon the question of the presence or absence of a quorum. There was no quorum present.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But if it is de novo, does not debate come up as a matter of right?

The CHAIRMAN. That is precisely the point that the present occupant of the chair undertook to have Mr. Speaker CLARK rule, because the gentleman now occupying the chair desired to be heard. The Speaker ruled that he could not be heard. In this instance the House was dividing, and while so dividing the question of a quorum was raised by the present occupant of the chair. A quorum was ascertained not to be present; a roll call to procure a quorum was being had when the House adjourned. When the matter again came up de novo debate was ruled not to be in order thereunder.

Mr. MANN. But was not the previous question ordered in that case? My recollection is that the previous question had been ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not state with certainty.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has not the Chair just reversed the rulings of the Chair for 30 years, and if the Chair is of opinion that the point raised by the gentleman is well taken——

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair will not hesitate to reverse a ruling when he thinks it is wrong nor to sustain a decision when he thinks it is right.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Then what purpose would be served by raising the point of no quorum if it did not vacate the proceedings in existence?

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman any authority to submit upon that question? The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that there be 30 minutes of debate, 15 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] and 15 minutes by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and if the Chair may be permitted to say so, he would be very glad to have that request granted.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I was perfectly willing to consent to 15 minutes' debate on a side. I believe now that 5 minutes are sufficient. The House, I know, is impatient at this hour to get home.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, that was the reason I wanted to adjourn. I knew the House would not be willing to remain here and listen to a discussion of this matter. This is a matter of the gravest importance, and yet I knew the House would not be willing to remain here.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate proceed for 10 minutes—5 minutes on a side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that debate of 10 minutes be had, 5 minutes to be controlled by himself and 5 minutes by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. Is there objection?

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. BURLESON. Then, I ask unanimous consent that the Chair make a statement of the situation to the committee in order that the members of the committee may know exactly what has been done.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the Chair make a statement of the situation in order that the members now present may be apprised of what has been done. Is there objection. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair will comply with the order of the committee and accordingly submits the following statement:

While the committee was engaged in consideration of the bill H. R. 28499—the District of Columbia appropriation bill—in the course of the reading of the bill the following paragraph on page 67 was reached in its order:

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408.

Against that paragraph the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] made a point of order, the point of order being that the paragraph was not authorized by existing law. Debate was had on the point of order, argument being made in favor of the point of order and against the point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] maintained that the District of Columbia was chargeable with the entire interest and sinking fund covered by this paragraph. The first paragraph of the pending bill provides as follows:

That the half of the following sums named, respectively, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the other half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, in full for the purposes following.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] contended that in view of that paragraph the effect of the paragraph on page 67, which the Chair has already read, was to charge the District of Columbia with one half of the interest and sinking fund and the Treasury of the United States with the other half. That contention was not combated by the gentleman in charge of the bill, but it was contended by gentlemen in charge of the bill that the District of Columbia was liable for only 50 per cent of the interest and, finally, of the principal of the bonds, and that the Federal Government, under the law, was liable for the other half; and that therefore the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky was not well taken. It was stated and contended by the gentlemen opposing the point of order that every appropriation bill since the act of 1878 had provided substantially as the present bill provides.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] read the debate taking place as early as 1879 in which it was contended that the District was chargeable with half of the interest and sinking-fund moneys and in which it was argued to the contrary. In 1896——

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the Chair pardon me? There was nothing in the debate to the contrary; all admitted the fact that the amendment inserted in the bill in 1879 was to charge the Government with one-half of both the principal and interest.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stands corrected. It was in 1878, the Chair believes, submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], when the contrary position was taken.

Mr. BURLESON. That was before the act creating the government of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. And not upon an appropriation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Upon that statement, Mr. Chairman, I must take issue.

The CHAIRMAN. It was contrary to the appropriation and——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That is very foreign to me——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think the Chair or the committee misunderstands the statement in that regard. On February 4, 1896, the question again arose on a point of order. The paragraph appeared in the District appropriation bill that year as it does now. Mr. De Armond, of Missouri, moved to amend by providing that the entire amount for interest and sinking fund be charged to the District of Columbia. Mr. Chairman PAYNE, of New York, was presiding; debate was had, and, without taxing the committee with too great details, the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the then Chairman, decided that, in his opinion, under the law the Federal Government was chargeable primarily and liable for one-half of the interest and one-half of the sinking fund, and the amendment, therefore, of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. De Armond] was overruled. Thereafter, on January 25, 1912, the paragraph then being as the paragraph now is, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] raised a point of order upon the same grounds as presented here to-day, which grounds have already been stated to the committee. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] was then presiding. Extended arguments were heard and a full decision rendered on that date by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] in effect decided that the Government of the United States was authorized under the law to make an appropriation for the payment of the interest and sinking fund, and that he would not go into the question of the respective liability of the United States Government or the District, respectively, but that that remained for the administration of the appropriate department charged with carrying out the law. Accordingly, the point of order was again overruled. On to-day, when the same item—for interest and sinking fund—was reached, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] renewed the same point of order——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, did the Chairman state what Mr. GARRETT's ruling was, and would he state it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has stated the ruling.

Mr. MANN. I think the Chair did not state it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] overruled the point of order. As just stated, the point of order now for disposition by the committee was again made by the gentleman from Kentucky. Debate was had. The act of 1874 was submitted to-day by gentlemen in the debate. The act of 1878 and the act of 1879, with reference to the proportional appropriations covering both the interest and the sinking fund, were also submitted during the debate. After debate was had, participated in by several gentlemen, the Chair rendered the following decision, sustaining the point of order. It is due the committee for the Chair to state that the decision is not written in full, but was rendered from abbreviated notes, and the Chair will undertake now to repeat, as nearly as he can, the decision as it was made, from the notes.

"In the opinion of the Chair the question presented is more of a legal question than a parliamentary one. In fact, it is essentially a legal question. Once the legal aspect of the matter is determined, the parliamentary conclusion follows and is simple. The Chair has carefully considered the ruling of Mr. Chairman PAYNE, rendered February 4, 1896, as appears in full in Hinds' Precedents, section 3883, holding that the payment of this item was chargeable half and half to the United States and the District of Columbia. The Chair has also carefully examined the ruling of Mr. Chairman GARRETT, holding that the Government of the United States was authorized to appropriate for the payment of the interest and sinking fund, and that it was the duty of the Treasury Department to see that the amount was credited according to law. The Chair has the greatest respect for the opinion of both of these distinguished Chairmen, and dislikes to rule contrary to their decisions; but the Chair, acting in a quasi official capacity, feels it is his duty to rule in accordance with his views of what the law is.

"The Chair is of the opinion that the acts of June 11, 1878, and March 3, 1879, authorized the United States to advance sufficient sums to pay the interest and sinking fund of the District of Columbia, but the entire amount is chargeable to the District of Columbia, and, therefore, no part to the United States. In the opinion of the Chair, all sums appropriated by the present bill are disbursed in accordance with the provisions of the bill and not in accordance with some other law, unless specifically so provided in the bill. The only bearing other acts have on the question under consideration is whether or not there is law authorizing the appropriation to be made. Construing the half-and-half provision on the first page and in the first section of this bill, in connection with the item to which the point of order is made, the Chair is forced to the legal conclusion that one-half of the amount under the bill as provided would be charged to the United States and one-half to the District of Columbia. The Chair is of the opinion that under the acts of 1878 and 1879 the entire amount is chargeable to the District of Columbia, and, therefore, is of the opinion that there is no law authorizing the provision incorporated in the bill. Therefore the Chair must sustain the point of order.

"The Chair has no sensitive pride of opinion and would be glad to entertain an appeal so that the committee, composed largely as it is of many able lawyers, may pass finally upon the question."

The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURLESON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 33.

Mr. BURLESON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were refused.

The CHAIRMAN. The decision of the Chair is therefore made the judgment of the committee.

So the judgment of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TRIBBLE] moves that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. TRIBBLE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 49.

Mr. BURLESON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. BURLESON and Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky took their places as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 61.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, while the vote was 61, here is a Member who came up to the tellers and demanded to be counted.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, the vote had been announced.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman demand the regular order?

Mr. GARNER. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] demands the regular order, and the Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of appeals building, District of Columbia: For the following force, necessary for the care and protection of the court of appeals building: Two watchmen, at $720 each; elevator operator, at $720; three laborers, at $480 each; mechanician (under the direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds), $1,200: Provided, That the clerk of the court of appeals shall be the custodian of said building, under the direction and supervision of the justices of said court; in all, $4,800.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, because there is legislation in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] makes a point of order against the first paragraph on page 69.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There is new legislation in it, Mr. Chairman. My point is directed to the provision which reads as follows:

Provided, That the clerk of the court of appeals shall be the custodian of said building, under the direction and supervision of the justices of said court; in all, $4,800.

That, Mr. Chairman, is, in my opinion, a piece of legislation looking toward covering up a good many jobs down there in that courthouse.

Mr. MANN. The $4,800 is not for that position.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. He appoints all the gentlemen around the building.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman recognizes the fact that this is an item that has been carried in the bill for a good many years?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. We want to cut it out right now, as we are going to have a new administration.

Mr. BURLESON. I think this is not legislation. It is an item that has been carried in the bill for many, many years. Somebody must have the care and custody of this building, and this provision is carried in the bill for the purpose of imposing that duty upon a particular officer. In fact, there is no salary allowed here, but it simply imposes a duty upon a particular officer of having the care and responsibility of the building——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Which, Mr. Chairman, would give him the right to appoint all the custodian's force there. Consequently it is legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. If this provision were not in there, the Chair asks the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who would do the appointing?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not know, and I do not care. This is legislation. It is creating a custodian.

Mr. BURLESON. It is permanent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. It strikes the Chair as being purely a matter of detail in administration, and unless there is some authority to be submitted the Chair will overrule the point of order. The point of order is overruled, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHARITIES AND CORRECTIONS.

Board of Charities: Secretary, $3,500; chief clerk, $1,350; stenographer, $1,300; messenger, $600; inspectors—one at $1,200, three at $1,000 each, two at $900 each, two at $840 each; drivers—one at $780, three at $720 each; hostler, $540; traveling expenses, including attendance on conventions, $400; in all, $18,310.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, particularly against the salary of the secretary and of the chief clerk and of the stenographer. The act creating the Board of Charities is to be found in volume 31, page 664, Statutes at Large, and fixes the salary of the secretary at $3,000 a year. The salary of $1,350 for the chief clerk, set out at the beginning of line 13, has been raised from $1,200, and the stenographer's salary, in line 13, has been raised from $1,200 to $1,300. Against these three items, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I concede that the point of order is well taken, and I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] concedes the point of order and offers an amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. After the word "secretary," in line 12, page 70, insert "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "secretary," in line 12, page 70, insert "$3,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. After the word "clerk," in line 12, insert the figures "$1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 70, line 13, at the beginning of the line, insert the figures "$1,300."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. After the word "stenographer," on page 70, line 13, insert the figures "$1,200."

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is not subject to a point of order. The law provides a salary of a secretary at $3,000 a year and for such other clerks and employees as may be necessary, to be appropriated by Congress as it sees fit; and I do not think either one of those items is subject to a point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The first one is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSTER] that the point of order has already been made against the items and conceded by the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and ruled on by the Chair.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the Chair ruled that way on the statement of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if it will help straighten out matters, I will say I think I have been in error. The second and third items are not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, in all these increases the Chair has been sustaining points of order.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman will permit, the law provides:

The board shall elect a president and vice president from among its own members, and shall appoint a secretary, who shall receive a salary of $3,000 per annum; and a messenger, who shall receive a salary of $840 per annum; and may appoint such other officers, inspectors, and clerks as it may deem proper, and fix the number, duties, and compensation of such other officers, inspectors, and clerks, subject to appropriations of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who originally made the point of order, having conceded that he finds on investigation that he made the point of order under a misapprehension, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] having stated that he conceded the point of order under a misapprehension——

Mr. BURLESON. No; I do not concede that I admitted it was made under a misapprehension.

The CHAIRMAN. He originally conceded the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It was not under a misapprehension at all. While the original act did not put in any limitation, this is an increase over the last appropriation bill, and if a point of order is made on that ground there is nothing for us to do but to concede it.

Mr. FOWLER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless the ruling of the Chair is vacated by unanimous consent the matter is already concluded.

Mr. MANN. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been sustained and the items have gone out.

Mr. BURLESON. I move to insert, after the word "stenographer," the figures "$1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 70, line 13, after the word "stenographer," insert the figures "$1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, under Washington Asylum and Jail, $130,335.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] why it is that they continue to carry this institution under the name of Washington Asylum and Jail? This is a hospital. Nurses are trained there and graduate, and they get certificates as nurses graduated from Washington Asylum and Jail.

Mr. BURLESON. That is the name fixed by law. The District of Columbia Committee has jurisdiction to change the name.

Mr. DYER. I want to call the attention of the committee to the conditions there just for a moment. I do not want to take much of the time of the committee. Recently a subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee made some inquiry into the Washington Asylum Hospital, and as a result of my own investigations and of the investigations and opinions of other gentlemen, I want to say that it is a shame and a disgrace to the Capital City of the Nation that such an institution is allowed to exist in the city of Washington for the care of the sick poor.

Let me quote from the testimony of the visiting physician of the Washington Asylum and Jail, Dr. D. Percy Hickling, to give you an idea of the conditions that exist there. It is from his testimony recently given before a subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee of this House during an investigation of the Tuberculosis Hospital of this city. The Washington Asylum Hospital and Jail was brought indirectly into that investigation, due to the fact that it was discovered that a number of tuberculous patients were being treated at the Washington Asylum and Jail. The following questions and answers appear from the doctor's testimony in this connection:

Mr. DYER. Doctor, I notice in your report, included in the report of the Board of Charities of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1911, the following (p. 53): "During the year there have been 75 cases of pulmonary tuberculosis admitted into the hospital. Of these, 37 have been transferred to the Tuberculosis Hospital, 15 discharged, and 23 have died. These cases are at the present time treated in the general wards of the hospital, which is, in my judgment, a detriment to their own condition, as well as a menace to the other patients and the nurses with whom they are associated. I would therefore urgently recommend that proper provision be made for their care and treatment."

Mr. DYER. That is a part of your report?

Dr. HICKLING. It is.

[From Dr. Hickling's testimony.]

I think I have summarized them in the same way in this part of my report. In the body of my report, which is over my signature, I said (p. 57 of the 1910 report) that I desired to call special attention to the fact that during the year we have been required to take care of 165 cases of tuberculosis, a large percentage of whom were suffering from the disease in a communicable form. As a matter of fact, there have been few days during the year when that hospital has been free from this class of cases, and there seems nothing to do with them but to place them in the wards with the other cases. If we are to be required to admit these cases into the hospital, we should be given the proper means to care for them. That is from my report.

* * * * * * *

Now, then, to make that clear, I want to call your attention, on page 30 of the 1911 report, to the fact that the Washington Asylum Hospital, during that last fiscal year, received and cared for 2,916 patients out of a total of 12,221 indigent patients of the District of Columbia. You will see by that table that we took care of more than any other hospital in the city; that Freedmen's Hospital comes next, in caring for 2,746 patients; the other institutions, which appeared to be larger, only took care of less than 1,000 cases, Garfield Hospital taking care of only 905 cases, and that is the third largest, so far as utility in taking care of the indigent cases of the District of Columbia is concerned.

Now, then, another fact. That same table shows that at the Washington Asylum Hospital the average number of days that each patient stayed in the hospital was only 18.11. That is the lowest number of any hospital in the city, according to that table, except the Emergency Hospital, showing the activity of the work out there. It is not in any sense of the word that the name implies an asylum, but a very active hospital.

Now, then, we are forced to take care of every case that is sent to us. We can not refuse to admit a case, no matter what the trouble may be. We have got to take it in and care for it as best we can. We take in the insane, the alcoholics, the syphilitics, and we take in children, and the tuberculosis cases when they are sent to us. We have not a right to refuse to admit a case.

Now, another thing; that is, the crowded condition of the wards. I want to explain to you what that means. It means more than the word seems to indicate. It means that the nurses have to take care of more patients than they can take care of. It means that the patients are justly dissatisfied. It means that the bed accommodations, the food accommodations, service accommodations are all cramped when the wards are overcrowded.

Another thing, two wards especially there—the psychopathic and the basement, the annex—which you saw, where the colored men were, are badly overcrowded most all the year, and are badly adapted to the treatment of cases. They do not have sufficient air space. They do not have sufficient light or sufficient ventilation. Now, then, these insane conditions, the condition of the psychopathic wards, where the criminal as well as the insane are crowded together; the insane are crowded together there; the drunk and the sober, the criminal and the insane, the black and the white, and the sound mind are all crowded together there in rooms that they should not be crowded in; and, more than that, there is no means, such as they have in other institutions, for outdoor exercise. I have recommended that; I want to lay stress on that not only as a health measure but as a therapeutic measure, to permit the recovery of these insane, because they do not recover as well in dark, ill-ventilated rooms as they do when they can get out into the air; and a very little money sufficient to build a fence is all that would be necessary; and for two years we have tried to get out of our contingent fund a little money to build a fence, and let these human being out into the fresh air that they need, not only from the hygienic but from the therapeutic standpoint. I want to make this as emphatic as I can. The alcoholics down there waste their time after they sober up, and we have no opportunity to encourage them to be not only self-supporting but yielding an income for the time they are there.

Another point, the question of children, I regard with extreme interest. We have treated during the last year, according to this report just read, 81 children under 16 years of age. Now, we have no children's ward there. They are mixed in with the vilest kind of men and women, and it is not fair to subject them to those surroundings. If we have to take care of them, we should have a children's ward where they can be properly taken care of. I want to emphasize that as strongly as I can. It is a condition which should not be permitted to exist.

Now, about the remedy. We have been unfortunate in getting Congress to recognize the fact that they needed and must have a new hospital. It has resulted in not getting a new hospital and leaving conditions at the Washington Asylum a little worse than the previous year.

Mr. DYER. A positive disgrace to the city.

Dr. HICKLING. If the appropriation goes through now as it is planned, next year we will be in just the same condition as we were last year, only a little worse. You have not helped us a bit. Now, then, if you do give us a new hospital, which has been recommended and which we all pray for, then the condition is relieved. If you do not do that, do something for us. Anything is better than nothing.

Mr. DYER. So you favor a proper municipal hospital?

Dr. HICKLING. Of course. Every year that has been favored for 12 years and urged as strongly as human voice could urge it. Now, then, each year, because we have urged that, it has resulted in nothing but leaving the Washington Asylum a little bit worse off than it was the year before.

Mr. Chairman, that is the testimony of the visiting physician in charge of that institution. Not only do these conditions prevail in this institution, which consists of a lot of old shacks bundled together to take care of over 1,200 of the sick poor of this city, but they have children there, too. During the past year they have had 80 patients there under 16 years of age.

They have no ward there for children. These young boys are thrown in there with the drunks, the insane, and the criminal. That is one of the hospital conditions existing in this Capital City of the Nation. Besides that, in the investigations by the Committee on the District of Columbia, we found that they have numerous cases of contagious diseases brought there. We found that they have numerous cases of tuberculosis brought there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DYER. I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that his time be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DYER. And, Mr. Chairman, let me invite the attention of the House further to the conditions at this so-called hospital as testified to at the hearing referred to by Col. F. N. Judson, one of the District Commissioners, as follows:

Mr. DYER. You are in favor of a municipal hospital?

Col. JUDSON. By all means, because we have one there now in name and as to patients, but we have no suitable accommodations for them. I do not think that place is suitable for patients at all. I have taken people there from other States, and they have said that in their community such a thing would not be tolerated, and that they could not imagine that in the Capital City of the Nation such a condition would be allowed to endure.

Mr. DYER. What is your suggestion, Mr. Commissioner, as to improvement?

Col. JUDSON. Well, a number of years ago there was purchased some 30 acres in a very suitable location for hospital purposes. The intention at the time of purchase was to build there a suitable hospital to care for indigent patients, and I think that plan should be carried forward as soon as possible.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. Is there a bill pending to change this condition by legislation reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia?

Mr. DYER. Not so far as I know.

Mr. CANNON. Is the gentleman a member of that committee?

Mr. DYER. I am; and I will say that as one member——

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman oppose the appropriation in the absence of legislation?

Mr. DYER. No, Mr. Chairman; but I asked the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] a question about these matters today, and he said that the House does not agree with the view that we take, which is that there should be in this city a municipal hospital to care for the sick poor, and not have this money thrown around piecemeal in different institutions.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman understands that we must provide for this institution as the law requires, and there is no authorization of law for a municipal hospital, and the only committee authorized to report legislation of that character is not the Committee on Appropriations but the gentleman's Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DYER. I am glad to hear the gentleman say that, but what I wanted principally to find out was if the word "jail" had to stay there.

Mr. BURLESON. The word "jail" constitutes a part of the name of this institution fixed by law.

Mr. DYER. I should also like to ask why the nurses are not paid more than $10 or $12 a month? They have 17 nurses there to take care of an average of 200 patients.

Mr. BURLESON. They are pupil nurses, not graduates, and are there for the purpose of learning their profession.

Mr. DYER. That is the only kind you ever have there?

Mr. BURLESON. That is the only kind you can get to go there. We made such provision as was estimated for.

Mr. DYER. They will not stay there; they run away because the conditions are such that they will not stay. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Home for the Aged and Infirm: Superintendent, $1,320; clerk, $900; matron, $600; chief cook, $720; baker, and laundryman, at $540 each; chief engineer, $1,000; assistant engineer, $720; physician and pharmacist, and second assistant engineer, at $480 each; 2 male attendants, and 2 nurses, at $360 each; 2 female attendants, 3 firemen, and assistant cook, at $300 each; assistant cook, $180; blacksmith and woodworker, and farmer, at $540 each; 3 farm hands, dairyman, and tailor, at $360 each; seamstress, laundress, hostler and driver, at $240 each; 3 servants, at $144 each; temporary labor, $1,000; in all, $15,752.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to ask why the committee has increased the salary of the large-salaried officers and has not increased the salary of the low-salaried laborers, those that get $144 a year?

Mr. BURLESON. Because we regard the $144 as adequate for the services rendered and we did not regard the salary of $1,200 as adequate for the services rendered there. We made three increases in this bill.

Mr. FOWLER. I know that.

Mr. BURLESON. The superintendent, the cook, and the chief engineer. I have explained at great length the reason moving us to increase the engineer's salary. The cook's salary was increased because of the representation made to the committee that they could not retain the services of a competent person as a chief cook with the salary authorized.

Mr. FOWLER. Would the gentleman agree to an amendment making the $144 a year salary $300?

Mr. BURLESON. I would not; because that would be $160 more than the services are worth.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the increase of the superintendent's salary from $1,200 to $1,320.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert the figures "$1,200."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 72, line 23, at the beginning of the line, insert the figures "$1,200."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, for Industrial Home School for Colored Children, $16,990: Provided, That all moneys received at said school as income from sale of products and from payment of board, of instruction, or otherwise, shall be paid over to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to be expended by them in the support of the school during the fiscal year 1913.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if any recommendation was made for the increase of the salary of the superintendent or the resident physician?

Mr. BURLESON. We made no change in that item. We provide an increase of salary of one cook and three or four of the servants. Those are the only changes we have made.

Mr. DYER. There was no request made for an increase?

Mr. BURLESON. I think not.

Mr. DYER. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask if the word "thirteen," in line 7, page 79, should not be "fourteen."

Mr. BURLESON. I was just about to offer an amendment. I move to strike out the word "thirteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "fourteen."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79, line 7, strike out the word "thirteen" and insert the word "fourteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

TEMPORARY HOMES.

Municipal lodging house and wood and stone yard, namely: Superintendent who shall also act as foreman, $900; cook, $360; night watchman for six months, at $25 per month, $150; maintenance, $1,820; in all, $3,230. Grand Army of the Republic, namely: Superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360; cook, $360; maintenance, $4,000; in all, $5,920, to be expended under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. BURLESON. If the gentleman from Missouri will pardon me, I want to offer an amendment first. Before the word "Grand" insert the words "temporary home for ex-Union soldiers and sailors."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 80, line 11, before the word "Grand," insert "temporary home for ex-Union soldiers and sailors."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DYER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to have my amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 80, line 11, strike out the words "Grand Army of the Republic" and insert in lieu thereof the words "ex-soldiers and sailors of the Civil War, Spanish War, and the Philippine insurrection."

Mr. BURLESON. To that I make a point of order.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. I will reserve it for one minute.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, in the last appropriation bill the ex-Spanish War soldiers were taken out of this paragraph, and since that time the only ones who have been eligible are ex-Union soldiers of the Civil War. There has never been a sufficient demand to maintain a home for those alone. Many applications come from Spanish War soldiers, and the year preceding that, when it was open to both of these, the record shows that 235 were veterans of the Spanish War. There is more demand for those of the later war, and the later Philippine insurrection than from the Civil War. The veterans of the Civil War have all practically been granted pensions, and there are several homes for the old soldiers all over the country. If the home is to be maintained, it ought to be maintained for all those who need it, and I will ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have the gentleman reserve his point for a little while.

Mr. BURLESON. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to be heard on the proposition or on the point of order, I do not care which. I notice this paragraph provides for the maintenance of two lodging houses, one a municipal lodging house, which carries an appropriation of $1,820 for maintenance, and the other what purports to be a lodging house for ex-Union soldiers, and that carries for maintenance an appropriation of $4,000. Does anyone pretend to say that there are fewer people maintained at the municipal lodging house, where all the poor may go, than there are at the Grand Army lodging house, where, as a matter of fact, scarcely anyone goes?

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that I have but little confidence in either one of these institutions. In my deliberate judgment they are both fake institutions.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that in contemplation of the future and what is about to take place in the city of Washington, and the number of people who will be gathered together in Washington in about a month, who will find quarters first at the Willard Hotel, and then, afterwards, borrow money to get out of town before they get away, this ought to include not merely the ex-Union soldiers, the soldiers of the Spanish War, but, possibly, considering the situation in the country, the ex-Confederate soldiers.

Mr. BURLESON. As well as soldiers of fortune?

Mr. MANN. If it included soldiers of fortune it would require much more than $4,000 for maintenance.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And ex-Congressmen, also.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order. The Chair will observe that the original heading of this paragraph is "Temporary home," without any limitation whatever. To that was appended by amendment the words "for ex-Union soldiers and sailors." I think that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER] is not subject to a point of order, in the light of the amendment which has been offered by the chairman in charge of this bill. I think that the amendment is not only germane to the subject matter of this paragraph but that it deals with a question which, to my mind, ought to appeal to every man in the House, to wit, the care of the unfortunate soldiers who have been brave enough to offer their lives as a sacrifice upon the altar of their country. We all know, Mr. Chairman, that it is not the policy of America to take care of those who are able to care for themselves, but that it is the policy of America to care for the unfortunates. Even the almshouses of the townships in the country do that, and I think that if the policy of this country is to be indorsed in taking care of the unfortunate common citizens of the country, then it ought to be the policy of the country to take care of the unfortunate soldiers of the country. So I trust that the point of order will not be sustained and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri will be carried by every vote in this House.

I have been to the institution known as the Temporary Home of the ex-Union Soldiers, and I know that it is not a fake institution, but an institution founded upon the greatest charity for the purpose of taking care of those soldiers and sailors who are unfortunate. Mr. Chairman, these old soldiers who planned this home absolutely serve there as officers of that institution without money and without price, and they volunteer their services to look after the interests of this home in order that it may be maintained, and now the large sum of money—immense in its character, in its scope, and in its provisions, amounting to the tremendous sum of $5,920—is objected to here by some gentlemen on the floor of this House. What a wonderful drain one-half of that sum will be on the United States Treasury.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, addressing myself to the point of order, I just want to call the attention of the chairman to the fact that this is not subject to the point of order. It does not increase the expenditure in any way, and it is not new legislation. It simply states who are eligible to this home, and I will say to the Chair that in the previous appropriation bill it included everything I have mentioned, but it was left out of the current bill. I think it is not subject to a point of order. It does not take any more money from the funds of the Government, and if it is to be maintained I will say that the superintendent of the home and the officials of the institution are anxious to have it include the soldiers of the Spanish War as well as those of the Civil War and of the Philippine insurrection.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. In view of the action of the committee a short while ago striking out the provision for the half and half principle of the law——

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that; they simply repudiated the debt, that is all.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Very well, express it as the gentleman desires, but the deed has been done.

Mr. BURLESON. For the time being.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. For the time being. In view of that fact will all of the expense of the maintenance of this temporary home fall on the taxpayers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BURLESON. No; it falls one-half on the District of Columbia and one-half on the General Government.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. That is what I am trying to get at. The half and half provision will not affect this item at all.

Mr. BURLESON. Not at all; it will only affect the debt. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the Spanish-American soldiers are really seeking this, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment provides for bringing into the act a class of persons now excluded, which makes it legislation, no authority appearing——

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, one moment——

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment—no authority of law for the inclusion of an additional class appearing, the Chair will sustain the point of order——

Mr. FOWLER. Just a moment, before the Chair rules.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). Unless the gentleman from Illinois can submit some authority to the contrary.

Mr. FOWLER. The item for the Spanish-American soldiers was simply dropped out of the bill. It was carried prior to this time, but it was simply dropped out, and it is not an innovation upon permanent legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not officially apprised; he assumes, of course, the gentleman's statement of facts is correct——

Mr. FOWLER. That is the fact.

The CHAIRMAN. But the point of order is now made and the Chair could not change the ruling, and therefore the point of order under the rules must be sustained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in view of what the chairman of the subcommittee has said, that this was a fake institution, I move to strike out the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky moves to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. FOWLER. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, just one minute. Does the motion to strike out the paragraph embrace between lines 7 and 14, both included? I want to move, if it is the proper time, to strike out from line 7 to line 14, both included.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman ought to have made it at the time, and I make the point of order that it comes too late.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It may be too early, but it can not possibly be too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, where are we on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk has read the paragraph beginning on line 7 to line 14, inclusive, on page 86; a motion to strike out has been made and not agreed to.

Mr. DYER. I offer an amendment to strike out the following words, beginning on line 11, page 80, specifically referred to by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] as being, in his judgment, an item concerning a fake institution:

Grand Army of the Republic, namely: Superintendent, $1,200; janitor, $360; cook, $360; maintenance, $4,000; in all, $5,920.

I move to strike those words out.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say a word about it. As I understand it, this is the item that provides temporary shelter for soldiers of the United States, especially those of the Union Army, who are aged and indigent, and either through misinformation or on their own motion, as the case may be, come to Washington in the hope of getting relief from Congress, and are without shelter and without food temporarily. That is my understanding of it, and, if I am correct, I think the gentleman would hesitate to make the motion.

Mr. DYER. If the gentleman will yield, I will state to him that this provision here is for ex-Union soldiers and sailors of the Grand Army of the Republic. In other words, to be eligible to this home they have got to be members in good standing of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. WILLIS. Is the gentleman opposed to the Grand Army of the Republic?

Mr. DYER. No. But, as I said a while ago, the gentleman from Texas makes a point of order against the Spanish War soldier and the Philippine soldiers, and leaves this home to the soldiers who are members of the Grand Army of the Republic.

I know, as a matter of fact, and I state it on authority, that not over 10 per cent of those who have been taken care of at the home during the past year were members of the Grand Army. There is no particular demand for the home by the members of the Grand Army of the Republic.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has expired.

Mr. DYER. I ask for five minutes more, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DYER. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

Mr. WILLIS. I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks it fair, simply because certain classes were not included whom he thinks ought to have been, to strike out the whole item and deprive the soldiers of this home?

Mr. DYER. That is not the principle. The principle is this: As the thing is now run under the present law it is a waste of public money to keep up and maintain this home. The amount paid out for services, rent, and fuel and gas is not in any way commensurate with the entire service rendered. Hardly ever a man applies there who is a member of the Grand Army of the Republic.

Mr. WILLIS. They are Union soldiers.

Mr. DYER. But this bill says "members of the Grand Army of the Republic."

Mr. WILLIS. But the gentleman says that, as a matter of fact, Union soldiers, some who are members of the Grand Army of the Republic and some who are not, are cared for here. Why does he want to strike out this item and deprive them of this benefit?

Mr. DYER. Because I do not feel there is any perceptible need for a home for the ex-Union soldiers. If they are eligible to the Grand Army, they belong to the Grand Army, and they are taken care of not only by the Government in many ways, but there are splendid homes all over this country for them. And it is a waste, Mr. Chairman, of public money to maintain and keep this home there for the good that it renders. If it could include all the veteran or Spanish War soldiers who want to go there for a week at a time I would say it should be kept up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is kept up now principally for the officers of the concern.

Mr. DYER. It is kept up for no adequate good as it now exists and as the law now provides.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have made some little investigation of this home at two or three different times, and in my judgment you could put up and quarter at the New Willard Hotel, in a parlor suite, or even at the New Shoreham, at still higher prices, every old soldier who has applied at this home and keep him there for about as long as they are required in this bill to be kept at this home, or longer.

Here is a place where I might go down town and rent a house and say to Congress, "I am keeping a house for the indigent," and live in it, perhaps very comfortably, and sometimes take somebody in and keep him for a few days. That is all that has been done at this place for several years. There are practically no Grand Army men who apply there, and they have no occasion to apply there.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. I will yield to my colleague.

Mr. FOWLER. Does my colleague know about the average number of soldiers who do lodge there daily?

Mr. MANN. I do not now recall; but last year I had the figures complete, here in the House, as to the number of people entertained there during the entire year, and the number of days, including everybody, counting a day, and the number was not very large.

Mr. FOWLER. I will say to the gentleman that before this home was open to Spanish-American War soldiers there were more than 360 Spanish-American War soldiers lodged there during the year.

Mr. MANN. That would be less than one a day. As I say, you could put them in a parlor suite at the Shoreham Hotel at less expense.

Mr. FOWLER. I desire to say to my colleague that I have been there on two occasions, and I have found an average from 15 to 20 unfortunate soldiers quartered there on each of my visits.

Mr. MANN. They must have known that my colleague was coming there and gathered them in. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I suggest that this amendment be considered as pending and taken up at the end of the bill, when the bill has been finished otherwise.

Mr. BURLESON. I agree to that, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman, having addressed himself to the amendment for five minutes, can not under a motion now to strike out the last word address himself to the same amendment for five minutes.

Mr. FOWLER. There is a motion pending to strike out a certain portion of the paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I submit that my colleague has not spoken on the motion, unless it was in my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misunderstood the situation, and stands corrected. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] can proceed.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at the statement of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the number of soldiers who are quartered in this temporary home could be cared for at an expensive price at one of our best hotels in this city for the amount which this appropriation carries. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the amount is only $4,000.

Mr. MANN. It is $5,920.

Mr. FOWLER. Well, that is not for subsistence.

Mr. MANN. But that is for this home.

Mr. FOWLER. I know personally, Mr. Chairman, that the superintendent of this institution gives all of his time to the gathering in of unfortunate soldiers who are lodged there. I know, also, that his good wife, without one cent of pay, either directly or indirectly, absolutely devotes her time, and all of her time, during the year for the purpose of taking care of those unfortunate soldiers who are lodged in that temporary home. If the gentleman contends that it is charity on the part of the United States to contribute one-half of this appropriation, then I say it is double charity on the part of the good wife of the superintendent of this home to devote all of her time to this work without pay and without price.

To my way of thinking it is horrible to strike out this appropriation. Old soldiers who come to this city for the purpose of securing information regarding their pensions or their applications for pensions often become stranded financially and must either go upon the charity of the city or upon the charity provided by this home. That being the case, Mr. Chairman, this country ought to rise to such dignity of respect for its soldiers as to prepare such an almshouse or place of refuge as is needed for their protection in their unfortunate condition.

Mr. Chairman, I have a heart that beats warmly for every man who has offered his services in the defense of my country, and I never will be the man who will vote against a liberal and charitable provision for the care of such honored men.

Neither will I ever vote against any proposition to care for them under such conditions as this home provides. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, it is a question which appeals to the patriotism of every Member of this House, and I believe that the patriotism of all Members of this House is as great as the patriotism of any other class of people in this country. Let our patriotism be measured now by our vote on this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. DYER) there were—ayes 9, noes 17.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The reimbursement required to be made to the United States by the District of Columbia under the provisions of the sundry civil appropriation act approved August 24, 1912, on account of deficiencies in payments for the care and maintenance of the insane of said District during the fiscal years 1881 to 1911, inclusive, is hereby fixed at $719,536.09.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph, because it is legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that the purpose of this item is simply to correct a clerical error. The members of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with the sundry civil bill last year, in ascertaining this amount, fixed it at $769,536.09, which was $50,000 in excess of what it should be.

There is no dispute whatever about the facts; no dispute between the Federal Government and the District government. It is simply that a clerical error was made, and this is to correct it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I believe I can throw some light on this subject.

Mr. MANN. Did I not make a point of order on this paragraph last year?

Mr. BURLESON. I think not.

Mr. MANN. Well, I did. I have forgotten how it got back into the bill, whether it was by a rule reported from the Committee on Rules or in some other way.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman made a point of order against the item carried in the sundry civil bill, but we did not deal with this subject in this bill last year.

Mr. MANN. You carried it in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. BURLESON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is the same thing. You say a mistake was made.

Mr. BURLESON. It became law.

Mr. MANN. I understand that it was subsequently inserted, and I said then that the committee was not prepared to state what the amount was. Now, the gentleman comes and says that the committee were mistaken, although he said then that they knew.

Mr. BURLESON. No; the committee was not mistaken. The committee ascertained the amount definitely, and it was $719,000, but in inserting it into the bill a clerical error was made.

Mr. MANN. And yet when the point of order was made, the committee assured us that the amount in the bill was correct. It may have been correct. I do not know. There was a dispute at that time as to the correctness of the item.

Mr. BURLESON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Kentucky that this is simply to do substantial justice to the treasury of the District of Columbia. There may have been a dispute a year ago, but there is no dispute now, between the District of Columbia authorities and the Federal Government on the proposition that this is the amount due, and in order to have the bill carry the actual amount rather than attempt to impose on the District the burden of paying $50,000 in excess of what it should pay this item is embodied in the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman admits that there was a mistake made last year?

Mr. BURLESON. There was a clerical error.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, "clerical error" is a very good way to put it on the clerk, when the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations is the only one connected with the committee who ever makes a mistake. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there is more in this item than has been indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I prefer to say just a word, because I do not know how the Chair is going to rule.

Mr. KENDALL. He has indicated pretty clearly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The amount was ascertained by the Appropriations Committee to be $769,000. Now they come and state that that is a mistake. I say that the amount is several hundred thousand dollars more than $769,000, and the last line or two of this paragraph undertakes to fix it so that hereafter the real amount can never be gotten at. Now, I agree with the gentleman that in so far as the amount was ascertained when the matter was up for discussion last year he is correct.

But let me call his attention to one error in the books at the asylum that will more than offset the item of $50,000. An examination of their books shows that the superintendent of that asylum dropped at one time the names of 25 District patients upon his books, notwithstanding the patients were in the asylum and remained there for nine years. During those nine years the District was not charged with the maintenance of those 25 patients. After a lapse of nine years they were picked up by the superintendent and put on a charge against the District of Columbia, and were carried until they died or were discharged.

That error made by the superintendent of the asylum more than offset the $50,000. The accountant who is looking into the affairs between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government has located that item, with others, which will carry this item far beyond the $796,000 originally found to be due, and, of course, more than the $719,000, the amount provided for in this bill. This paragraph, if it becomes a law, will exclude the Federal Government from collecting from the District of Columbia the amount which may finally be found to be due and proven to be due, and therefore I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order must be sustained; and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of troops, other than Government employees, to be disbanded under the authority and direction of the commanding general, $24,000.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend, on page 85, line 20, by striking out the word "disbanded" and inserting the word "disbursed." It is an evident misprint.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 85, line 20, strike out the word "disbanded" and insert the word "disbursed."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In connection with said reclamation and development of the Anacostia River and Flats from the Anacostia Bridge to the District line the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, a proceeding in rem to condemn and acquire for highway and park purposes the fee simple and absolute title to the land along the Anacostia River described as follows, namely: All that land lying on the right bank of the Anacostia River beginning at the easterly side of the Anacostia Bridge, and extending to the northeast boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland, comprised between the high-water line of the Anacostia River as determined by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and a line following approximately the contour of 10 feet elevation above mean low water at the United States navy yard as determined by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, which said line is indicated in red on the plan filed in the office of the engineer commissioner of the District of Columbia, and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; and also the land on the left bank of said Anacostia River from the easterly side of the Anacostia Bridge to the northeast boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland, comprising all that land between the high-water line of the Anacostia River as determined by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey and a line following approximately the contour of 10 feet elevation above mean low water at the United States navy yard as determined by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, which said line is indicated in green on the plan hereinbefore referred to; and also all land below the high-water lines on each side of said Anacostia River between the Anacostia Bridge and the northeast boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland that is not now owned by the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph on the ground that it is legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. Will not the gentleman reserve it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. BURLESON. The purpose of the item is to authorize the District authorities to condemn a strip of land lying along the edge of the property owned by the abutting property owners on the Anacostia River. Under the law if this property is reclaimed the ownership is vested in the property owners, but by condemning a small strip of land as Government property on the edge of the property owned by the abutting owners of what is reclaimed, the part reclaimed becomes the property of the General Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe I am thoroughly familiar with the proposition, and finally I shall insist on my point of order. I find in this bill two very remarkable expressions, more remarkable still if they were prepared by an engineer. I find a provision requiring the real estate "on the right bank of the river" and "on the left bank of the river" to be condemned. It depends upon which way a man is facing whether it is the right or the left bank; it depends upon whether the man is facing upstream or downstream. I believe the whole thing is unjust to the people who live in that section, and I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT). Does the point of order go to the whole paragraph?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

There is appropriated out of the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto, the costs and expenses of the necessary surveys and preparation of plans, and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages for and in respect of the land taken under said proceedings, the amount assessed as benefits, when collected, to be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The entire amount found to be due and awarded by the jury under said proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said highway and park purposes, as provided herein, plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings hereunder and the cost and expenses of the necessary surveys and preparation of plans, shall be assessed by the jury as benefits against those lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying, or being within an assessment area bounded as follows: Beginning at the point where the high-water line of the Anacostia River intersects the northeast boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland, and running northwest along said boundary line to a point where the southerly building line of Rhode Island Avenue extended as projected would intersect said boundary line; thence along said southerly building line of Rhode Island Avenue to the easterly building line of New Jersey Avenue; thence following the easterly building line of said New Jersey Avenue to the Anacostia River at a point where said easterly building line if projected would intersect the high-water line of said Anacostia River; thence following the high-water line of said Anacostia River in a northeasterly direction to the easterly side of the Anacostia Bridge; thence extending along the easterly side of said bridge to the easterly building line of Nichols Avenue; thence along said easterly building line of Nichols Avenue and the easterly building line of Giesboro Road to the point where said easterly building line of Giesboro Road intersects the southeast boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland; thence along said southeast boundary line in a northeast direction to the northeast boundary line between the District of Columbia and the State of Maryland, and following said northeast boundary line to the point of beginning.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary for highway and park purposes to preserve the Klingle Road Valley, comprising approximately 26½ acres, as shown on plans filed in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia: Provided, That the tract of land hereinafter described, containing about 2 acres, shall be excepted from condemnation for such park, viz, a detached portion of said described park lying at the extreme eastern end thereof, east of the east line of a proposed street 90 feet wide, said described land being land now assessed in the name of Thomas Armat.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

There is appropriated an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages: Provided, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said condemnation proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be taken in the condemnation proceedings herein authorized, plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings, not less than one-third shall be assessed by the jury as benefits against those lots, pieces, or parcels of land situated, lying, or being within an assessment area hereby created, which assessment area shall embrace all of the area lying within the distance of 1 mile from any point of said park: Provided further, That all land owned by the United States or the District of Columbia lying within said assessment area shall be exempt from assessment, which benefits, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

PINEY BRANCH VALLEY PARK.

For grading and improving a low, level road from Beach Drive, in Rock Creek Park, running along the Piney Branch Valley to Sixteenth Street and beyond Sixteenth Street so far as it may be necessary to return to the elevation of Sixteenth Street south of the bridge over Piney Branch with a suitable grade, $24,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know upon what grounds?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is very clear:

For grading and improving a low, level road from Beach Drive, in Rock Creek Park, running along the Piney Branch Valley to Sixteenth Street—

There is no objection to it up to that point. To continue—and beyond Sixteenth Street so far as it may be necessary to return to the elevation of Sixteenth Street south of the bridge over Piney Branch with a suitable grade, $24,000.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, on the west side of Sixteenth Street the property is publicly owned and is a part of Rock Creek Park. It is known as Piney Branch Valley. The Government owns that strip 600 feet wide running from the west part east until Sixteenth Street is intersected. There the ownership stops and east of Sixteenth Street is property privately owned, and if the present occupant of the chair will read he will see further along in the bill a provision to condemn that. Everything taken in connection with it thus clearly shows that the property east of Sixteenth Street must be condemned before this road can be built there.

Mr. BURLESON. There is nothing in the paragraph to indicate any such state of fact.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; it says beyond Sixteenth Street, and if this has been so drafted to deceive the House, then it becomes a worse proposition than it appears to be on its face. But if the Chair desires to ascertain from this bill whether or not the Government or the District, or the two combined, owns property east of Sixteenth Street, he can read a little further and he will see. I will say to the Chair that there has been a bill in various shapes before this House for several years to do this very thing, and every time that bill has been up it has been defeated. There is now pending a bill under the innocent guise of widening Sixteenth Street at Piney Branch, which would accomplish the purpose sought here. I make the assertion, and if the Chair will look further along in the bill he will see that I am right, that not one foot of ground at that point is publicly owned east of Sixteenth Street.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair is occupying it only temporarily, and he wishes to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if the ruling which he now insists upon is a ruling that has been made heretofore by the occupant of the chair?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No ruling has been made. We are now reaching it for the first time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it in line with the decisions that have been made heretofore?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think there has been anything like it up before, Mr. Chairman. The Chair can read a little bit further along himself and see the proposal to condemn this land east of Sixteenth Street, thereby setting clear the fact that it is not publicly owned and verifying just what I say about it. I will say that the engineer commissioner told me that that was to be acquired for the purpose of establishing a Rotten Row at that place. I do not know the fact, but he said that in London they have a place called Rotten Row—Rotten Row is what he said—where the rich go to exhibit their handsome equipages, and that this was desired for that purpose.

Now, I do not know whether that is true or not, but I do know that not one foot of ground at that place is owned publicly east of Sixteenth Street, and this has been purposely, I should say, worded so as to deceive.

Mr. FOSTER. Let me say to the gentleman from Kentucky that two or three years ago I remember very distinctly there was a proposition to buy the ground, just as the gentleman says, east of this bridge.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. And build a beautiful winding road there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. A figure-of-eight road.

Mr. FOSTER. Costing about $35,000; and there is no question but what the gentleman is correct about that statement.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I know I am correct.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for the committee that the statement that we purposely framed this item——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will explain I did not intend to reflect upon the committee. I believe that the committee did not prepare the draft of it.

Mr. BURLESON. This was estimated for in the language that is carried in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; and therefore being estimated for in the language we might infer from that that it was prepared by at least one of the commissioners.

Mr. BURLESON. And we naturally took the estimates, but I think it is due to the committee to say that the item is for grading and improving of a certain road in the District of Columbia, and undoubtedly there is authority of law for grading and improving roads in the District of Columbia. It may be that all the gentleman says is true, but the information is not carried in the particular item against which his point of order is directed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And that has been done, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of deceiving is my honest opinion about it; and if the Chair can advise himself of the fact that there is no ground publicly owned east of Sixteenth Street at Piney Branch, if he will but read the succeeding page where he will see the appropriation is made to condemn the ground upon which this original Rotten Row or figure-of-eight road is to be built——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky, Is this new law?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Why, certainly it is new law to build a road past Sixteenth Street where we have no right to build except under condemnation proceedings, as set out in the next paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a law for which there is no authority in a general act of Congress?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Certainly there is no authority for it. The commissioners can not condemn except for alleys. They can not condemn streets; they can condemn alleys under the existing law, but they can not condemn streets or a park without a law to authorize it; and this comprises here, if they get it, forty-odd acres. If the Chair will just read ahead, the whole proposition will become as clear as the noonday sun.

Mr. BURLESON. There is an item following this for the purpose of condemning land adjacent to this road for a park; but surely no one will contend that the District Government is without authority under the law to improve a road within the District of Columbia, and upon its face that is all this particular item proposes to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BURLESON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The appeal is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land along and adjacent to the Piney Branch Valley and between Sixteenth Street and Fourteenth Street NW., and the land adjacent to the Municipal Hospital grounds between Fourteenth Street and Georgia Avenue NW., for park purposes, comprising in all approximately 42 acres of land, as shown on plans filed in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. I concede it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOOHER). The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

There is appropriated an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of the amounts awarded as damages: Provided, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be taken in the condemnation proceedings herein authorized, plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings, not less than one-third shall be assessed by the jury as benefits against those lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying, or being within an assessment area hereby created, which assessment area shall embrace all of the area lying within the distance of 1 mile from any point of said park: Provided further, That all land owned by the United States or the District of Columbia lying within said assessment area shall be exempt from assessment, which benefits, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts: Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to abandon for highway purposes any existing streets or parts of streets within the territory before described except Fourteenth Street: Provided further, That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized to prepare a new highway plan for that portion of the District of Columbia lying west of Fourteenth Street, south of Taylor Street, east of Rock Creek Park, and north of Newton Street NW., under the provisions contained in the act of Congress approved March 2, 1893, entitled "An act to provide a permanent system of highways in that part of the District of Columbia lying outside of cities," and an amendment to said act approved June 28, 1898: Provided, That section 4 of said amendment shall not apply to the territory above described: Provided further, That under this authority Mount Pleasant Street may be extended with a minimum width of 45 feet; that Perry Place may be extended with a minimum width of 50 feet; and that Fourteenth Street Road may be established with a minimum width of 50 feet; that upon the completion and recording of said new highway plan it shall take the place of and stand for any previous plan for said portion of said District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. That is all a part of the same item. It can all go out down to the top of page 94. It is all subject to a point of order, provided the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] makes it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SMALL PARKS.

For the condemnation of small park areas at the intersections of streets outside the limits of the original city of Washington, to be acquired from such areas shown on the map on file in the office of the Engineer Commissioner, in the discretion of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, $15,000: Provided, That such condemnation shall be under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia: Provided further, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in any such proceeding as damages for and in respect of the land to be condemned for said parks, plus the costs and expenses of the proceeding thereunder, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, which, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, one-half to the credit of the United States and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia. The public parks so acquired shall become a part of the park system of the District of Columbia and be under the control of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make a point of order against the paragraph. It is new legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman reserve it for an explanation?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. Under the original plan for the laying out and the building of Washington, certain triangles, circles, and other small plats of land of various geometrical shapes and sizes were set apart as public parks. There were 225 of these within the limits of the old municipality, with which the gentleman is thoroughly familiar. When the suburban district was laid out, following the same general plan, these little triangles, of course, were continued as private property and frequently they are seized upon by persons for the purpose of extorting money from those who owned the adjacent property. There is one case where a splendid church was erected.

Immediately in front was a small triangle. Under the law a certain part of this triangle was set apart as public parking, and there remained only 9 square feet in the center which could be improved. The person owning that triangle, or those 9 square feet, proposed to erect thereupon a superstructure that, of course, would disfigure very much the triangle and would be a great embarrassment to the splendid church edifice which was immediately across the street. He forced the people belonging to that church to pay an exorbitant sum for this little triangle, although it could be of no practical benefit to them. They were willing to pay this unreasonable sum in order that this structure might not be erected in front of their church.

Now, the purpose of this item is to give the District officials authority of law for condemning these small triangles and circles of the character I have indicated, and we are appropriating only $15,000. I think if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] was thoroughly familiar with the situation he would not make this point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] will withhold his point of order long enough for me to make a brief statement about the matter, I wish to say a few words concerning it. The amount appropriated here for these small parks is only $15,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, then I offer an amendment to the paragraph. On line 16 strike out the word "one-half" following the words "United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 94, line 16, strike out the word "one-half."

Mr. BORLAND. And then, Mr. Chairman, on lines 17 and 18, strike out the words "and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On lines 17 and 18 strike out the words "and one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia."

Mr. BORLAND. So that the sentence shall read:

Not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury as benefits, which, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States.

Now, there is only $15,000 involved in this transaction, but, as the chairman of the subcommittee has explained, it is a favorable opportunity to acquire small parks for light and air space in the outlying sections of the city. These sections are entitled to that advantage if they want it. I have always believed as to the system of private parks that we are constructing for the people of the District of Columbia that they ought to pay for the benefits like people of other cities. These are not public grounds of the United States, but they are for people in the neighborhood in which they happen to lie. And if they are wisely chosen, they ought to be an addition to the surrounding property. The cost ought to be absorbed in the increased value for residential purposes of the surrounding property. In that case the amount ought to be charged against the abutting property as benefits. It ought to be collected therefor. When it is returned to the Treasury of the United States it ought not to be one-half to the credit of the District of Columbia. All we have appropriated should be to the credit of the United States, although the fact is that one-half of it is expended out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

That will make the District of Columbia itself as a whole pay for one-half of the cost of acquiring these parks, and the jury will have the right to assess the other one-half against the resident property owners of the District, and the result will be that none of the cost of these small parks will be assessed against the United States Treasury in the long run. The only result will be that the United States Treasury will temporarily advance the money while the work is in progress.

Mr. BURLESON. If the Federal Government advances half and the District advances half, then, when the benefits are finally assessed, does the gentleman believe that all should be paid back to the United States and none to the District of Columbia?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. Then the Federal Government would be getting one-half more than it has ever had heretofore.

Mr. BORLAND. The jury have the right to assess not more than one-half of the $15,000.

Mr. BURLESON. I think the gentleman is wholly in error about that.

Mr. BORLAND. No. The Federal Government is contributing $7,500, and the jury has the right to assess $7,500 on the property owners. That is the Government's half. That comes back, and that is all that does come back. It is the Government's half. The Government ought not to make anything on that proposition, but it ought to get back its half.

Mr. BURLESON. I think it would not be fair to require the District to pay one-half of this amount and then, when the benefits are assessed, receive no part of these benefits. For that reason I shall ask that the gentleman's amendment be voted down.

Mr. BORLAND. Does the gentleman understand that the Government is not going to make anything on this transaction?

Mr. BURLESON. No; and the District government is not going to make anything.

Mr. BORLAND. The District government pays one-half and the property owners pay one-half.

Mr. BURLESON. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BORLAND. A division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Q STREET BRIDGE PARKWAY.

Under and in accordance with the provisions of subchapter 1 of chapter 15 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are authorized and directed to institute in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia a proceeding in rem to condemn the land that may be necessary to provide a parkway at the intersection of Twenty-sixth Street, Twenty-seventh Street, and Q Street NW., and a connecting highway from said parkway along the boundary of the Oak Hill Cemetery, across the north part of square 1284, to Twenty-ninth and R Streets, in the District of Columbia, as shown approximately on plan filed in the office of the Engineer Commissioner of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BURLESON. I concede that it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

There is appropriated an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of said condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages: Provided, That of the amount found to be due and awarded by the jury in said condemnation proceedings as damages for and in respect of the land to be taken in said condemnation proceedings herein authorized, plus the costs and expenses of the proceedings, not less than one-half thereof shall be assessed by the jury as benefits against those lots, pieces, or parcels of land situate, lying, or being within an assessment area hereby created, which assessment area shall embrace all of the area lying within the distance of 1 mile from any point of said parkway and connecting highway: Provided further, That all land owned by the United States or the District of Columbia lying within said assessment area shall be exempt from assessment; which benefits, when collected, shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the United States in equal parts.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, it is all subject to a point of order down to the water department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on everything that is in the bill down to the water department.

Mr. BURLESON. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOOHER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28499) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon the call of the roll of the Senate 58 Senators have responded to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from West Virginia will proceed.

SENATORS FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, at the last session of Congress and on the last day of that session a certain memorial, signed by five citizens of West Virginia, one of whom is the governor of the State, was presented to the Senate. It had been understood that that session of Congress would adjourn on Saturday, the 24th of August, 1912. With that understanding, on account of illness, I obtained leave of the Senate for an absence for the rest of the session. For some reason the Senate did not adjourn on Saturday, but remained in session until Monday following, the 26th, and on that day of the session that memorial was filed. I deeply regret that two of the gentlemen who signed that memorial have since died.

Had I been present, Mr. President, or had my colleague [Mr. WATSON], who was away with a similar understanding as myself, been present, we would have asked then and there that the Senate take some kind of action which would do justice to that situation and relieve us of the suspicion which such a memorial brings upon any man against whom it may be lodged.

But we were not present, and I can never forget the kindly words then spoken and the dignified consideration with which the Senate received that paper. So far as we personally may be concerned, that sense of justice and propriety, always to be relied upon in the Senate, took care of the situation presented on August 26, 1912, probably much better than the Senators from West Virginia could have done if then present; and yet I shall always regret that we were not present and shall always feel that fate then tempted our enemies with a rare opportunity to strike under the belt. The men who signed it were all members of parties other than the one to which the two Senators from West Virginia belong. That fact may have influenced them or it may not; but it has little or no effect in this body, and I shall treat the subject as if their motives were lofty and as if the campaign then pressing did not guide the pen which wrote their names to the paper.

Afterwards, however, we went through a campaign in West Virginia in which those charges were more or less adverted to. While I do not want to go into the details, I wish to say to the Senate that it had no effect, so far as Senator WATSON was concerned, upon that result. His home county gave him a record-breaking majority, his congressional district gave his party a majority, and his senatorial district, for the first time in many years, went Democratic.

On account of illness in my family, and on account of the necessary and unavoidable absence of Senator WATSON during a great part of the present session, it has been impossible for me to give consideration to this matter, and indeed I supposed that the committee of the Senate having it in charge, which I believe to be fair, whose judgments I believe are never dictated from political considerations, would do whatever might be just and proper, and having had no opportunity to meet the thrust when it was delivered, I have allowed the days to pass in the knowledge that we were innocent and that no investigation could harm us. Having no fears, and the campaign being over, we felt no need of a grand-stand play and abided the result of the committee's work.

But recently I had information that the man who had made a statement against Senator WATSON and myself, or was said to have made a statement against us, had retracted that statement publicly, and privately as well. But I had no definite knowledge thereof, nor did Senator WATSON, till within the last few days.

I wish the Senate to know that not a human being who ever lived ever questioned upon his own responsibility my right or the right of my colleague to a seat in this body. No one ever did it in the Senate or in the House of West Virginia; no one has ever done it in the public press; no one has ever done it in any paper filed here; and no one has ever done it upon the floor of this Senate. Beyond what Shock may have said, this memorial is rumor and newspaper gossip, to which any public official may at any time become the victim.

This man Shock, about whose supposed statement all of this trouble has arisen, never voted for Senator WATSON and he never voted for me. He never made a statement to the West Virginia Legislature; he never signed a statement to the West Virginia Legislature. A statement alleged to have been written or rather to have been dictated by him was read, and, as is explained in a paper which I am going to ask to have read in a moment, all the circumstances surrounding that were known to the Legislature of West Virginia, which elected us to the Senate.

My colleague within the last four or five days received a letter from Mr. Shock, which I now present to the Senate, saying that the statement referred to in the memorial was based upon no fact that involved the Senators from West Virginia or their friends; that nobody ever tried to influence his vote for them; that he alone conceived the scheme in order to defeat us before the Democratic caucus. In other words, he has very recently confessed his error, and I am glad to say that he never either signed or swore to the statement in the memorial.

I wish to lay that statement before the Senate with a statement from Senator WATSON and myself. We have prepared it as an answer to the memorial. I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and if that committee or any Senator here or the Senate wants an investigation it will meet with my unqualified approval, and with the approval of Senator WATSON. True his term will expire in a few days. It seems practically impossible to enter upon an investigation at this session or while he may be a Member of this body. At the next session the committees will be reorganized. But these considerations only make it the more important that the Senate and the country shall know that the whole foundation of the Shock incident has crumbled away; that we have never retarded the orderly investigation of this subject, and that the committee has reached the case in due course and is dealing with the matter justly and fairly. We think that our side should go to the committee through the Senate and in the same public way that the memorial went.

I wish to say to the Senate that my election is as clear, that there is as little blot upon it within my knowledge, as the election of any Senator now before me or who ever was elected to this body. My colleague makes the same claim, and I firmly believe that he was honestly nominated and elected. I do know that he is an honest man and a valued, respected citizen of West Virginia, without a blot upon his private or public life. If there is anything wrong connected with my nomination or that of Senator WATSON, or with our election, we know nothing about it. It is most gratifying to us that not a single human being who ever voted for us in the caucus of our party, now attacked, has ever had the integrity of that vote questioned in this or in any other presence.

Mr. President, whatever the Senate may do, it will meet with the approval of the Senators from West Virginia. They crave the fullest investigation. There is not one word of truth, to my knowledge, in any charge that has ever been made, or any alleged charge, or in any newspaper article that has ever attacked their election.

I now send to the desk and ask to have this statement of Senator WATSON and myself read and referred to the Committee of Privileges and Elections, and whatever that committee or the Senate may do to that I bow without question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read without objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

For the information of your honorable body we desire to reply to a certain memorial now before your committee, signed by William E. Glasscock, William Seymour Edwards, H. C. Ogden, David B. Smith, and Frederick A. MacDonald, and in order to be as brief and as clear as possible we will answer according to the order in which the said memorial sets out the several matters.

The first allegation is the statement made by the Hon. Nelson C. Hubbard, a member of the West Virginia House of Delegates, to the joint session of the legislature before a ballot for United States Senator was taken, in which he gave his reason for refusing to vote for the nominees of the Democratic caucus.

An attentive reading of what Mr. Hubbard said, as stated in the memorial, will show that he does not predicate his charge of corruption upon any fact or upon the testimony of any witness, but made it purely upon his belief, for which he offers no sufficient reason. The memorial, however, deliberately suppresses that part of Mr. Hubbard's statement in which he admitted that he had no evidence of bribery, and for the information of your committee we call attention to that part of Mr. Hubbard's statement, the omission of which the memorial indicates by stars. The omitted part is as follows:

"I do not pretend to say that I have any more information which would justify anyone at the present time as a juror under the evidence to convict any man of bribery, and I do not say that I know any court that would.

When read in connection with what the memorial quotes from Mr. Hubbard's speech, it is thus made plain that he was simply willing to declare his belief in corrupt practices, though compelled in the same connection to admit that he had no evidence.

The second allegation of the memorial is the statement of Senator George W. Bland, which, outside of some vague and general insinuations that charges of bribery had been made throughout the State, was based upon a statement made by Mr. L. J. Shock, a member of the House of delegates. That statement was that one Hamrick had given Shock $1,000 and promised him an additional $1,500 to vote for Mr. WATSON and Mr. CHILTON, and two reputable citizens of West Virginia were called in to see Shock count down the $1,000. We do not question that Shock exhibited the $1,000 to Hon. John J. Davis and Hon. W. G. Bennett, but that he had been furnished with that money for the very purpose of exhibiting it to these honorable gentlemen we think the committee will not doubt when they have read this statement. It will be noted first that the so-called statement of Shock read by Senator Bland was not signed, and it is a further fact that though he was present at the joint session, as shown by its records, when Senator Bland read his statement he did not utter a word on that subject.

Subsequently and within a few days after Bland had read Shock's statement Shock was asked to produce the $1,000 which it was charged he had received, and he explained his inability to do so by saying that two men had taken the money away from him. He further stated that he had never seen either of these two men before they took the money from him and had never seen them since.

It is not pretended that Shock raised any outcry against the men who took the money from him or even related the circumstance to anyone until he was asked to produce the money.

Shock's explanation of why he was unable to produce the money which he was asked to do as a basis of an investigation which we had requested at the hands of the legislature was so ridiculously absurd that every sensible man in the legislature at once understood that Shock had been supplied with the $1,000 for the very purpose of creating a scandal, and that those who supplied him with it were not willing to trust him with the custody of it long enough to carry out the scheme.

It is not necessary for us, however, to argue that question or to ask the committee to accept our view of the episode, because Shock himself has admitted that his story of the attempt to bribe him was a pure invention in the following letter which he voluntarily sent to Senator WATSON, the original of which we file herewith.

BURNSVILLE, W. VA., January 8, 1913.

Hon. C. W. WATSON, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The time has come when you should know the truth about the so-called Shock statement. I never have signed any statement that was read before the legislature, and I never have been under oath. I have let the talking go on because I hated to be put in a wrong light. The truth is that I set up the whole business; nobody tried to buy my vote and would not swear that they did. I wanted to nominate McGraw and I thought if I got this thousand dollars and made this play it would hurt you and CHILTON. The trick failed to work and now you have the truth. I do not know you and am sending this to you because I want justice to be done. So far as I know your election and CHILTON'S was honest and fair, and it is wrong to have this report going around.

Very truly, yours, L. J. SHOCK.

The third allegation is that a resolution to investigate the vague and indefinite charges of bribery was proposed in the Legislature of West Virginia and defeated.

While it is true that the joint session of the West Virginia Legislature refused, on a point of order, as under the Federal Statutes it was compelled to do, to postpone the election of a Senator, it is further true that the house of delegates, which was controlled by a Democratic majority of exactly 40, promptly and by a unanimous vote passed a resolution, offered by Hon. C. M. Seibert, who supported both of us in the Democratic caucus, ordering an investigation and sent it to the senate, which finally disposed of that resolution by tabling it, because in the meantime the absurd story of Mr. Shock about the money having been taken away from him by two unknown men had been made so public that it was known to all senators and representatives, and the charges of corruption which had been mainly based on it were then treated as an absurdity. This explanation which we make to the Senate is the same as was made to Seator CHILTON by Hon. D. E. French, a copy of which is attached and original of which we file. Mr. French was then a leading member of the State senate, and was unanimously nominated by the Democrats at the present session of the senate as their candidate for president of the senate. The allegation that we prevented the adoption of that resolution by the senate will be completely negatived when your committee reflects that the State senate was composed of 15 Democrats and 15 Republicans, which made it an easy matter for the investigation to have been ordered by a vote of the Republican senators, with the vote of even Senator Bland, and as there were several other Democratic senators active, aggressive, and even bitter opponents of the two nominees the investigation would have been ordered, except that every reasonable man in the senate was then thoroughly convinced that the charges were unfounded.

The committee will, of course, remember that the Legislature of West Virginia not only completed the regular session at which we were elected, but that it was subsequently convened in extraordinary session, which lasted 45 days; and during all that time, though we were in our seats at Washington, not even a suggestion that we were not entitled to our seats was made.

The fourth and last allegation in the memorial is that our election was brought about by a combination of the railroads and the Standard Oil Co. The committee will, of course, perceive by glancing at the memorial that this charge has no other or better foundation than the irresponsible comments of some newspapers, and we could well dismiss them as entitled only to the consideration which every Senator's experience warrants him in giving to them. The charge, however, is so contrary to the facts that we crave the indulgence of the committee while we show how thoroughly it is the reverse of true. In the first place the opponent of Senator WATSON was then and is now the general counsel in West Virginia of the Norfolk & Western Railroad, which was then and is now owned and controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad, while Mr. McGraw, the opponent of Senator CHILTON, is the owner of the West Virginia Midland Railroad, which connects with the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, and the attorney of Mr. McGraw's railroad, a member of the State senate at that time, is the same gentleman who prepared the statement of one L. J. Shock.

More than this, Mr. Hubbard, from whose speech the memorial makes a garbled quotation, was then and is now an attorney for one of the Pennsylvania Railroad lines in West Virginia.

The falsity of the charge that we were supported and elected by the Standard Oil Co. will appear to the Senate when they are told that this same Senator Bland, from whose statement at the joint session the memorial quotes so elaborately, was then and is now the attorney of the Hope Natural Gas Co., a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Co.

This statement makes it plain that we were opposed rather than supported by those special interests.

There is one statement made in these newspaper clippings to which we feel called upon to reply particularly. The memorial recites an editorial from the Monroe County Watchman, in which the editor of that paper quotes a letter from one of his correspondents, who is represented as saying, "We have positive information that $150,000 was expressed here last week for the purpose of corrupting the delegates. This information comes from such sources as render it absolutely reliable and proof is obtainable to a moral and legal certainty."

In reply to this assertion we state upon our honor as men and as Senators that neither $150,000 nor any other sum was expressed to us or to any of our friends for the purpose of corrupting the delegates or for any other purpose.

It can not be deemed inappropriate for us to say that the sinister purpose of this memorial is apparent from the fact that it was presented to the Senate on the last day of its last session when there could be no possible expectation of any action on it before the general election in November. Neither will it be out of place for us to say that after these charges, vague and indefinite as they are, have been circulated industriously throughout West Virginia for two years, Senator WATSON has been renominated by the unanimous vote of the Democratic caucus to succeed himself, thus expressing to the Senate and to the world the judgment of the people who have the best opportunity and are in the best position to know the truth or falsity of them.

Reading this memorial in connection with our answer, we feel confident that your committee will promptly report to the Senate that no ground for an investigation has been shown. If any reasonable cause to challenge our election were before you, we would immediately demand an investigation as a matter of justice to the Senate, to the State of West Virginia, and to ourselves, but we do not believe that the time of the Senate ought to be wasted, the name of our State brought into question, and our attention diverted from our duties by a proceeding instigated by political revenge and supported by accusations which we have shown to be utterly unfounded.

C. W. WATSON.
W. E. CHILTON.

BLUEFIELD, W. VA., June 17, 1911.

Hon. WM. E. CHILTON,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Yours of the 15th instant in regard to the statements made by Delegate Shock, of Braxton County, last winter, at Charleston, in regard to the election of United States Senators, received.

The facts in regard to this matter, as I now recollect them, are as follows:

Shock in his statement which was read at the joint session of the legislature, in which yourself and Senator WATSON were elected, said that just prior to the Democratic caucus at which you and Senator WATSON were nominated as the Democratic candidates for United States Senators he had been paid $1,000 by a man—my recollection is Hambrick, from Clay—as a part consideration, that he, Shock, would vote in the Democratic caucus for yourself and WATSON, and that Shock took the money to Judge Bennett, who counted it. Afterwards Shock went into the said caucus, and without saying anything in the said caucus about the payment of the money to him, voted on every ballot against yourself and Senator WATSON, and did not make any public statement concerning said matter until the joint session of the legislature was held, at which United States Senators were elected, at which time the statement above referred to, which purported to have been made by Shock, was read. It was also publicly stated and generally discussed among the members of the legislature and others that after the said caucus Shock stated to various members of the legislature and other persons that two men whom he did not know, neither of them being the man who gave him the money, came to him and demanded the said $1,000, and that thereupon he, Shock, delivered the money to the said strangers, neither of whom he has ever seen since; that he did not know either of the said men and that he did not take their names. That Mr. Hambrick, the person whom Shock claims gave him the money, upon hearing of Shock's statement, came to Charleston and confronted Shock, and that Shock then stated that Hambrick was not the man who gave him the money and that he did not know who the man was. That he had understood that it was Hambrick, and for that reason had named him as the man who had given him the money. It was also commonly reported that Shock had stated that he proposed to trap and expose any efforts at corruption in the selection of United States Senators.

In view of this state of affairs, I felt at the time, and still feel, and think most of the other senators thought likewise, that an investigation was unnecessary and uncalled for, and that for the senate to undertake to investigate such flimsy charges would not have reflected credit upon the senate and would only have lent color to charges which in themselves contained nothing substantial or tangible upon which an investigation could properly be based. In fact, this entire matter, to my mind, bore the earmarks of a fabricated scheme in which Shock was simply made a tool of, perhaps innocently, by others, who in this way sought to raise a cry of corruption in the Democratic Party and thus to reflect discredit upon the party and the United States Senators which it elected.

I recollect distinctly the statement made by Senator WATSON before the joint session of the legislature which elected him to the United States Senate, that if anyone could produce reasonable proof of corruption on his part in connection with his election to the United States Senate he would resign the office, and that you on the same occasion publicly stated that you courted the fullest investigation that any person or body of men could make of these charges. So far as I know, neither yourself nor Senator WATSON ever expressed a wish or said anything to prevent or hinder an investigation of these matters.

It is my recollection that you went into the Democratic caucus with some thirty-odd votes affirmatively for you, and I know there were others who held you as their second choice. The fact that Col. McGraw, who was your opponent in the Democratic caucus, came from an adjoining county to Senator WATSON, and that he was not a candidate against WATSON for the short term, and the further fact that it was not probable that both United States Senators would be selected from the same section of the State is certainly a sufficient explanation of the fact that many of your friends voted for WATSON and his friends voted for you.

With best wishes, I beg to remain,
Yours, very sincerely,
D. E. FRENCH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The statement will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present resolutions adopted by the Board of Trade of North Attleboro, Mass., expressing their belief that

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. BURTON on the 4th instant, proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the participation of the United States by official delegates at the international conference for the purpose of drawing up international rules and regulations for the assignment of load lines to merchant ships, etc., intended to be proposed to the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

Mr. OLIVER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 6691) to indemnify the State of Massachusetts for expenses incurred by it in defense of the United States, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1188) thereon.

Mr. BROWN. From the Committee on Patents I report favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 23568) to amend section 55 of "An act to amend and consolidate the acts respecting copyright," approved March 4, 1909, and I submit a report (No. 1187) thereon. I ask that the report of the House be made a part of the Senate report and that it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (S. 7619) for the relief of Laetitia M. Robbins, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 7845) relating to the adjudication of homestead entries in certain cases, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1189) thereon.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 8204) to authorize the Buckhannon & Northern Railroad Co. to construct and operate a bridge across the Monongahela River, in the State of West Virginia, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 1190) thereon.

Mr. POINDEXTER, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (S. 5179) directing the Secretary of the Treasury to prepare designs and estimates for and report cost of a national archives building in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1191) thereon.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE DIPLOMATIC OR CONSULAR SERVICE.

Mr. BRYAN. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report favorably the bill (S. 8082) to amend section 1440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida asks for the present consideration of the bill just reported by him. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 1440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read:

SEC. 1440. If any officer of the Navy on the active list accepts or holds an appointment in the Diplomatic or Consular Service of the Government he shall be considered as having resigned his place in the Navy, and it shall be filled as a vacancy.

Mr. ROOT. May I ask if unanimous consent has been given for the consideration of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not put it in the form of a request for unanimous consent, but submitted it as a request, and announced that no objection had been heard.

Mr. ROOT. I do not wish to object, but I should like to know the reasons for further legislation at this time on this subject.

Mr. BRYAN. Section 1440 of the Revised Statutes, as it exists to-day, allows neither officers on the active list of the Navy nor officers on the retired list of the Navy to be appointed to positions in the Diplomatic or Consular Service. This bill is designed to allow officers on the retired list to be eligible for appointment in the Consular Service.

Mr. ROOT. I do not yet understand the object of the bill.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, the law that is sought to be amended is an old law that has been on the statute books since 1868, and it has led to a good deal of trouble, because the courts have construed it as covering both the active and the retired lists. This bill simply confines it to the active list.

Mr. ROOT. What does it confine to the active list?

Mr. LODGE. Appointments to the Consular or Diplomatic Service.

Mr. ROOT. May the bill be again read?

The Secretary again read the bill.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, as I understand, the bill allows officers of the Navy upon the retired list to be appointed to diplomatic positions.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It cuts off those on the active list.

Mr. ROOT. Leaving the prohibition against those on the active list. I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "Navy," the words "or Army."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Navy," in line 6, it is proposed to insert the words "or Army."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from New York that a further amendment would be needed in line 9 so as to include the Army. The words "or Army, as the case may be," should be inserted.

Mr. ROOT. I should be glad to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the proposed amendment.

The SECRETARY. In line 9, after the word "Navy," it is proposed to insert "or Army, as the case may be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STATUE OF JOHN MARSHALL.

Mr. SWANSON. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 7057) for the erection of a statue to John Marshall, and I submit a report (No. 1186) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. Let it be read.

Mr. SWANSON. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BRISTOW. Is this a proposition for the Federal Government to erect a statue in a State building somewhere?

Mr. SWANSON. It is proposed to erect it in the Federal building at Richmond.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will say to the Senator from Kansas that the National Government has about completed a new building costing about $1,000,000 in the city of Richmond——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is upon the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. It is proposed to place the statue in that building.

Mr. BRISTOW. I may want to offer some amendments to it. There are some statues which I should like to have erected out in Kansas. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under objection the bill will go over. It will be placed on the calendar.

LOREN W. GREENO.

Mr. THORNTON. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 8230) for the relief of Loren W. Greeno, and I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] to the bill.

Mr. POMERENE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Let the bill be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President to appoint Loren W. Greeno an ensign in the United States Navy on the retired list.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS AGAINST MEXICO.

Mr. ROOT. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 40), for which I ask present consideration. I call the attention of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] to the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be reported.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Secretary of War, under the joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory growing out of the late insurrection in Mexico, approved August 9, 1912, be transmitted to the President, who is hereby respectfully requested to cause a claim for the amount of the damages reported therein as suffered by American citizens within American territory to be presented to the Government of Mexico as a claim in behalf of the Government of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York asks for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the request for present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Reserving simply the right to object, I wish to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question first is on the present consideration of the concurrent resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Have I the right to the floor, to say what I please?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent the Senator can proceed. No debate is in order, except by unanimous consent, until after the question of present consideration has been acted upon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I do not want to object to the resolution. I want to understand it. Reserving the right to object, I thought I could then proceed, as was the custom in the other body where I have served.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Have I the floor by the unanimous consent of the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By unanimous consent, the Senator will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I thought I had it before proceeding to obtain the information I desire.

Being in order, then, at last, I wanted to say to the Senator from New York that I thought it had been understood that these claims for damages sustained by citizens of the United States on American soil occasioned by Mexican soldiery shooting across the international line were to be investigated by the commission under the resolution heretofore reported by the Senator from New York from the Committee on Foreign Relations; that those claims were to be presented to our own Congress for payment, and then that the United States would proceed in the order suggested in the resolution now before the Senate.

My interest in the whole matter is to make this claim first one against the Federal Government itself for damages to its own citizens, and then that the Government shall place before Mexico its claim for reimbursement for the money paid out in these cases.

The commission went to the city of El Paso, Tex., and to Douglas, Ariz. They made an investigation and a report fixing the amount that the commission thought should be paid to these people. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that if these people are to be relegated to trusting the department here to get that money from Mexico, they may as well quit right now. The conditions in Mexico are such that nobody can get payment of a claim from the Government of Mexico. Probably two billions of foreign capital are doing the business of Mexico. There is—from the best obtainable information—not less than $800,000,000 of American money invested there, and fully as much more by other nations. There is no earthly chance of these people getting their money during their lifetime if we are to proceed diplomatically with the collection of a claim against Mexico.

This has been such an outrage, such an insult to the Nation, that I never dreamed that any postponement would occur in the payment of these claims, further than that Congress would pass a law allowing these men the amounts found due in these cases and pay them out of our Treasury, and then that the United States Government would make its claim for reimbursement against the Republic of Mexico.

This reckless shooting of American citizens on our own soil by armed soldiers in Mexico was virtually an act of war on the part of Mexico, and our forbearance should have induced an immediate reparation by that Republic. Congress can do no less than pay the claims and look, as I have said, to Mexico for reimbursement.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will also proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROOT. I will say to the Senator from Arizona, in the first place, that I am in favor of paying these claims. I think the Government of the United States should pay them. We are, however, approaching the close of the short session. The bill providing for payment has not yet been reported. Whether they are paid or not the theory of obligation upon which the bill rests will necessarily lead to the making of a claim against Mexico in behalf of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I understand.

Mr. ROOT. The view upon which the resolution directing the Secretary of War to make an investigation and report was drafted and passed was that these Americans, never having gone into the territory of Mexico, but remaining upon the soil of their own country, could not be relegated to a claim against Mexico for redress for the injury they had suffered, and that the Government of the United States should make it a national matter and should itself take the burden of prosecuting their claim.

This was an alternative to a resolution which was offered in the Senate and which was voted down, conferring authority upon the President to use the military forces of the United States to secure redress and prevent further injuries. There was substituted an assumption by the Government of the United States of its responsibility, to be borne by the peaceful processes of diplomacy, impressing a claim of the Government for the warlike proposals upon the one side and the relegation of these weak individual citizens to their claims against Mexico on the other side.

Now, whether the claims be paid by the United States, as I think they ought to be, or not, the resolutions some time or other should be adopted, and it seemed to the Committee on Foreign Relations that there should be no delay about it.

I will call the attention of the Senator from Arizona further to the fact that the adoption of this resolution is the adoption of the principle of governmental responsibility.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, I now understand more clearly than I did from hearing the resolution read the course which will be pursued ultimately, whether Congress passes the bill for relief or not. Its passage in no way will affect our action hereafter on a bill for the payment of these claims or tend to retard action when it shall come before the Senate. In this view of the matter, of course no objection should be made. I hope the resolution will pass.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THE SENATE MANUAL.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 447), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to prepare a new edition of the Senate Manual, and that there be printed 4,500 copies of the same for the use of the committee, of which 250 copies shall be bound in full morocco and tagged as to contents.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES FROM FEDERAL TO STATE COURTS.

Mr. PERKY. I introduce a bill and I ask that it be read at length.

The bill (S. 8376) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 28 of an act approved March 3, 1911, and entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto the following: "And provided further, That no suit shall be removable solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship by any party thereto who shall at the time of the institution of said suit have an established place of business within the State where said suit was originally instituted," so that said section shall read, when so amended, as follows:

"SEC. 28. Any suit of a civil nature at law or in equity arising under the Constitution or laws of the United States, or treaties made, or which shall be made, under their authority of which the district courts of the United States are given original jurisdiction by this title, which may now be pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court, may be removed by the defendant or defendants therein to the district court of the United States for the proper district. Any other suit of a civil nature at law or in equity of which the district courts of the United States are given jurisdiction by this title, and which are now pending or which may hereafter be brought in any State court, may be removed into the district court of the United States for the proper district by the defendant or defendants therein, being nonresidents of that State. And when in any suit mentioned in this section there shall be a controversy which is wholly between citizens of different States and which can be fully determined as between them, then either one or more of the defendants actually interested in such controversy may remove said suit into the district court of the United States for the proper district. And where a suit is now pending or may hereafter be brought in any State court in which there is a controversy between a citizen of the State in which the suit is brought and a citizen of another State any defendant, being such citizen of another State, may remove such suit into the district court of the United States for the proper district at any time before the trial thereof, when it shall be made to appear to said district court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court, or in any other State court to which the said defendant may under the laws of the State have the right, on account of such prejudice or local influence, to remove said cause: Provided, That if it further appear that said suit can be fully and justly determined as to the other defendants in the State court without being affected by such prejudice or local influence, and that no party to the suit will be prejudiced by a separation of the parties, said district court may direct the suit to be remanded, so far as it relates to such other defendants, to the State court to be proceeded with therein. At any time before the trial of any suit which is now pending in any district court, or may hereafter be entered therein, and which has been removed to said court from a State court on the affidavit of any party plaintiff that he had reason to believe and did believe that from prejudice or local influence he was unable to obtain justice in said State court, the district court shall, on application of the other party, examine into the truth of said affidavit and the grounds thereof, and unless it shall appear to the satisfaction of said court that said party will not be able to obtain justice in said State court it shall cause the same to be remanded thereto. Whenever any cause shall be removed from any State court into any district court of the United States and the district court shall decide that the cause was improperly removed and order the same to be remanded to the State court from whence it came, such remand shall be immediately carried into execution, and no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the district court so remanding such cause shall be allowed: Provided, That no cause arising under an act entitled 'An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases,' approved April 22, 1908, or any amendment thereto and brought in any State court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States: And provided further, That no suit shall be removable solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship by any party thereto who shall at the time of the institution of said suit have an established place of business within the State where said suit was originally instituted."

SEC. 2. All acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith are, in so far as they are in conflict, hereby repealed.

Mr. PERKY. Before the bill is referred I should like to make a brief statement as to the purpose of the bill.

The bill just introduced is designed to correct the practice of removing causes from State to Federal courts where the application to remove is based solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship between the parties to the suit or action.

The reasoning which sustains this measure is that a person or corporation which voluntarily comes into a State and deliberately establishes a place of business therein should be required to submit his or its controversies with citizens of such State to the determination of its courts where there is no showing of local prejudice against the applicant for removal or hostile local influence working against him of such a nature as to prevent such applicant from securing justice.

The abuses against which this bill is directed were ably presented in a communication appearing in the seventy-second Central Law Journal, page 218, written by Henry S. Johnston, of Perry, Okla., which I will not take the time to read, but which I desire to adopt as a portion of my remarks, and I ask leave that it be so printed and inserted at this portion of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, without objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

PERRY, OKLA.

EDITOR CENTRAL LAW JOURNAL: I opened your publication of the 17th of February and read the article appearing on page 113 entitled "Disbarment—Using a sham corporation to create diversity of citizenship."

I want to commend you for this article. One of the crying outrages perpetrated by Congress upon a long-suffering people has been the vesting of corporations with the power to remove their causes to the Federal courts, irrespective of the nature of the cause of action.

An examination of the trial calendar of any of the circuit courts will disclose that the bulk of business there transacted is the result of foreign corporations securing removal of causes commenced in the State courts.

Not long ago I examined a court calendar containing three pages about the size of your law journal and on which appeared something like 100 cases set for trial; about 85 of them were suits commenced by private citizens in State courts to recover damages from foreign corporations.

Any domestic corporation must answer for its torts, breaches of contracts, bad faith, infractions of law, and any derelictions to the courts of the State. Every natural person must do the same thing, but the legislation authorizing removal of causes on account of diversity of citizenship is a very highly esteemed special privilege acquired and enjoyed by corporations, and the great carrier corporations of the country use this Federal statute as an open doorway from which to escape responsibility for their acts.

To fairly illustrate the effect of the present system: Let us suppose that a farmer is authorized to take up trespassing animals found upon his land at the place and time of the trespass. Next, let us suppose that the law made a provision that if the trespassing animal was owned by an individual not living in his school district, that in such case he must first turn the animal loose in an unincloseed wilderness, permit it to roam 20 miles from home, and then the law would give him permission to catch it if he could. The world would immediately point to the folly of such a statute as being ridiculous, dishonest, and unfair, and a discrimination in favor of the nonresident of his school district.

In the case of a domestic corporation or a private citizen relief is afforded where the party can be found and service obtained upon him or where the accident or injury occurs, and right there they sit down together and arbitrate or lock horns and go to battle with the home court as their referee and the confines of their territory limited to the scope of a county with the right to take depositions and bring witnesses from all parts of the globe. But forsooth, it chances to be a foreign corporation, no longer is the right to apprehend the trespasser within the confines of this corral of the farmer's own community or balliwick, but the corporation can jump the bounds of the county fences and go to a court with State wide or district wide meanderings and attend court 60 miles from home at the capital. Then he can attend the next session of court at some other court town 150 miles from home and the next time at 200 miles from home at another court town, and follow the judge around the circuit of his district. Leg weary, tired, worn, sleepless, and purse lean at last he gets trial to find the marginal boundaries of the State do not limit the resources of this foreign corporation, but he must follow his appeal to St. Louis, St. Paul, Washington, D. C., New York, or what not, and that his representatives in the personality of cowboys, lawyers, or whatsoever they may be, must ride to unfamiliar fields and strange roads where they so seldom practice and with which they are so little familiar, known as Federal practice, procedure, legal equitable, civil, special and peculiar, blended in part with the recognition of State law and the capacity to ignore and set the same aside at will, without responsibility to the very authority which it pretends and purports to recognize. As a matter of quasi comity, there is a pretense at enforcing and recognizing State laws, but Federal judges are not responsible to the State or to the powers of the State, to the people of the State or to State institutions for their authority, and when therefore they see fit to ignore State laws there is no responsibility attached thereto, and the world simply smiles and attributes the act to the general superiority of the Federal Government over the State; the right of powers that be to recognize or ignore the inferior branches of our sovereignty at the sweet will and pleasure of the particular judge who is trying the cause.

To illustrate: Not long ago a United States judge tried a case where two workmen on a hand car going along a high trestle about 200 yards long, adjoining a bridge of somewhat greater length, were run down by a fast-running engine and tender. Proof was available that the brake on the engine was out or order and the engine should have been in the repair shop; that the same could not possibly be controlled by the engineer in charge thereof. The accident had so sickened the engineer with the conduct of corporations generally and the cold-blooded manner in which they put their men to work with defective devices and let them take their chances that he quit the road entirely.

The Oklahoma constitution provides: "The defenses of contributory negligence or of assumption of risks shall in all cases whatsoever be a question of fact, and shall at all times be left to the jury."

The Federal judge who tried this case snapped his finger at our constitution and promptly proceeded to say that "the two employees on the hand car assumed the risk of being upon the track on a hand car, and that their death resulted from a risk which they had assumed."

It is true, the engineer did all he could to stop the engine. Had he not done so or had he not been watching, the courts must have said that the last clear chance to avert the injury lay in the hands of the engineer, and it was his duty to act, and so have let the case go to the jury, had the constitution of Oklahoma never been written; but the engineer must grimly grit his teeth and ride on to certain destruction, conscious of the grinding, grasping indifference of his corporation to the defective appliances and devices in use. But the corporation was right; it had but little to fear. The widows of the two deceased men must bring their action for $2,000 or less or run the additional hazard of being removed to the United States court. They brought their suits for a large amount. The cases were removed and the judge who tried it, after listening to the evidence, took the case from the jury, with the announcement that the parties upon the track took the chances, assumed the risks, and that no recovery could be had in the case, and it would be useless to permit it to go to a jury.

The books abound with decisions of the State courts one way and with Federal decisions stating that the same identical elements of the State law enforced in that State by public policy of the State, by the legislation of the State, by the constitutional provisions of the State will be enforced by the courts of the United States, yet, upon the other hand, when it comes to practical recognition through the working out of those principles the book equally abounds with decisions where the Federal judiciary perpetually and forever ignores the very laws it purports in another breath to honor and respect.

One more suggestion and then I wish to propose a remedy. The suggestion is that it is infinitely better that within the limits of a State the law be uniform in its application; that no matter in what forum the law is applied or where people go for their remedies the law should be the same, and that it shall be plain, speedy, prompt, and adequate, and meted out as nearly as practicable at the doorway of the party invoking its sanctions. It is of no consequence or very little consequence that the Federal decisions of New York are harmonious with those of Oklahoma upon questions of local application, but it is infinitely important that the Federal decisions upon question of local application should coincide with those of our own State courts.

And now for the remedy. The remedy lies in placing the differences and controversies between litigants back within the jurisdiction of the State courts; lay the ax in the root of the tree; let Congress repeal or at least modify this Federal policy. Some provision similar to the following would do the work:

"Provided, however, That the right of removal on account of diversity of citizenship shall not apply to corporations domiciled within a foreign State or which transacts business within such foreign State or for the commission of any tort within the jurisdiction of such foreign State or for the breach of any contract made or to be carried out in whole or in part within such foreign State."

My suggestion now to you is that since your paper has perceived the wrong and given it publicity as you have the awakening of conscience and the conviction of judgment which you have experienced imposes upon you a duty, to wit, that of educating the bar and the judiciary, and thereby effectively reaching Congress with a universal, concentrated demand for remedial legislation touching this evil.

I regret to have taken so much of your time, as I necessarily do in writing this long letter, and yet I felt I could not escape the sense of duty my own knowledge carries with it.

Truly, yours,

HENRY S. JOHNSTON.

NOTE.—The letter of our correspondent is much appreciated. Congress, we believe, intended by the conformity act to indicate that nothing should interfere with the constitutional purpose merely to furnish a court free from local prejudice. Ever since Judge Story started the "general-law" heresy Federal courts have been assuming more and more to be independent of State interpretation. What ought to be done is for Congress to declare they have no jurisdiction but to enforce as State law what the State declares such to be and to enforce it as State courts enforce it. It is strange that Congressmen elected only by citizens of States should permit anything else. (Editor.)

Mr. PERKY. I have also prepared a brief dealing with the historical facts and the law relating to the subject covered by this bill, which I should like to have appear as part of my presentation of the merits of this measure, and I ask leave to have it printed at this stage of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be so ordered, without objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[Memorandum of law in re removal of causes upon the ground of diverse citizenship.]

CONTENTS.

The language of the proposed amendment.
Relevant constitutional and statutory provisions.
Constitutional purpose preserved by proposed amendment.
Corporations as citizens for purposes of Federal jurisdiction.
Abuse of present removal privilege.

The intent of the proposed law as embodied in this bill is to amend section 28 of the Judicial Code so as to limit the right of removal of causes from State to Federal courts only in causes where it is claimed solely on the ground of diverse citzenship. To accomplish this purpose it is proposed by the terms of this bill to add to section 28 of the existing Judicial Code this language:

"And provided further, That no suit shall be removable solely upon the ground of diversity of citizenship by any party thereto who shall at the time of the institution of said suit have an established place of business within the State where said suit was originally instituted."

The proposed amendment makes no change in the law as it now stands in regard to removal upon the ground of a Federal question or upon the ground of prejudice or local influence.

In the amendment proposed the phrase "an established place of business within the State" is employed. This is the language used by the act of March 3, 1897, in providing where suits for infringement of patent may be brought, in which connection it has been construed by the courts. Having an established place of business in a particular district is thus recognized as justifying departure from the usual rule that a defendant shall be sued only in the district of which he is an inhabitant. By analogy it justifies the principle of the amendment, which is that a person or corporation having an established place of business within a State should submit to suit in the courts of that State.

RELEVANT CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

The jurisdiction of the Federal courts in cases between citizens of different States, whether original or by removal, has its origin in the Constitution itself.

Article III, section 2, of the Constitution provides as follows:

"The judicial power shall extend * * * to controversies * * * between citizens of different States."

Article III, section 1, of the Constitution provides:

"The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish."

Article I, section 8, clause 9, of the Constitution provides:

"The Congress shall have power * * * to constitute tribunals inferior to the Supreme Court."

Under these constitutional provisions Congress may limit the jurisdiction of the inferior Federal courts which it may establish to any extent it deems proper. While it has power to confer jurisdiction upon the Federal courts, by removal or otherwise, over controversies between citizens of different States, it is not compelled to do so. In the absence of any sufficient reason or valuable purpose to be subserved, Congress is under no obligation to deprive the State courts of jurisdiction of controversies between citizens of different States, or if there is a reason why some of such controversies should be taken into the Federal courts, which reason does not apply to all such controversies, then Congress may properly limit the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in this class of cases to those controversies in which there is some reason why they should be tried in the Federal courts rather than in the State courts.

In Gaines v. Fuentes (92 U. S., 18) the Supreme Court said:

"The Constitution declares that the judicial power of the United States shall extend 'to controversies between citizens of different States' as well as to cases arising under the Constitution, treaties, and laws of the United States; but the conditions upon which the power shall be exercised, except so far as the original or appellate character of the jurisdiction is designated in the Constitution, are matters of legislative direction. * * * In cases where the judicial power of the United States can be applied only because they involve controversies between citizens of different States, it rests entirely with Congress to determine at what time the power may be invoked and upon what conditions—whether originally in the Federal court or after suit brought in the State court; and, in the latter case, at what stage of the proceedings—whether before issue or trial by removal to a Federal court or after judgment upon appeal or writ of error."

It is, of course, perfectly well settled that no State can in any way abridge or impair the jurisdiction of the Federal courts or in any way limit the right of removal of causes into the Federal courts. Any such limitation must be made, if at all, by Congress. (Barrow Steamship Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S., 111; Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S., 197.)

From the very beginning, however, Congress has vested the Federal courts with jurisdiction of causes between citizens of different States and authorized the removal into the Federal court of such controversies if originally begun in a State court.

The original judiciary act of 1789 (1 Stat. L., 73) provides that a suit brought in a State court between citizens of different States may be removed into the Federal court. This provision, substantially unchanged, was carried forward into the Revised Statutes and appeared in section 639. It also appears in the judiciary act of 1875, section 2, as amended by the act of 1887–88 (25 Stat. L., 433, in Supp. Rev. Stat., 611). The present Judicial Code, act March 3, 1911, section 24, gives the Federal district court original jurisdiction "where the matter in controversy exceeds, exclusive of interests and costs, the sum or value of $3,000, and * * * is between citizens of different States." Section 28, which is the subject of the proposed amendment, confers the right of removal in such cases.

It is thus seen that the proposed amendment imposes a limitation upon the removal of causes, which is wholly new in Federal legislation.

CONSTITUTIONAL PURPOSE PRESERVED BY PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

In Whelan v. N. Y., etc., R. Co. (35 Fed., 858) the court said:

"The clause in the Constitution extending the judicial power of controversies 'between citizens of different States' was intended to secure the citizen against local prejudice, which might injure him if compelled to litigate his controversy with another in the tribunals of a State not his own. This object was the avowed purpose of the constitutional provision at the time of its adoption; and the Supreme Court so declared in Gordon v. Longest (16 Pet., 104), where it is said that 'one great object in the establishment of the courts of the United States and regulating their jurisdiction was to have a tribunal in each State presumed to be free from local influence, and to which all who were nonresidents or aliens might resort for legal redress.'"

It will be noted that the present removal act (Judicial Code, sec. 28) expressly provides that a suit involving a controversy between citizens of different States may be removed into the Federal district court "when it shall be made to appear to said district court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in such State court," etc.

The original judiciary act of 1789 made no express reference to prejudice or local influence as a ground for removal. This was first brought into the law by the act of July 27, 1866, as amended by the act of March 2, 1867 (14 Stat. L., 306, 558), and was codified in the Revised Statutes in section 639. It was carried forward by the act of 1875 as amended by the act of 1887–88.

As the sole purpose of the Constitution in extending Federal jurisdiction to controversies between citizens of different States was to provide an impartial court, free from prejudice and local influence, and as that purpose is expressly provided for in the present law, and the proposed amendment does not in any way take away the right of removal in cases where such prejudice or local influence exists, there is no longer any reason why other causes should be withdrawn from the jurisdiction of the State courts and removed into the Federal court merely because the parties are citizens of different States. There is only the historical basis for such a provision. It was in the first judiciary act and is therefore in the last. It seems not to have been noted that the constitutional purpose was fully carried out when express provision was made for the removal of causes upon the ground of prejudice or local influence. There being no longer any reason for preserving this broad right of removal in all cases where diverse citizenship exists, every argument showing the abuse which has been made of the right and the hardships which are thus without reason inflicted upon litigants should be given full weight.

The Supreme Court has held that Congress intended by its recent legislation to limit and contract the jurisdiction of the Federal courts:

"The recent acts of Congress have tended more and more to contract the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States which had been enlarged by intermediate acts, and to restrict it more nearly within the limits of the earlier statutes." (Wabash Western Ry. v. Brow, 164 U. S., 127.)

"The act of March 3, 1887, chapter 373, corrected by the act of August 13, 1888, chapter 866, was intended, as this court has often recognized, to contract the jurisdiction of the circuit courts of the United States, whether original over suits brought therein or by removal from the State courts." (Hanrick v. Hanrick, 153 U. S., 192.)

The proposed amendment is therefore exactly in line with the present purpose of Congress. Certainly no interest can be harmed by taking away a jurisdiction for which no reason exists and which has been greatly abused in practice.

As a further illustration of the tendency and purpose of Congress to restrict the Federal jurisdiction, attention may be called to the fact of the increase in the amount in controversy required as a condition of Federal jurisdiction. Under the judiciary act of 1789 and also under the act of 1875 and down to the act of 1887–88, jurisdiction was conferred upon the Federal courts, either originally or by removal, only where the amount in controversy exceeded the sum or value of $500. By the act of 1887–88 the amount in controversy was required to be $2,000, exclusive of interests and costs, in order to confer jurisdiction on the Federal courts. Under the present judicial code (sec. 24) the amount in controversy was again raised and required to be the sum or value of $3,000 as a condition of Federal jurisdiction, even in cases presenting a Federal question as well as in cases dependent upon the citizenship of the parties.

CORPORATIONS AS CITIZENS FOR PURPOSES OF FEDERAL JURISDICTION.

The legal status of corporations as citizens for the purpose of Federal jurisdiction rests almost entirely upon judge-made law. It is, however, now perfectly well settled that corporations are citizens of the State under whose laws they are created. (Barrow Steamship Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S., 103.)

The Federal courts have jurisdiction, either originally or by removal, of suits between citizens of one State and a corporation created by the laws of another State. A foreign corporation sued by a citizen of a State in which it is doing business may, under the existing law and as a matter of right, remove the cause into a Federal court. The vast majority of removals in modern times are cases of this class.

The Federal jurisdiction over suits against a foreign corporation upon the ground of diverse citizenship rests entirely upon a legal fiction. It rests upon a conclusive presumption created by judicial decisions. Thus the Supreme Court said:

"The jurisdiction of the circuit courts over suits between a citizen of one State and a corporation of another State was at first maintained upon the theory that the persons composing the corporation were suing or being sued in its name, and upon the presumption of fact that all those persons were citizens of the State by which the corporation had been created, but that this presumption might be rebutted by plea and proof and the jurisdiction thereby defeated. (Bank v. Deveaux, 5 Cranch, 61, 87, 88; Insurance Co. v. Boardman, id., 57; Bank v. Slocomb, 14 Pet., 60.)

"But the earlier cases were afterwards overruled, and it has become the settled law of this court that, for the purposes of suing and being sued in the courts of the United States, a corporation created by and doing business in a State is, although an artificial person, to be considered as a citizen of the State as much as a natural person; and there is a conclusive presumption of law that the persons composing the corporation are citizens of same State with the corporation." (Barrow v. Kane, 170 U. S., 103.)

Thus it appears that a legal fiction and a judge-made conclusive presumption, which presumption in 9 cases out of 10 is not in accordance with the actual facts, is the sole basis upon which foreign corporations are permitted to remove their controversies with citizens of a State into which they have voluntarily come for the purpose of doing business from the courts of that State into a Federal court, with all the resulting expense, inconvenience, and hardship which frequently exists.

Further, as already shown under a previous head, this abuse is permitted without the excuse of any worthy purpose to be subserved. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to put an end to just this thing. It is open to very serious doubt whether the framers of the Constitution contemplated that corporations might sue and be sued in the Federal courts, or remove suits thereto from State courts merely by reason of the locality of their incorporations or the citizenship of their stockholders. In an early case this jurisdiction was expressly denied, the court saying:

"The Constitution takes no notice of corporate bodies in enumerating the cases in which this court shall exercise jurisdiction upon circumstances of the persons. A corporation can not with propriety be denominated a citizen of any State, so that the right to sue in this court, under the Constitution, can only be extended to corporate bodies by a liberality of construction which we do not feel ourselves at liberty to exercise. (Bank of United States v. Deveaux, 2 Fed. Cas., No. 916, p. 692.)

The foregoing decision was reversed by the Supreme Court in Fifth Cranch, page 61, and Chief Justice Marshall wrote the opinion. This reversal was upon the ground that the suit should be deemed the suit of the stockholders of the corporation litigating in the name of the corporation, and that there was a prima facie presumption that these stockholders were citizens of the State where the corporation was incorporated. This presumption could be overcome by proof that such was not the fact, thereby defeating the Federal jurisdiction. Chief Justice Marshall said:

"A corporation aggregate is certainly not a citizen, and consequently can not sue or be sued in the courts of the United States, unless the rights of the members in this respect can be exercised in their corporate name."

The doctrine sustained by Chief Justice Marshall was that Federal jurisdiction did not exist unless diversity of citizenship exists as between the defendant and all the members of the corporation, and in this sense it was for a time followed by the Federal courts. (Commercial Bank v. Slocomb, 14 Pet. (U. S.), 60.)

This doctrine was subsequently overruled, and the law now is that the members of a corporation suing in its corporate name are, for the purposes of jurisdiction, conclusively presumed to be citizens of the State which created it. (Louisville, etc., v. Letson, 2 How., 497; National Steamship Co. v. Tuckman, 106 U. S., 118; Barrow Steamship Co. v. Kane, 170 U. S., 100.)

There would seem to be no substantial ground for objection to the proposed amendment, which aims to put an end to a legal fiction which is seldom, if ever, in accord with the actual facts, and which has no vital, useful purpose, but, on the contrary, has been made the means of grave abuses, often amounting to a denial of justice.

It may be added that corporations are certainly not citizens within the meaning of the constitutional definition of citizens, which is as follows:

"All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside."

FOURTEENTH AMENDMENT, SECTION 1.

As an illustration of the abuse of the privilege of removal accorded to foreign corporations, I call attention to the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the case of Southern Realty Investment Co. v. Walker (211 U. S., 603). In this case a foreign corporation was created for the very purpose of conferring jurisdiction upon the Federal court in controversies between citizens of the same State. The Supreme Court looked through the corporate organization, held it to be a sham, and remanded the case to the State courts, although all corporate formalities had been observed.

ABUSE OF PRESENT REMOVAL PRIVILEGE.

Every lawyer knows that the removal of a cause results in more or less expense, delay, and inconvenience to the complainant. Oftentimes where the districts are large and the distances great the expense and inconvenience is practically prohibitive, especially to poor litigants. The abuses along this line are graphically set forth in an article in the Central Law Journal for March 24, 1911. (72 Central Law Journal, p. 218.)

So long as mere diversity of citizenship is an independent ground for removal and may be availed of as a matter of right, defendants will avail themselves of it for the purpose of securing delay and imposing burdens upon the complainant, thus discouraging and often preventing the prosecution of meritorious suits. Where the price of justice is too high it may be foregone.

Another great abuse of the privilege of removal lies in the fact that the law administered in the Federal courts is often different to the law administered in the State courts as applicable to the same state of facts. When a person or a corporation voluntarily comes into a State to do business there with its citizens, it should be subject to the laws of the State as declared by the courts of that State and be subject to the same laws as are the citizens of that State. The nonresident should not have an option, as he now has in many cases, to abide by the State law and litigate in the State courts if it is to his advantage to do so, or to remove his case and have a different rule applied by the Federal courts if that course is most advantageous to his position.

Of course, under the United States Revised Statutes, section 721, it is provided that—

"The laws of the several States * * * shall be regarded as rules of decision in trials at common law in the courts of the United States in cases where they apply."

In theory this is quite satisfactory as far as it goes, but in practice it does not mean nearly what it says. In applying State statutes and constitutional provisions the Federal courts will follow the latest decision of the highest State court. The decisions of inferior State courts are not binding upon the Federal courts. Until a State statute has been authoritatively construed by the highest State court the Federal court will exercise its own independent judgment as to its construction and constitutionality. Moreover, in many cases where the Federal courts have adopted a construction of State laws they will cling to their own interpretation, notwithstanding that a different interpretation may thereafter be adopted by the State courts.

In equity cases the principles of equity jurisprudence are administered by the Federal courts uniformly throughout all the States, wholly unaffected by State laws and decisions, and this equity jurisdiction can not be impaired by the laws of any State. Most important of all on questions of general jurisprudence as distinguished from matters of local law the Federal courts in the absence of express statutes exercise their own judgment, uncontrolled by the decisions of the State courts. The vast mass of litigated transactions falls under this head. (See article "United States courts," 22 Ency. of Pl. and Pr., pp. 324–336.)

The proposition that all persons doing business within a State should be subject to the laws of that State as enacted by the legislature of that State and construed by the courts of that State, except so far as such laws may deprive them of privileges secured to them by the Federal Constitution, does not seem open to doubt. That proposition, however, does not prevail to-day, and mainly because of the present removal privilege upon the ground of mere diversity of citizenship.

Mr. PERKY. As a practical illustration of the abuses at which this bill strikes, the United States court in Idaho holds its sessions at four points in the State—at Moscow and Coeur d'Alene, in northern Idaho; Boise, in southwestern Idaho; and Pocatello, in southeastern Idaho. A citizen of the State who thinks he has a meritorious cause of action seeks redress against some corporation organized under the laws of some sister State, which may have one or many places of business in the State, and practically all of whose stockholders may be residents of the State of Idaho. He files his suit in the ordinary way against his adversary, and if the amount in controversy is $3,000 or more, the corporation sued may remove the suit to the Federal court, which may sit 250 or more miles from the point where the plaintiff lives and where the controversy arose.

Under the practice and law of Idaho, as is the case in the majority of jurisdictions in the Union, the parties to the suit are obliged, when required by the witnesses, to advance fees and mileage. It often happens that litigants with cases entitling them to relief either advance these fees with great hardship or are in such circumstances as not to be able to do so at all. This often results in forced, unfair settlements, or the abandonment of suits, and often in the bringing of suits for amounts inadequate to compensate the plaintiff or redress his injuries, in order that the amount in controversy may be kept below the sum fixed by law permitting the removal of causes from State to Federal courts.

The law as it now stands fosters in many cases a partial or complete denial of justice, and thus tends to undermine society, to the extent that this practice of removal hampers our courts in the administration of their functions to redress wrongs.

The removal in most cases amounts to this, "that the nonresident gains not equality with but an advantage over his adversary."

Justice should be speedy. The method of securing redress should be as free and direct as orderly procedure will admit. The forum where it is administered should be convenient and easily accessible to litigants. This bill, I believe, is a long step in the right direction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1913.

(Report of delegates accompanies the message to the House of Representatives.)

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS (H. DOC. NO. 1340).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

By joint action of the Department of Commerce and Labor and the Treasury Department, committees of those two departments have recently made a careful investigation of the methods of preparing the statistics of the imports and exports of the United States.

These committees have unanimously recommended that the laws relating to the preparation of shippers' manifests be amended in such manner as to compel the preparation by exporters of accurate and complete lists in regard to merchandise sent out of the United States. Without such amended laws these committees deem that it is impossible for the customs officers to obtain with accuracy the figures of our export trade. The existing law regarding statistical returns of exports by sea was enacted in 1821, and, naturally, fails to meet conditions existing at the present time, when methods of communication and transportation, classes of articles entering international commerce, places of production of such articles, and the demands of business for information in reference thereto have greatly changed. A large proportion of the merchandise now being exported originates in the interior of the country and is of such character and variety that a proper description thereof can not be made at the port of exportation. It is recommended, therefore, that a measure be enacted which will remedy the unsatisfactory conditions in our export statistics.

This new measure should provide that persons forwarding merchandise from interior points for exportation shall supply to the transportation company receiving such merchandise a manifest similar in general form to that required at the port of exportation, which manifest shall be conveyed by the transportation company to the port of exportation and delivered to the collector of customs.

For any omission from or incorrect description of the merchandise in any manifest, whether originating in the interior or at the port of exportation, as to kind, quantity, or value, the owner, shipper, or consignor, or agent of either, should be made liable to a fine of $50, unless it be shown that such omission was due to a mere clerical error. If it be shown that the incorrect statement has been willfully or fraudulently made, the person responsible therefor should be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and rendered liable to fine or imprisonment.

The bill should also provide a penalty for the failure of the transportation company to procure from the exporter, at the original place of shipment, the manifest noted above, and likewise a penalty for failure to transmit it to the collector of customs at the port of exportation, or for failure to deliver it to any other transportation company to which it may deliver the merchandise en route, and the company so receiving should be also required under penalty to forward to the collector of customs the said manifest.

The bill should prohibit, under penalty for violation, the disclosure by any officer, employee, or other representative of a common carrier of any information regarding the kind, quantity, value, destination, or consignee of any of the merchandise carried by it for exportation and described in the manifest above referred to.

It is believed that a measure embodying these suggestions into law would fully meet the objections now offered to the proposition that interior shippers shall supply manifests of the goods forwarded for exportation. The chief objection has been that information regarding their business might be disclosed by employees of the common carriers transporting the merchandise and receiving statements as to its character, valuation, destination, and the consignee. The plan, if carried into effect, would, it is believed, protect the original exporter against disclosure of his business, give to the customs officers at the port of exportation sufficient information to enable them to properly describe and value the merchandise, and also assure much greater accuracy as to the true value of the merchandise being exported.

I suggest, as equally important, an amendment to section 4197 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, making the law conform to the present practice by which vessels are permitted to file a supplementary manifest within four business days after the clearance of the vessel, a practice without authority of law but sanctioned by the Customs Regulations (art. 128).

The provisions of section 4197 of the Revised Statutes requiring the master of the vessel to file a complete manifest of the cargo before a clearance is granted, a measure enacted before the utilization of steam power in ocean traffic and prior to the transaction of business with the aid of telegrams, cablegrams, and telephonic communications, can not be carried out under present methods of commercial transactions. To demand a strict compliance with the requirements of the statute in this particular would congest traffic, delay travel and the transportation of the foreign mails, paralyze business, and jeopardize our international commerce. It is found that there has been no enforcement of this part of the statute at the larger ports of the United States for upward of 30 years. It is believed that the law for the clearance of vessels and filing the cargo manifests should be in harmony with the law requiring the presentation of shippers' manifests. The amendment proposed to the law would be justified by many years' experience and careful consideration of this important subject. It would add no burdens to the duties of steamship companies. Instead, it would simplify the preparation of the manifest and legalize the present custom of filing supplementary manifests. It should fix the same penalty ($500) for failure to file a manifest and obtain a clearance for a vessel, and should provide a penalty of $50 for neglect of entering merchandise in the manifest. It should grant the same period for filing a supplementary manifest as the current practice under article 128 of the Customs Regulations.

The recommendations of this message have received the approval of the two departments whose work and functions will be most affected by them—the Treasury Department and the Department of Commerce and Labor.

If a bill or bills embodying the suggestions of this message would be useful to the Congress, or to any committees thereof considering the subject, they will be forwarded on request.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 4, 1913.

HUBON PLACE CEMETERY, KANSAS CITY, KANS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3952) for the purpose of repealing so much of an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indians located in Kansas City, Kans., providing for the sale of a tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855, said section of said act relating to the sale of said land be, and the same is hereby, repealed, which were, on page 2, line 2, after "six," strike out all down to and including "land" in line 7, and insert:

As reads as follows:

"That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and convey, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, the tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855. And authority is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of the Interior to provide for the removal of the remains of persons interred in said burial ground and their reinterment in the Wyandotte Cemetery at Quindaro, Kans., and to purchase and put in place appropriate monuments over the remains reinterred in the Quindaro Cemetery. And after the payment of the costs of such removal, as above specified, and the costs incident to the sale of said land, and also after the payment to any of the Wyandotte people, or their legal heirs, of claims for losses sustained by reason of the purchase of the alleged rights of the Wyandotte Tribe in a certain ferry named in said treaty, if, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, such claims or any of them are just and equitable, without regard to the statutes of limitation, the residue of the money derived from said sale shall be paid per capita to the members of the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians who were parties to said treaty, their heirs, or legal representatives."

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act repealing the provision of the Indian appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, authorizing the sale of a tract of land reserved for a burial ground for the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians in Kansas City, Kans."

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

CONNECTICUT RIVER DAM.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the entering of the order which I send to the desk. I will say, before it is read, that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], who objected to the unanimous-consent agreement of a similar character yesterday, told me this morning that he would consent to the date which I have now substituted, and it is at his suggestion that I send the order to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on Tuesday, February 11, 1913, immediately upon the conclusion of the routine morning business, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 8033, calendar No. 1001, authorizing the construction of a dam across the Connecticut River, and before adjournment on that legislative day will vote upon any amendment that may be pending, all amendments that may be offered, and upon the bill through regular parliamentary stages to its final disposition.

This agreement shall not interfere with appropriation bills or conference reports, nor with the memorial services on Saturday, February 15, nor the meeting of the two Houses of Congress on February 12.

Mr. GALLINGER. What about the present unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from New Hampshire now asks about the existing unanimous-consent agreement that is already upon the calendar. That will have expired before the time this one arrives.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is all right.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut if he would not put in an hour for voting, as was done in other cases, instead of "the legislative day"?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What did the Senator ask—that the vote be taken on the calendar day?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the calendar day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, there is objection to that.

Mr. LODGE. I see.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Senators want more opportunity to discuss the measure.

Mr. ROOT. With all these exceptions, I think it will be impossible to fix an hour.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think it would be impossible, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request for unanimous consent which has just been read from the desk?

Mr. JONES. I desire to ask if it is understood that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is to proceed to a discussion of the bill to-day?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is so understood by me, because the Senator from Ohio stated that he was going to make some remarks.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to know if this is a proceeding by unanimous consent? I have not heard unanimous consent given yet, but I have observed quite a number of interruptions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not been.

Mr. JONES. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he intends to proceed to discuss the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state for the information of the Senator from Arizona that it is the general practice of the Senate whenever unanimous consent is asked by general acquiescence for reasons pro and con to be given.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I understand that. I only want to learn the rules. I tried to make a parliamentary inquiry, and I am on the floor yet for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has not the floor, unless he rises to a point of order, except by consent of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am trying to learn these technical rules.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is not a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I want to see universal application of the rules, and when I understand them I will conform to them as best I can.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is not now rising to a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am rising to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. My point of order is that there is a debate proceeding without the request for unanimous consent having been objected to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an application for unanimous consent pending.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes, sir; but you have not ruled on that; no one has objected to unanimous consent; debate is proceeding, and it is necessary to have the unanimous consent that the debate should proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator object?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I think the Chair does not catch my point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the Senator's point of order?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The point of order is that we are proceeding out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arizona call the Senator from Washington to order?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I call Senators to order under the ruling of the Chair. Unanimous consent should be granted or not granted before anything can be said about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Very well. The Senator's point of order is sustained. The question is upon agreeing to the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, which has been read.

Mr. JONES. I want to ask the Senator from Ohio if he expects to proceed to a discussion of the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona objects to the Senator from Washington being heard.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington may be allowed to make a brief statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the Senator from Washington proceeding?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think that we are about to get into a situation here that will trouble us hereafter in a way which will embarrass us. It is part of the right to ask for unanimous consent that those who favor it and those who object to it may have a right to state the reasons for and against it. That is just as much a part of the request as any other feature of it, and I would not want to have it understood that every time anything of that kind occurred it had to be by unanimous consent and that the entire situation might be disturbed by a single objection.

I think the point of order raised by my friend from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] was not well taken. I think when the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] asked for unanimous consent that the very request involved a unanimous consent that the reasons for and against it might be given. I trust the ruling of the Chair will be such as will not put us at the mercy of a single Senator whenever a request for unanimous consent is made.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I certainly concur in that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona has entirely mistaken the situation. The difference between the case now under consideration by the Senate and the situation when he formerly addressed the Chair is that the Senator from Arizona then undertook to discuss the case on the merits when the question was whether a resolution should be taken up for consideration, which is a very different matter.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I desire to say to the Chair that I did not have reference to any particular transaction which had preceded this instance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the rule of the Senate is that upon a motion to proceed to the consideration of any matter it shall be decided without debate; but the Chair did state that it was the universal practice of the Senate, whenever a question was submitted as to whether or not unanimous consent should be granted, that there should be an interchange of opinion, not on the merits of the question, but upon the particular request for the unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Chair will pardon me, I was not attempting to address the Senate on the merits. I was asking for what I got and what you can always get from the Senator from New York. I was seeking information, so that I would know whether or not I would object. When I found that it was impossible for me even to ask a question, I wanted to know if that was to be the rule of the Senate.

I am aware of the difficulty in which, as the Senator from Arkansas suggests, we would be thrown if a request for unanimous consent had to be determined on the mere presentation of the matter without Senators having knowledge on the subject, and, therefore, not knowing whether to object or not. It was for that reason I asked for information. That was the attitude I was assuming before the Chair at that time. That is all I have to say about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not deem it proper for the Presiding Officer to enter into an argument with a Senator on the floor.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I merely want to put the matter into such attitude that the Senate can settle it, for I deem it a very material point. The Chair has made a ruling that when a request is made for unanimous consent nothing can be said concerning it except by another unanimous consent. I want to take an appeal from that ruling.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so rule. The Chair simply ruled that the objection of the Senator from Arizona was sufficient to prevent a discussion of the question. The Chair did suggest the fact, and repeats it, that the universal practice of the Senate, never before challenged within the knowledge of the Chair, has been for an exchange of views whenever an application for unanimous consent has been made.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That universal practice has become part of the rule; it is an interpretation of it. It is acted upon, and it is of itself a part of the rule that allows a Senator to ask for unanimous consent; and I think that we ought to maintain it as a part of the rule. I do not think that the right to explain the situation incident to a request for unanimous consent should only proceed by another unanimous consent; otherwise, we would never know why a unanimous-consent agreement is desirable; we would be compelled to vote in the dark, and it would defeat the very object that we have in making such requests.

If the Chair will permit me now to appeal from the ruling that he made on the point of order of the Senator from Arizona, I will enter that appeal. I think that we ought now to record the judgment of the Senate, that when a request is made for unanimous consent to fix a date to vote upon a certain proposition, for instance, the reasons why that consent should be given or withheld are within the request without an additional consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has stated that that has been the universal practice of the Senate.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then, the point of order raised by the Senator from Arizona was not well taken; and the Senator from Connecticut and the Senator from Washington had each the right to state why he thought that consent should be given or withheld without appealing to the Senate for unanimous consent to do so.

I only want one of our most valuable rules preserved, because if the ruling of the Chair, as I understand it—to be sure, I am not imputing to the Chair a meaning that he did not intend to convey—but if the ruling stands as made, when a request is hereafter made for unanimous consent, for instance, to fix a date to vote upon an important public measure, no Senator will be permitted to say a word if a single Senator objects to debate, and we will then be forced to vote in the dark or forced to dispose of a matter of very great concern without the benefit of the enlightening course of debate, as it takes place here. I want it understood—and I think it is the judgment of the Senate that it shall be understood—that when a request for unanimous consent is made, the right to make such explanatory remarks as relate to that particular question, but not to the merits of the main proposition, shall be allowed as a matter of course.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on the point of order that has been raised I think there can be no possible question that the universal practice has been as stated by the Chair. It is also obvious that it can only be a universal practice, because at this moment I have it in my power under the rules to put an end to the matter by demanding the regular order.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Or by objecting.

Mr. LODGE. Or by objecting. So that the Senate is entirely protected against requests for unanimous consent being used as a means for protracting or delaying business. The protection is absolute, but the practice, when a unanimous-consent agreement is asked for, is as the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] has stated. We can not possibly agree to a request for unanimous consent to fix a time in the future to take a vote, which affects all the business of the Senate, without understanding its purpose and effect. I do not mean by that that we should discuss the merits of the question, for that is a different thing; but we ought to know the surrounding circumstances, if the consent is to be granted; and if not to be granted, it can be cut off by one objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thinks the view presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] is the correct one, and, with the permission of the Senate, will withdraw the ruling. The Chair will state that the ruling was really made in the interest of time and to end discussion.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Then, we understand that the point of order raised by the Senator from Arizona is not well taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order is not well taken. The Chair repeats that the Chair so ruled in the interest of time.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Chair will bear with me in patience, I want to indicate to the Chair that I have no feeling in this matter whatever——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair of course so understands.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. My only desire was to ascertain whether this was to be the rule or not, for in another parliamentary body in which I have served the common statement is, "Reserving the right to object, I should like to inquire," and so forth, so that information may be had as to what is the request. I thought that practice prevailed here, and that was the reason I made the point of order. I had no object and no feeling other than that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The application of the Senator to address the Senate, reserving the right to object, was not made upon the question of granting a unanimous consent, but was made upon the question of present consideration of a proposed measure, which is an entirely different matter.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I simply want to inquire of the Senator from Ohio if he expects to proceed with the discussion of the bill to-day?

Mr. BURTON. In answer to the interrogatory of the Senator from Washington, I will state that it is my desire to proceed with some remarks on this bill immediately after the disposition of the request for unanimous consent—that is, if I have opportunity.

Mr. JONES. With that understanding, I shall make no objection to the request.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Do I understand that the morning business has been closed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Is there anything before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] has presented an application for unanimous consent. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request, which has been read from the desk? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

INTERSTATE SHIPMENT OF LIQUORS.

Mr. PAYNTER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that to-morrow, February 6, 1913, after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall address the Senate on the so-called Kenyon bill relative to interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors.

CONNECTICUT RIVER DAM.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 8033) to authorize the Connecticut River Co. to relocate and construct a dam across the Connecticut River above the village of Windsor Locks, in the State of Connecticut.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice given yesterday, I desire to address the Senate in favor of Senate bill 8033, Order of Business No. 1001.

There is much anxiety for the passage of this bill in the States of Massachusetts and Connecticut. It contemplates a public improvement which assumes national importance, relating to the development of navigation, and incidentally of water power, in the Connecticut River.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. BANKHEAD. There is so much confusion in the Chamber that we are unable to hear the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point is well taken. The Senate will please be in order. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BURTON. I am satisfied that there would be no objection to the bill in the Senate except for the opinion of certain Senators that it creates a precedent which may be embarrassing to them. It contains two or three clauses which, as they allege, establish a rule which operates as an infringement on the rights of States and individuals and is a departure from the settled policy of the Government.

I shall endeavor to show, on the contrary, that the precedent established will not be embarrassing; that the bill does not infringe upon the rights of States or individuals; and that, so far from being a departure from the established policy of the Government, it is in line with it and confirms a salutary method of improving the rivers of the country. I shall also endeavor to show that, even conceding all this, exceptional circumstances exist in this case which differentiate it from other propositions here pending.

It is desirable at the very outset to explain the purpose and provisions of the bill. It gives authority to the Connecticut River Co. to construct a dam in the Connecticut River above Hartford. The river is now navigable for a distance of 52 miles, or, speaking exactly, 51.9 miles, from its mouth at Saybrook, on Long Island Sound, to the city of Hartford. On this stretch of the river there has existed for many years a very considerable traffic. It amounted in the last year to 683,000 tons. The freight carried had a value of $23,000,000. There is a regular passenger line from Hartford to New York, and the route is utilized to a very considerable extent by barges for the carriage of freight from New York and other localities to points on the Connecticut River.

Above Hartford there are obstructions. The first 10½ miles could be improved with comparative ease. At that point there are rapids extending for 5½ miles, which under the existing state of improvement interpose an effective barrier to its practical navigation for commercial purposes, though a canal with a lock of small dimensions permits the passage of boats of small draft. The traffic, however, is negligible.

Beyond these rapids there is a stretch of 18 miles, extending 11 miles to the city of Springfield and the near-by city of Chicopee, and then 7 miles farther to Holyoke. So the section below Hartford is 52 miles in length, and that above Hartford is 34 miles in length, in the midst of which, however, these rapids are found.

It is a familiar fact to the Senate that the cities mentioned are busy industrial centers. It is probable that the traffic would be doubled if navigation could be extended from Hartford to Holyoke past Springfield and Chicopee.

There has been agitation on behalf of this improvement for many years. It assumed active form in the year 1898. Since then several surveys have been made by the engineers of the Government. The improvement has been found to be practicable, but the expense has seemed to be prohibitive, and whenever any one of these surveys has been presented Congress has refused to make the necessary appropriation. This bill seeks to accomplish, by the utilization of water power in coordination with navigation, that which the Government has declined to do as an independent proposition.

The original grant by the State of Connecticut to the Connecticut River Co. was made in the year 1824. I will read briefly from the charter, from which it will appear that the object was the promotion of navigation.

The charter of the Connecticut River Co., passed in May, 1824, provided:

Resolved by this assembly, That John T. Peters, David Porter, Charles Sigourney, with all such persons as are or may be associated with them for the purpose of improving the boat navigation of Connecticut River, and their successors, be, and they are hereby, incorporated and made a body politic, by the name of the Connecticut River Co.

That corporation is still in existence, and under this authority constructed the lock and dam to which I have referred. The present proportions of both lock and dam and canal are so small, however, as to be utterly inadequate to satisfy modern demands for traffic. The use of water power by this company was altogether incidental, and not until the year 1909 was any authority given to develop hydroelectric power in connection with their works, though prior to that time they had sold the use of surplus water.

I may further say that during the life of this present Congress bills were introduced in the Senate both for the Connecticut River Co. and for another corporation known as the Northern Connecticut Power Co., seeking to accomplish practically the same object as the bill under consideration. Those bills were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and by its chairman referred to a subcommittee. The subcommittee held numerous hearings, giving careful consideration to them, and concluded that so long as these two corporations were at odds it was useless to grant any franchise. They have now come to an agreement, which agreement, however, lasts only until March 4, 1913. That fact impresses upon us the desirability, and in fact the necessity, of early action on this bill.

I will now review briefly the pending bill. It is entitled:

A bill to authorize the Connecticut River Co. to relocate and construct a dam across the Connecticut River above the village of Windsor Locks, in the State of Connecticut.

I may state, before going into the bill in detail, that it follows, in its general provisions, the so-called dam act of 1906, as amended in 1910.

The first section grants to the licensee the right to construct, maintain, and operate a relocated dam of larger size than the present one. There are three provisions in the first section which are not contained in the general dam act.

In the first place, the time for completing the dam may be extended by the Secretary of War, for good cause shown, for two years beyond the time prescribed in the general act. This is thought proper in view of the magnitude of the work. The general dam act authorizes the licensee to enjoy the privilege granted provided he shall begin work within one year and complete it within three years.

The second provision is found in lines 15 to 18 of page 2 of the bill, a provision that the rights and privileges granted—

May not be assigned except upon the written authorization of the Secretary of War, or in pursuance of the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.

Mr. President and Senators, I maintain that a condition of that kind is absolutely necessary to prevent monopoly in this very valuable asset of the Nation. Already there has been a very considerable degree of consolidation. The head of the Bureau of Corporations made a report some time since, in which he showed this tendency to concentration in the hands of a limited number of corporations, and that under this tendency a very large share of the water power of the country was falling under the control of certain corporations which have been alert and active in seeking to gain for themselves this very valuable privilege.

The third clause in which there is matter not included in the general dam act is found in lines 13 to 25 of the second page of the bill, and in lines 1 to 8 of page 3.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the proviso just read by him would in any manner affect or prevent the assignment of the shares of stock of this company, or a majority of the shares of its stock, to some competing or other concern or individual?

Mr. BURTON. I presume not, Mr. President. As the Senator from Colorado will realize, we can adopt only regulations which will have a certain protective influence. Thus far in our legislation we have been content to place restrictions upon assignment to another organization. In time there may be a necessity, and, in fact, that necessity may exist now, to prevent common ownership. That was recommended in the report of the National Monetary Commission, in which there were very careful restrictions on common ownership of the stock of banks which should hold stock in the National Reserve Association.

The second portion of this bill, which is outside of the general dam act, reads as follows:

And provided further, That the Secretary of War, as a part of the conditions and stipulations referred to in said act, may, in his discretion, impose a reasonable annual charge or return, to be paid by the said corporation or its assigns to the United States, the proceeds thereof to be used for the development of navigation on the Connecticut River and the waters connected therewith. In fixing such charge, if any, the Secretary of War shall take into consideration the existing rights and property of said corporation and the amounts spent and required to be spent by it in improving the navigation of said river, and no charge shall be imposed which shall be such as to deprive the said corporation of a reasonable return on the fair value of such dam and appurtenant works and property, allowing for the cost of construction, maintenance, and renewal, and for depreciation charges.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BURTON. In just a moment.

It will be noted that this provision grants to the Secretary of War the right and the duty in certain cases to impose a charge to be deducted from the proceeds of the water power, the amount realized from that charge to be applied toward the improvement of the river and the waters connected therewith.

I now yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is the exact point upon which I desired to interrogate the Senator. I understand from the public press that at least a tentative contract—an agreement upon which a contract shall be based—has been already entered into between the Secretary of War and this company. I will ask the Senator if he can furnish for the information of the Senate a copy of that contract which is proposed to be entered into under the terms of this section of the bill?

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I know of no such contract. I know of nothing outside the terms of this provision that is here before us. If it is in existence, I am entirely unaware of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If it does not disturb the Senator from Ohio, I think there is one very important question involved here which should be understood now before he proceeds further with his discussion, and that is whether the Connecticut River Co. owns the site where this dam is proposed to be built or whether it is the property of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BURTON. I will come to that fully in a moment.

Section 2 of the bill contains a provision pertaining to location and provides for navigation. It will be seen that all through this bill the paramount object to be obtained is navigation. For instance, the officials of the Government have the right to control the flow of water. This section contains a provision to the effect that a certain quantity must at all times be allowed to pass by the dam. There is a provision for the height of the dam under which interference with rights acquired above this locality is prevented.

In answer to the question of the Senator from Alabama I will now take up section 4. It provides:

SEC. 4. That compensation shall be made by the said Connecticut River Co. to all persons or corporations whose lands or other property may be taken, overflowed, or otherwise damaged by the construction, maintenance, and operation of the said dam, lock, and appurtenant and accessory works, in accordance with the laws of the State where such lands or other property may be situated; but the United States shall not be held to have incurred any liability for such damages by the passage of this act.

Thus it will be seen, in answer to the question of the Senator from Alabama, that a most comprehensive provision is made that all private rights shall be acquired by this company, and that it shall be done without the United States incurring any obligation. It should be stated further in this connection that the licensee or grantee under this bill already owns a considerable share of the land abutting on the river at this point, though more land would have to be acquired.

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator has touched a question that is very interesting to me and which is somewhat agitated in my own State now. I suppose the Senator would not insist that the Government of the United States could give to the Connecticut River Dam Co. or Bridge Co., whatever it may be, the right of eminent domain in the State of Connecticut?

Mr. BURTON. The Government of the United States, by statute of Congress, has done something quite similar to that. Congress has passed an act providing that where land must be utilized for a Government work or is needed by the Government in connection with that work the district attorney in that locality, at the direction of the Secretary of War, may proceed to condemn it on proper indemnity being given to the Government against loss.

Mr. CUMMINS. I simply wanted to know whether the Senator from Ohio was of the opinion that Congress would give to a private company engaged in building a dam, even though it improved navigation, the right to take property in one of the States without the assent of the State.

Mr. BURTON. Such right could be by Congress if the property is to be used for a Federal purpose. Laws have been enacted with this object in view. In the case referred to the action would probably have to be by the Government on the initiative of the private company.

Mr. BORAH. And that for a specific and limited purpose, not by the general right of eminent domain to condemn.

Mr. BURTON. For Federal purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I wanted to get it clear as the Senator went along. Assuming the primary purpose of the grant is to create power which is to be sold for private profit, can the Government give such a company the right to go into the State and condemn private property as for public use?

Mr. BURTON. As I have already stated, the principal object of this bill, if any action is taken under it, is for the development of navigation. The water power is incidental to that object.

Mr. CUMMINS. May I ask the Senator from Ohio whether, assuming that is true, assuming that the motive, if you please, on the part of Senators who would vote for this bill, is to improve navigation, but assuming also that it is a private company, the chief purpose of which, so far as the company is concerned, is to create power for sale, could Congress in any way give to that company the right to condemn land in the State of Connecticut?

Mr. BURTON. Not for the creation of water power pure and simple, but that is not the case which is presented here. It is an improvement of navigation. The company takes the place of the Government in the improvement of navigation. The company already has the right to develop navigation, and such water power as it develops is incidental to it.

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, my whole question leads up to this inquiry. Will the assent of the State be required before the proposition can be put into practical operation?

Mr. BURTON. I should question whether it would, under the statute passed, I believe, in 1906, although I have not recently examined it. I do not think, however, that question would be of much practical importance in this particular case, because the corporation already has its charter and has its right to proceed under it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know that it will be important in this case, but it will be important in a great many cases. It is very important in my own State at the present moment, where a private company is endeavoring to condemn the land of a private owner for the purpose of building a dam or for the purpose of being permitted to overflow lowlands. As I understand it, that company has never asked for any such power from the State of Iowa; it has never asked the consent of that State to exercise the privileges of eminent domain; and I was very anxious to get the exact view of the Senator from Ohio, who has been a deep student of the subject, because I think it is going to be a very important inquiry before very long.

Mr. BURTON. I will state to the Senator from Iowa that a case is reported in the Federal Reporter, volume 32, page 9, Stockton, Attorney General of New Jersey, against The Baltimore & New York Railroad Co. and others, in which that question is, I think, discussed very fully, as well as a number of other questions, particularly the ownership of the land under water, the right of the State to compensation, and the right of the State to prohibit the construction of the bridge. All those questions are there discussed. I do not think it best to go apart from the discussion I am now pursuing to enter at this time upon that phase of a subject somewhat related, but which I do not think is immediately involved.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I would suggest to the Senator from Iowa that inasmuch as the National Government has sovereign power over interstate commerce and over navigation as a part of that commerce, and has the power to construct a dam in a river for the purpose of promoting that commerce, it has also the sovereign power to condemn without the consent of a State the land that is necessary for that structure; and that, if as an aid of such an enterprise, water power is developed, the sale of which would probably come within the control of the State, that fact would not in any way affect the right of the Nation as a sovereign to condemn such property to public use.

Mr. BURTON. I shall go into that subject quite fully, Mr. President.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not express an opinion; I am simply a listener in this debate, and I was very anxious to know the view of the Senator from Ohio. I am glad now to know the view of the Senator from Nevada upon the subject. Of course, I have an opinion, which I will express later.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the query of the Senator from Iowa to be whether this power could be transferred or delegated by the General Government to a private corporation having a contract to construct a public work, which is an entirely different proposition from that suggested by the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CUMMINS. My inquiry was, When permission is granted to a private corporation that intended to build a dam, the chief purpose of which, so far as the corporation is concerned, was to furnish power to sell, whether the General Government could without the assent or action of the State give to such a corporation the right to enter the State and take lands under the principle of eminent domain?

Mr. THOMAS. That was my understanding of the Senator's question.

Mr. BURTON. Let me answer again in a word: The General Government can delegate to a private corporation the right to condemn land for the improvement of navigation, and neither Congress nor the courts would carefully scrutinize the dividing line between navigation and water power, though the fundamental reason must be the development of navigation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But is not the true reason because the Government constitutes the private corporation, its agent for that improvement, and it is not strictly a delegation of power?

Mr. BANKHEAD. I dislike very much to interrupt the Senator further, but there is one phase of this question to which I wish to call his attention, and I want him to elaborate it before he gets through. I should like to ask the Senator if he believes the Government of the United States can go into any State of the Union and condemn a site for any purpose except for navigation?

Mr. BURTON. That is a question which, if I were to answer yes or no, I would say no, in so far as the question relates to the development of navigable streams.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If they have no right to condemn it for any purpose except for navigation, then have they any right to dispose of an incident or a by-product that will result from that improvement?

Mr. BURTON. Most decidedly they have.

Mr. BANKHEAD. On that there is a difference of opinion. I think I will be able to show the Senate that they have not, according to all the decisions of all the courts which have passed upon that question.

Mr. BURTON. Indeed, I am rather surprised, Mr. President, that that question should be raised, for it is fundamental. I will come to it very soon.

Section 3 imposes the obligation on the company to—build coincidentally with the construction of the said dam and appurtenances, at a location to be provided by said corporation and approved by the Secretary of War, and in accordance with plans approved by the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, a lock of such kind and size, and with such equipment and appurtenances as shall conveniently and safely accommodate the present and prospective commerce of the river, and when the said lock and appurtenances shall have been completed the said corporation shall convey the same to the United States, free of cost, together with title to such land as may be required for approaches to said lock and such land as may be necessary to the United States for the maintenance and operation thereof, and the United States shall maintain and operate the said lock and appurtenances for the benefit of navigation, and the said corporation shall furnish to the United States, free of charge, water power, or power generated from water power, for operating and lighting the said constructions; and no tolls or charges of any kind shall be imposed or collected for the passage of any boat through the said lock or through any of the locks or canal of said corporation.

Section 5 is also new. It provides that the franchise shall continue 50 years, and at the expiration of that time the Federal Government may either take over the property itself or authorize the transfer of the franchise and property to another than the original licensee. In this respect the bill differs materially from existing legislation on the subject. I think I can prove to the satisfaction of Senators that some clause providing for compensation at the end of 50 years is altogether necessary. Three or four forms of franchise have been suggested, one a perpetual franchise. That, of course, is what the licensee would prefer, but in view of the possible development of water power, such a franchise is out of the question. We should be failing in our duty if we granted anything of the kind.

Another form of franchise is the so-called indeterminate one, in which no period is fixed. That kind of a grant is sometimes expressed as one giving rights during good behavior. The corporations seem to prefer that form of grant rather than one fixing a specific period, but there is such a degree of uncertainty attaching to it that it does not seem to be desirable. There is one practical objection to that class of franchises which is particularly potent in our cities. It constantly keeps the holders of the franchise in politics. They are seeking to elect men to the city council and to public office who will be favorable to their corporation and the rights under it. On the other hand, an indeterminate franchise is not without substantial dangers to those who possess them. In some wave of feeling officials may be elected who will endeavor to confiscate the rights granted under it.

We now come to the question between the 50 years without any provision as to the disposition of the property at the end of the time and 50 years with a provision for compensation.

It is evident that if the right be given for but 50 years, at the end of that period the utmost right which the licensee would have would be for the removal of his structures, and even that right is very doubtful. In such a case as this those structures are essential for navigation; they form part of a general plan for the navigation of the river, and if they can be removed navigation must fail.

But from the standpoint of the public there is another and more vital objection to a franchise which expires in 50 years, with no provision for renewal. A very large expense must be incurred in the construction of the dam, the lock, and appurtenances. If at the end of 50 years the licensee has no right in the structures erected and maintained, he would be compelled to establish a sinking fund to pay off the cost of those structures. That expense is usually represented by bonds, and the cost of creating a sinking fund to pay off the principal and interest of such bonds during the life of the franchise will be imposed upon the consumers. No public service commission could deny that right in case it were required to fix the charges; it would not be just to ignore the situation, and a court in reviewing an order of the commission would take into account the necessity for providing such a fund in fixing the rates. On the other hand, if provision is made for compensation at the end of 50 years, in a case of assignment of the franchise to another, or its assumption by the Government, the consumer is relieved from that very material expense.

It is also provided here that a bonus—I hardly like to call it a bonus—of 10 per cent may be paid. That will be within the authority of Congress. The language of the clause is:

Allowance being made for deterioration, if any, of the existing structures in estimating such efficiency, together with the fair value of other properties herein defined—

That is, the dam, the lock, the transmission lines, and the generating apparatus—to which not more than 10 per cent may be added to compensate for the expenditure of initial cost and experimentation charges and other proper expenditures in the cost of the plant which may not be represented in the replacement valuation herein provided.

In the provision for compensation great care is taken so that the licensee may claim nothing for the franchise value. It is merely for the value of the property on the basis of what it would cost to reproduce it at the time. The licensee then could not claim that he had a right to bring forward a long list of expenditures for equipment that was obsolete. Oftentimes in a progressive establishment structures are built and machinery is installed which in a short time have to be thrown upon the scrap heap. No claim for any expenditures of that nature could be made under this provision; it must be for the cost of replacing structures and in accordance with their value at the end of the time.

Mr. President, I have now pointed out the differences between this bill and existing legislation. The following statement is made in the minority report, page 21 of the document which is before us:

A majority of the committee in their report say:
"It appears to be a settled question that the Federal Government may impose a charge for the use of the surplus water not needed for navigation."

Then the minority report says:

We, the minority, deny that this question has been settled, and we challenge the majority to point to a single law on the statute books, or to a report of a single committee in Congress, or to a single decision of the Supreme Court which tends to establish their contention.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that is rather an extraordinary statement. It is refuted by an exceptional array of reports of committees, acts of Congress, acts of various officials of the Government, and by decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I wish, in the first place, to call attention to the so-called Nelson report, made from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. It is found on page 96 of the very document that has been prepared in relation to this bill.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator kindly indicate the title of that document?

Mr. BURTON. That document is entitled "Federal Control of Water Power"; papers submitted to the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate. It comes from the printer for the use of the Committee on Commerce. It comes with no number. On page 96 of this report the following statement is made:

If for the purpose of improving the navigability of a stream carrying interstate commerce the Federal Government constructs and maintains a dam, with locks and gates, the Government has the undoubted right to establish and maintain, in connection with such dam, an electric-power plant for the purpose of furnishing motive power to operate such locks and gates. And the Federal Government has the right to sell, lease, or rent, for compensation, any surplus power that may arise from and be an incident to such an improvement of navigation. (Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co., 142 U. S., 254.)

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course the Senator does not cite that as the report of a committee.

Mr. BURTON. I had understood that it was.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; the Judiciary Committee has never made a report on this question. On the contrary, this is the individual view of a single member of the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURTON. I stand corrected in that particular, then; I had supposed that the Judiciary Committee having had it under consideration a very long time, and having been asked by Congress or by the Senate to report on the subject, the request of the Senate found its compliance in this very able report.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Not at all. The Judiciary Committee was, in fact, engaged for a long while upon this question and never arrived at a committee determination.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming how long they were on that question?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, I can not say how long, but we consumed a good many meetings in the discussion of it in an endeavor to embrace the entire country, starting on the Atlantic coast and, I believe, getting as far as the Hudson River. This is the report or at least the individual view of a single member of the subcommittee, I think.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. NELSON. I will state that this is the report——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield, and to whom?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. I will state it is the report of the subcommittee, consisting of the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], and myself, to the full committee.

Mr. BURTON. I can only say in deference to those gentlemen that while it may not be the report of the committee, it certainly will carry very great weight from three very eminent men.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It would be a very valuable legal opinion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was about to observe that it appears on page 85 of the document to which the Senator has just referred, and that it purports to be the "Views of Senator NELSON on Senate resolution 44, Sixty-second Congress, second session." That was the resolution introduced by the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], requesting the views of the Judiciary Committee on these questions.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to remind the Senator from Ohio that the case he cited here is not parallel to this one at all. The question of the Senator from Minnesota was as to where the Government itself was the riparian owner, where it owned the site itself, built the dam, and expended all of its own money in constructing the dam and preparation for navigation.

Mr. BURTON. While the Senator from Alabama is on his feet, I will read another quotation, two pages later, from that report.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want the Senator to answer my present inquiry before he reads the extract.

Mr. BURTON. I will read; and it is an answer to your interrogatory.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Very well.

Mr. BURTON. It reads:

Responding to the second interrogatory, we are of the opinion, divorcing the question from riparian rights, that the Federal Government, in authorizing the construction and maintenance of a dam on a navigable stream by States, municipalities, or private parties, for the chief and primary purpose of improving the navigation of the stream, has the same right to prescribe the terms and compensation for the use of the surplus power, created as an incident to the main improvement, as the Government would have in case it had itself built the dam or made the improvement, and that the Government, having delegated the power of building such dam to private parties, might well confer upon them as compensation for the work thus undertaken the right to do what the Government itself could do in case it had itself constructed the work.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senator from Ohio from what he reads?

Mr. BURTON. This is the same report, and I read from page 98.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I know it is the same report, but from whom does the Senator quote?

Mr. BURTON. From Senator NELSON'S views.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I thought the Senator was quoting from the Secretary of War.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio is not able to draw the proper conclusion from those two statements. In the one case, where the Government for the purpose of improving navigation constructs a dam and water power, that being the main purpose, though incidentally there is power created in connection with it, the Government, according to my opinion, has the right to charge compensation; but where the Government says to a private corporation, "We will give you permission"—and the permission only amounts to this, that we will consider the structure is not an impediment to navigation—where the Government says, "We will give you permission; we will put you in our place; you may build a dam with your own money if you will build it as prescribed by the Board of Engineers," in that case compensation for the use of the power belongs to the company that has put its money into the work, whereas in the other case it belongs to the Federal Government, which has invested its money. It is exactly the same principle; the Government or the company that invests the money and makes the structure is entitled to the compensation.

Of course, when you come to compensation that a private company may exact, you are confronted by the question as to the rights of the State in the premises and the rights of the other riparian owners, which is a question divorced from this general proposition.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, let us see the position that the Senator from Minnesota takes. He says that the Government can authorize a private corporation to build a dam, and that dam shall be the property of the Government, the lock in connection with it shall be the property of the Government.

Mr. NELSON. Oh, no; I did not say that. I did not say that either the dam or the lock should be the property of the Government.

Mr. BURTON. It does not make any difference whether the Government has the ownership or merely the use for navigation. The Senator from Minnesota and every Senator who signed the minority report here agreed to the provisions in this bill—provisions that have been carried on the general dam act for years and included in a number of bills which Congress has passed. What are those conditions? That the Government——

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I would like to proceed with my answer on this proposition. The minority concede that the Government may insist that the private corporation build the dam; it may insist that the private corporation build a lock, which has nothing whatever to do with the development of power, but is only for navigation; it may insist that it shall equip that lock and dam for navigation; it may insist that for all time power shall be furnished for the operation of that lock so that boats shall go through—all these are compensations for the right. But when it is asked that the company shall also pay a compensation, the minority say that can not be done. After having compelled the expenditure of some millions for the dam, half a million for the lock, after imposing on them the obligation for the maintenance of power, after having swallowed a camel, in fact three or four camels, you then strain at a gnat, and say you can not impose upon them the obligation to pay anything by way of rental when they have already agreed to expend millions for the privilege. As regards the few dollars that the company must pay from proceeds when the works are finished you come in here and say, "There you have got to jump off; you can not go any farther."

Mr. NELSON and Mr. BRANDEGEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To whom does the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BURTON. I yield, first, to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. There is no compulsion on the parties who desire to construct a dam and create a water power on a reach of a river that is not navigable. They could go to work under State law and construct that dam. In the olden times, when we had merely the country sawmill and the ordinary flour mill, hundreds of dams were constructed throughout the country in connection with them, and the Federal Government never thought of interfering.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; and in this particular instance——

Mr. NELSON. In these later days, when the construction of dams leads to the development of electrical power, it involves the employment of large capital. Bonds have to be issued to obtain money to build dams on a vast scale, and the men who furnish the capital say, "We want you to go to the Federal Government to get a license."

What is it the Federal Government grants in this case? It says to these owners, "If you construct this dam as we require, with locks and gates, and operate it for the ends of navigation, we will not consider it as an obstruction to commerce and navigation." That is all that license amounts to. The Federal Government does not create any other power, and the Federal Government does not compel these parties to build the dam. They come here and get that license, a license which, in effect, is that if they do so and so, if they build the dam in this manner, we will not consider it an impediment to navigation.

Mr. BURTON. It seems to me the Senator from Minnesota goes far astray from the nature of the transaction. The parties choose to come to the Federal Government for the permission. It is useless to say that they could go to the State of Connecticut and get this permission. This act, while the locus is in Connecticut, is of far more importance to Massachusetts than it is to Connecticut. What is it that is imposed upon the company? Certain conditions under which they enjoy that privilege. What is the theory of it? That the Government, as a requisite for the right to locate there at all, imposes certain obligations upon them—charge for the use of the water. If we tell them, "Instead of paying us the money for it you can build a dam if you will, and you may build the locks," those are all of them conditions under which they go in there and take possession. In principle there is no difference whatever between an annual license and the expenditure of a vastly larger amount of money, which is necessary for placing those structures there and making the stream navigable.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. One at a time. I will first yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to emphasize, if I might, the point which I think the Senator from Ohio alluded to, that in this particular bill the payment by the company of money is simply in effect a payment to the Government as trustee, and must be used for the improvement of navigation in that very river, hence it is just as properly a part of the condition under which the license is granted as the construction of the lock itself.

Mr. BURTON. Certainly. I am coming to that later, to show the difference.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Sentor from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Suppose that instead of providing that this fund to be raised was to be used for the improvement of the Connecticut River the proviso was that it should be used for the improvement of the Hudson River, would that be an exercise of a power that belongs to the Federal Government?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is the Senator from Colorado asking me that question?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. If the purpose of this bill is within that power, why, then, can not the fund be also diverted to the Hudson River or to some other river in some other State?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It could not, certainly, under the terms of this bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not speaking about that, but about the extent of the power if we admit it for any purpose.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I understand the Senator's question; and I will say I do not believe anybody can certainly answer the question. It has occurred to me that it might be constitutional for the Government, in the issuing of these permits, to provide, for instance, for a national fund, into which these payments should go, to be used in the interest of navigation. If we have jurisdiction of navigation under the commerce clause of the Constitution, what the Supreme Court would say about the legality of such a law, such a policy, I am not prepared to state, but I think clearly in this case, where it is confined to a particular river and made a condition of a particular improvement, it would be valid.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, my purpose in rising was to inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether the right which he claims the Government has in a matter of this kind and whether the report made by the Senator from Minnesota, from which he read an extract, does not necessarily involve as a condition of its existence the ownership by the Government either of the waters of the stream or of the force which is created by gravity in the improvement of the water?

Mr. BURTON. Not at all. I shall dwell on that subject somewhat later in the course of my argument.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to hear the Senator discuss that question.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, the Senator may have gotten away from the point to which I desired to call attention——

Mr. BURTON. If I have, we will try to get back to it.

Mr. JONES. The Senator read an extract from the views of the Senator from Minnesota to sustain his proposition that the Government would have the right to make a charge for the surplus water power when the dam was constructed by private parties. If he had read just a few sentences further, he would have seen the views of the Senator from Minnesota with reference to what that charge should be and for what it should be made. I desire to read that.

Mr. ROOT. What page?

Mr. JONES. Page 98.

Mr. BURTON. Before the Senator from Washington reads that, I want to call his attention to the fact that he is likely to fall into error there.

Mr. JONES. I want this in the RECORD in connection with what the Senator read from the report of the Senator from Minnesota, because I am afraid that his hearers may be led into an error from what he read——

Mr. BURTON. Not at all.

Mr. JONES. If they do not hear what he failed to read. Now I will read it:

> And in such case the Government would be authorized to charge a nominal license fee for inspecting and passing upon the plans and for watching over the work to see that it conforms to the plans and is properly maintained; but the regulative power of the Government would not extend to the use of the water for other purposes than navigation and interstate commerce. In such a case it seems to us that the Federal Government has no water power to sell or charge compensation for, for it is only authorized by the Constitution to regulate interstate and foreign commerce, which in this case means navigation.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Washington left out a part of that paragraph that would change the sense as much as leaving out the word "not" in one of the Ten Commandments. He has left out this—the first portion of it pertains to navigable streams—then he goes on to say—and I will read what the Senator from Washington has omitted——

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that he connect it with what he previously read.

Mr. BURTON. I will begin just where I left off.

Mr. NEWLANDS. On what page?

Mr. BURTON. Page 98. I have already read in the hearing of the Senate the portion which pertains to the improvement of navigable streams for the purpose of navigation with water power incidentally created.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator contend that what I read does not relate to navigable streams?

Mr. BURTON. I will read it. That is the best way to answer that question.

Mr. JONES. Very well.

Mr. BURTON. It is as follows:

> In this connection, and as a further response to the interrogatory, it must be noted that the mere grant by the Federal Government of authority to construct a dam in a navigable river, not for purposes of navigation, but really for the creation of a water power, is merely a license or permit, the effect of which is that if the dam is constructed and operated conformable to plans approved by the Government, it will not be deemed an obstruction or impediment to navigation.

I want to say to the Senator from Washington it is perfectly plain that the first portion of the paragraph pertains to an improvement for the purpose of navigation where water power is incidental, and the latter portion, in the distinctest language—and that is the sentence the Senator from Washington omitted—says:

> Authority to construct a dam in a navigable river, not for purposes of navigation, but really for the creation of water power—

And so forth.

Mr. JONES. Well, Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Of course I can see where there may be a difference of opinion with reference to the purposes of this bill, but the main purpose of this bill is not to aid navigation. The primary purpose is to develop water power. The grantee in this case is not getting this grant for the purpose of aiding navigation but is getting it for the purpose of building and constructing water power for private purposes. It has to get permission of the Government to operate in a navigable stream, and so it is proper that the Government should put in this bill the necessary restrictions and provisions for the protection of navigation. The purpose, however, of this company is not to promote navigation but to develop water power.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. I want to suggest to the Senator from Washington that there may be two purposes in this bill.

Mr. JONES. Oh, there are more than two.

Mr. ROOT. There may be a purpose of the company and there may be a purpose of the Government of the United States. The purpose of the Government of the United States may be to utilize the willingness of this company to construct this dam in order that the navigation of the Connecticut River may be improved.

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. And the provisions upon which the contest as to the propriety and validity of this measure depend are provisions which relate to carrying out the purposes of the Government in respect of navigation.

Mr. JONES. There is not any doubt in my mind that the language used by the Senator from Minnesota in the report just quoted applies to the case that we have before the Senate now. I do not think there is any question about that at all.

Mr. BURTON. I must most materially differ with the Senator from Washington in regard to that. The reading of the whole paragraph will not enable anyone to come to that conclusion.

Mr. JONES. I am satisfied that the Senator from Minnesota would claim that that was the thought he had in mind when he used that language; and the case was exactly on all fours with the one we have before the Senate now.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he understands that the power that is to be developed by the construction of this dam is for private use or whether it will become a public use?

Mr. BURTON. Well, there is no specification in regard to that.

Mr. WORKS. That is a very important matter to be considered.

Mr. BURTON. Does the Senator from California mean whether it is to be used for lighting or some public utility in some of the cities around or whether it is for power used for factories?

Mr. WORKS. I mean whether it is developed for the purpose of sale to others.

Mr. BURTON. It is so developed.

Mr. WORKS. If that be so, Mr. President, every additional burden that is placed upon the development of the water power must be paid ultimately by the consumer. In determining what rate shall be paid—and those rates certainly must be fixed by the State, and not by the National Government—the amount necessarily paid out by the corporation must be taken into account in determining the rate to be paid. In other words, if $100,000 is exacted by the Government for the use of this privilege, that is a part of the amount necessarily invested by the corporation, and the consumers must pay, in the first instance, interest upon that charge. That is a direct interference with the right of the State to control the water rights, and that is just what the people out in the West desire to avoid. I do not know how it may be in other States; water may be cheaper elsewhere than it is in California; but in southern California the item of cost of water for irrigation is a very important one, and we are not willing to see a policy established that will compel our people to pay an additional amount for the use of the water.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, we can not afford to blind our eyes to the fact that there are two interests represented here. One is the Federal Government, which must at great cost improve, and has at great cost improved, this river. It must incur expense in the future. The consumer also has his rights; but those rights are subject to the paramount authority of the Federal Government to maintain navigation in that river. The Senator from California virtually says if there is a facility or natural resource to be utilized anywhere, the consumers or the persons in the locality must have the full benefit of it. I want to answer that a little further on. But is it true that this proposed charge falls on the consumer? Theoretically that may be so; but the charge would not materialize until the consumer had had every opportunity to secure his rights. Under what circumstances would this charge be made? This company would erect its works—its generating apparatus, its transmission lines, and so forth—and then would come the State of Connecticut and fix the price that the company shall charge to the consumers. After that is done and the plant is in operation, it would be the right of the Government to impose or not impose a charge, as conditions might warrant. In this connection the bill provides:

> In fixing such charge, if any, the Secretary of War shall take into consideration the existing rights and property of said corporation and the amounts spent and required to be spent by it in improving the navigation of said river, and no charge shall be imposed which shall be such as to deprive the said corporation of a reasonable return on the fair value of such dam and appurtenant works and property, allowing for the cost of construction, maintenance and renewal, and for depreciation charges.

It would come into operation as a check on exorbitant profits, not to be imposed until the rights of the consumer, the rights of the company, and the rights of the general public are fully protected.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio is confusing the matter of the protection of navigation with the right to the use of the water itself, and the right on the part of the State to control that use. It may be——

Mr. BURTON. In due time I will come to that. Let me ask the Senator from California what rights do the States have? What right has the State of Connecticut in this case?

Mr. WORKS. I do not know anything about what the law may be in the State of Connecticut; I am not dealing with Connecticut, but with the State of California.

Mr. BURTON. In the State of the Senator from California water belongs to the State in a very different sense from what it does here.

Mr. WORKS. I do not know why it should be in any different sense.

Mr. BURTON. You do not have the same in regard to water in California, do you?

Mr. ROOT. You have a different system of laws there.

Mr. WORKS. Certainly; the system of laws is different, but the principle is precisely the same. The right to use the water belongs to the State in the first instance. Of course the old doctrine of riparian rights may exist, and probably does exist, in Connecticut. The riparian right exists in California, but, Mr. President, it is subject to the right of the State to fix the rates and control the amount of water that shall be taken out of the river. The objectionable feature of this measure is that the Government is interfering in such a way as to increase the amount necessary to be paid for the water. There is no escaping that fact. The Senator from Ohio may regard it as a merely nominal additional rate to be paid, but the exactions may be such as to increase the rate materially. Whether it does or not, however, the principle is precisely the same. The National Government is interfering with the right of the State to fix the rate and the right of the consumer to have the water at a reasonable rate, to be fixed in that way; and there is no escaping from it.

Mr. BURTON. But, Mr. President, the Federal Government is not interfering with the right of the State to fix the rate. Personally I think the time will come when there will have to be national supervision over these charges, similar to that exercised over railroads through the Interstate Commerce Commission; but I can not accept the idea that the different States are the pampered children of an indulgent parent and that in the case of a very valuable asset, such as this, States may appropriate it all for themselves, and that the Government must overcome the rapids, build locks and dams at enormous expense, and improve the navigation of a river when that improvement inures to the benefit of a particular locality and is demanded by that locality, and that such expenditure shall be without countervailing obligations on the other side.

Now, Mr. President, to resume my argument in regard to the reports of committees on this subject, I want to call the attention of the Senate to Senate bill 943 as reported with an amendment from the Committee on Commerce. It is an act to improve navigation on the Black Warrior River, in the State of Alabama. I read again the statement in the views of the minority on the pending bill. In answer to the statement in the majority report that—

> It appears to be a settled question that the Federal Government may impose a charge for the use of the surplus water not needed for navigation.

The minority report says:

> We, the minority, deny that this question has been settled, and we challenge the majority to point to a single law on the statute books, or to a report of a single committee in Congress, or to a single decision of the Supreme Court which tends to establish their contention.

The Black Warrior River is in the State of Alabama. The bill was reported by the Committee on Commerce. Let us see what the provisions of this bill are with reference to imposing a charge:

> SEC. 4. That the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to enter into a contract with the Birmingham Water, Light & Power Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Alabama, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of carrying out the stipulations and performance herein mentioned. It shall be provided in said contract that the company, its successors and assigns, shall have the right to construct, maintain, own, and operate, at its own cost, in connection with Dams and Locks 16 and 17, for a period of 50 years from the time fixed in this act for completion of the works herein authorized, electrical power stations—

And so forth. It is not necessary to read all of the act.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Senator can not fail to remember that when that bill went to conference it was distinctly stated on the floor of the Senate that, if the Senate would permit a report to be made, everything in the bill pertaining to power would be stricken out, and that the bill would come back to the Senate simply as a navigation proposition, and that that was done.

Mr. BURTON. It is a very singular thing for a committee of the Senate to go through the farce of bringing in a bill here with elaborate provisions, and approve it, with the idea that it is going to be meaningless and all stricken out. This is the form in which it was not only introduced in the Senate, but passed in the Senate, as I recall. Certainly it is a report of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I think if the Senator will examine the bill he will find those are House amendments. The RECORD so shows.

Mr. BURTON. Then it is a report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors. It is possible I am in error in that regard, but I think not.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes; the Senator is in error.

Mr. BURTON. It is a report of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors?

Mr. BANKHEAD. One more moment, and then I will not interrupt the Senator any further, as the time will come, perhaps, when some of the rest of us will have an opportunity to discuss this question.

Mr. BURTON. I think some of you are discussing it now.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not want the Senate to be misled, because the Senate will remember, and the records will show, that every provision referred to by the Senator from Ohio was stricken out in conference.

Mr. BURTON. This bill passed, did it?

Mr. BANKHEAD. Yes, it passed, and it is in operation now simply as a navigation proposition, and the locks are almost complete.

Mr. BURTON. But this provision in regard to the leasing of power was not accepted.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That is not in the bill. We struck it out.

Mr. BURTON. Here is the report from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House, or from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate:

> The said contract shall further provide for the payment by the company to the Government of an annual rental for its use of the water power developed at Dams 16 and 17. For a period of 20 years the rental shall be at the rate of $1 per annum per horsepower developed, which rate shall be subject to readjustment by the Secretary of War at the end of that period and thereafter at the end of every 10-year period.

Mr. BANKHEAD. That was all stricken out of the bill. There is nothing of that sort in it.

Mr. BURTON. However, it is at least an absolute contradiction of the statement in the minority report that no committee of Congress has recommended anything of this kind. I am coming to some cases that are altogether stronger than these, but I give these merely with reference to the reports of committees.

I want to call attention next to a number of statutes——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Wait a moment; I want to get the Senator right. That is not the report of a committee of the House. That amendment was offered on the floor of the House by Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi, and after two or three days the bill passed and came over here with that provision in it, and it was stricken out.

Mr. BURTON. It does not look that way in the copy I have here.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I do not know how it looks; but if the Senator will take the RECORD he will find it.

Mr. BURTON. The whole bill was passed by the Senate in that form. The Senator is in error in regard to that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. No; I am not.

Mr. BURTON. It is marked here: "Passed the Senate July 24, 1911."

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. JONES. I will ask the Senator to read from the report of the committee his views with reference to the matter, because the fact that the bill passed the House would not indicate whether any part of it was put on upon the floor of the House, or put on in committee and reported by the committee. The report of the committee of the Senate will show what the views of the committee were.

Mr. BURTON. I have somewhere a copy of that report. It is possible that I can turn to it before I am through with my remarks.

I want to call attention next to a great variety of statutes on the subject. They are of three classes. The first class comprises dams constructed by acts of Congress where surplus water, not needed for navigation, has been leased for water-power purposes. In a report of the Sixty-second Congress, first session, Document No. 57, there are a number of these. I wish to invite attention to the first class.

The earliest act, perhaps, was in the year 1888, which allowed power in the Muskingum River to be used for private purposes. By that act the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to grant leases or licenses for the use of the water powers at such rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient. Under that statute, passed now nearly 25 years ago, the authority to make charges for surplus water power has ever since been exercised. An advertisement was made just a few days ago for a lease of the power in connection with one of the dams for a period of 22 years.

The second instance is that of the Green and Barren Rivers of Kentucky. That act was passed September 19, 1890. Under it the Secretary of War is authorized and empowered to grant leases or licenses for the use of the water powers, at such rate and on such conditions and for such periods of time as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient, with an added condition that the leases are not to extend beyond the period of 20 years.

Mr. President, I desire to have this document printed with my remarks, because it sets forth a large number of these instances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The document referred to is as follows:

[Senate Document No. 57, Sixty-second Congress, first session.]

Private.

Mr. BURTON. Further on in this class are some very recent ones. The act of June 28, 1906, is one, in which a grant was made to the Batesville Power Co., at Lock No. 1, White River, Ark. In that act the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to fix from time to time reasonable charges to be paid for the use of power. Another is at Wabash, Ind., at Mount Carmel. That is a very old improvement. The first act in relation to that improvement was passed in 1889; another act was passed in 1901, and another in 1909. Under the last act the Secretary of War is authorized to grant leases or licenses for periods not exceeding 20 years, at such rate and on such conditions as may seem to him just, equitable, and expedient. So not only has this power been exercised in numerous cases, but the discretion to fix the charges has been left to the Secretary of War. Still another case is that of the Rock River, near Sterling; also the White River, Ark., above Lock No. 3.

There is a second class in which it has been provided that where dams, or dams and locks, are to be constructed in the future by the Government, the water power created incidentally thereto shall be leased under the direction of the Secretary of War. There is a very considerable number of these cases. I call attention to the provision in the river and harbor act of 1909, providing for the improvement of the St. Marys River. I call attention also to a provision in the act of 1907, in regard to a survey of a 14-foot waterway by way of Chicago to the Mississippi River:

The Secretary of War may appoint a board of five members, to be composed of three members of the Mississippi River Commission.

It goes on to say what that board shall report upon:

First. What depth of channel is it practicable to produce between St. Louis and Cairo at low water by means of regulation works?

Second. What depth will obtain in such regulated channel at the average stage of water for the year?

Third. For what average number of days annually will 14 feet of water obtain in such regulated channel?

The fourth and fifth provisions are immaterial.

Sixth. And the said board shall also report upon any water power which may be created in the portion herein directed to be surveyed, as well as in the proposed waterway from St. Louis to Chicago heretofore surveyed, and the value thereof, and what means should be taken in order that the Government of the United States may conserve the same or receive adequate compensation therefor.

Here, in this survey of a proposed 14-foot waterway, one of the vital points upon which the board was to report was what means should be taken to conserve the water power and to secure adequate compensation therefor.

I wish to call attention to another provision of law under which this very project in the Connecticut River was surveyed. It is a general provision in the river and harbor act of 1909. It is found on page 9 of that act. I wish Senators to give especial attention to this provision, to show how useless it is to deny that this has been a substantial feature in the policy of the Federal Government.

In the portion relating to the general rule in regard to surveys, that act says:

Provided, That every report submitted to Congress in pursuance of this section, in addition to full information regarding the present and prospective commercial importance of the project covered by the report and the benefit to commerce likely to result from any proposed plan of improvement, shall contain also such data as it may be practicable to secure regarding (first) the establishment of terminal and transfer facilities—

That provision does not apply in this case, but I read it so as to give the whole paragraph—

(second) the development and utilization of water power for industrial and commercial purposes, and (third) such other subjects as may be properly connected with such project: Provided further, That in the investigation and study of these questions consideration shall be given only to their bearing upon the improvement of navigation and to the possibility and desirability of their being coordinated in a logical and proper manner with improvements for navigation to lessen the cost of such improvements and to compensate the Government for expenditures made in the interest of navigation.

Thus, Mr. President, the very survey under which this project was reported was authorized in a bill that demanded of the engineers that they should report upon possible compensation to the Government for its expenditure in the interest of navigation; and the engineers reported, stating that there should be compensation in this instance. They made that recommendation in view of the fact that for years this project had been pending, and it had not been thought best to expend the money unless the water power could be utilized and the compensation applied on the cost of the improvement. When at last the time came that the water power could be developed coordinately and contemporaneously with the improvement of navigation, then, and not until then, did the Government approve this proposed improvement.

A third class comprises acts of Congress granting permission to lessees to construct dams in navigable streams subject to various conditions. These conditions vary all the way from a requirement that the lessee shall build the dam at its own expense, but allow the Government at its expense to construct in connection therewith locks and other works in the interest of navigation—that is one extreme—to conditions requiring the lessee at its own expense to build the dam and all works necessary for the protection and promotion of navigation, and convey to the Federal Government all such works as may be necessary free of cost, together with a stipulation that power shall be furnished to the Federal Government for operating and lighting such works. In some of these grants the Federal Government has imposed an additional charge either stipulated in the act or to be imposed in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

There are a large number of these cases. They are also given in this document. I want to call attention, however, to a few of them. Perhaps the most important act—the one which blazed the way for this class of legislation—was that authorizing a corporation to build a dam and lock at Hales Bar, just below the city of Chattanooga. Under it the grantee was to purchase the necessary lands and deed the same to the United States; also to construct a lock and dam and give them to the United States when completed free of all cost, except expenses connected with the preparation of plans, superintendence, cost of lock gates, and so forth; and to furnish the United States free electric current for lighting and operating locks, the grantee to have the use of the water power for 99 years. That authority was granted something more than 8 years ago; and the condition, as I can recall myself, would have been extended to the construction of the lock gates and to the completed lock and dam, except for the fact that the then Chief of Engineers thought it best that the Government itself should make the plans for the lock gates, and purchase them. Under that provision the company has been going ahead; and while there have been unusual delays, due to high water and other causes, the construction, as I understand, is nearly completed.

Another case of the same kind is that of the Mississippi River at the Des Moines Rapids. There the grantee was required to build a lock and dry dock and appurtenant works, owership of them to be vested in the United States, the grantee to provide a suitable power plant for lighting and operating the lock, dry dock and appurtenances, and also to provide fishways.

The Cumberland River and tributaries is another case which I wish to cite. The Cumberland River Improvement Co., under an act of March 3, 1905, accepted a franchise under which the United States may assume the possession, care, operation, maintenance, and management of the lock or locks constructed by the corporation, but without in any way impairing the right or ownership of the water power and dams created by the corporation. There the conditions were a little less severe.

Then there is one in the Coosa River, Ala., at Lock 4, which certainly must have been consented to by the Senator from Alabama. In that case the dam was to be the property of the United States, free of charge; the grantee to have water-power rights for 50 years; the United States to have the right to construct a lock, and to have free electric current for operating and lighting; the grantee to raise the height of the dam and to stop leaks. Beginning in 1925, the grantee is required to pay to the United States $1 per 10-hour horsepower per year, with an increase if the natural flowage is increased by storage reservoirs.

Why, along through a stretch of years, through numerous river and harbor acts and other acts independent of river and harbor legislation, this principle of imposing conditions or imposing charges has been followed by the Federal Government, and there has been no question raised upon it in any court, so far as I know, to this day. The Muskingum River, the Green River, the Barren River, the Cumberland, the Coosa, the Tennessee, the great Mississippi itself, all have structures in which this rule has been followed.

Let me repeat again briefly, is there any difference between a condition which imposes upon the company the enormous expense of building the structures, building the cofferdams, and taking all the risks and uncertainties of the enterprise and one which provides in effect that when they are completed, after making due allowance for profits, for deterioration, and for the charges to consumers which are controlled by the State, the Government may, if there is a profit, impose certain charges for the improvement of the river in which that structure is located? The imposition of charges and the conditions requiring locks and dams to be constructed both rest on precisely the same principle, the fact that the Government, having the paramount right there, being responsible for providing navigation, may foster that navigation by any proper means of this nature.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. Suppose that instead of making a contract under the law now contemplated, the Government should assume to utilize the surplus power by constructing a power plant of its own and then selling power to consumers; could it do that?

Mr. BURTON. It might under some circumstances. Suppose it has provided an electrical plant at a lock and has a surplus of power to dispose of.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator thinks the Government could do that?

Mr. BURTON. It would not naturally do it, because then it would be engaging in a line of business. But the surplus power belongs to the State or to the Government which creates the main work. That is exactly what they are doing in these cases of the Muskingum and the Barren and other rivers. At Sault Ste. Marie it is provided that when that improvement is made——

Mr. THOMAS. The United States Government is constructing a plant of its own for the purpose of manufacturing or generating current and selling it.

Mr. BURTON. That is a question of policy, whether it will do it or not.

Mr. THOMAS. Simply a question of policy? Then let me ask whether the State would have any authority whatever to impose limitations upon the charges that the Government could make?

Mr. BURTON. That is a novel question. I am frank to say I had not thought of it before. I question whether it could. That is an ingenious question, I may say, and such a one as I anticipated the Senator was going to ask when he rose—whether the charges for power, which in the case of private corporations are fixed and uniform, could be imposed or compelled if the United States furnished the power. I am inclined to think they could not, but I do not feel quite ready to answer that question. At any rate, it does not arise in any case we have.

Mr. THOMAS. No; but we are considering the extent to which a given power may go if it exists at all. If the State has no power whatever, or only a limited power, if you please, to impose conditions upon the cost or charge of the General Government to the consumer and yet can impose those conditions upon all private concerns engaged in competition with it, may not the Government, by virtue of its freedom from all of those limitations, practically control the market first by underselling and afterwards by charging what the traffic will bear?

Mr. BURTON. In those things we have to rely ultimately on the wisdom of Congress. It is the thought of many that Congress does foolish things, but it is not probable that any situation would ever be created where any friction of that kind or any such troublesome question could exist. But the charge for transformed power created by the dam is the same in principle as the charge for the power that flows by the dam. We are now charging for the use of surplus water and fixing the rates. When that is transmuted into hydroelectrical power it would seem that the same principle would apply.

It is maintained—and a great deal of stress is laid upon this in the minority report—that something is confiscated by this act which belongs to the States. I think I can show the utter fallacy of that idea, Mr. President.

In the first place, I want to call attention to the difference between the laws of the older States and the laws of the newer or mountain States. We have certain rules and regulations, established by the courts and by statutes, in the Eastern States. The riparian owner has certain rights. The right of a riparian owner in the flow of the water is that he is entitled to have the stream remain in place and flow as nature directs, and to make such use of the flowing water as he can make without materially interfering with the equal rights of the owners above and below him on the stream. The boundaries of riparian lands are fixed according to three different rules. In some States, and Connecticut is one of them, the riparian owns to the high-water mark. In other States he owns to the low-water mark. In others, still, he owns to the center or thread of the stream. In the far Western States, however, the water belongs to the State or to the public, and is under its control.

In the State of Oregon, as I understand the law of prior appropriation which prevails in that State, the State may grant the privilege to a person who wishes to use water for a recognized beneficial purpose to go right in front of a man's farm and, upon payment of the proper compensation, put in his dam and equipment for the use or diversion of the water. When that is done the use of the water belongs to him under grant from the State. He is not compelled to recognize any riparian right—certainly none in the flow of the water.

It will appear from this that there is a very wide difference between these States and the State of Connecticut, in which no such rights are involved. I should be less than frank if I should not say to the Senate that I also believe in proper restrictions and conditions in case of Federal grants in the Western States; that is, where navigable streams or public lands are involved. But the two cases are very widely distinct.

What is the law in Connecticut? The State is said to own the bed of the stream. The riparian owner has certain rights. He can build out to the high-water mark, and he has the right of access to the stream, for his stock to drink, say. He can build out a wharf into the stream, so that he may utilize navigation facilities. Then, above all, is the paramount right of the Federal Government in the exercise of control over navigation.

What is confiscated here? First, the State of Connecticut by a grant to this company in 1824, confirmed in 1909, and by intermediate acts gave its rights to the grantee company, the Connecticut River Co. Those rights, in their most exaggerated form, are shadowy in their nature. What does the ownership of the bed of the stream mean to the State? It does not mean that you can authorize a person to go out there and build a blacksmith shop. It does not mean that you can authorize a construction out there as could a private owner on his own land. Indeed, in the very State of Connecticut the right of removing gravel from the bed of a stream by the State or under its authority without compensation to the riparian owner was denied.

In the bridge case to which I briefly referred in replying to a question of the Senator from Iowa, a railroad company desired to build a bridge from the mainland of New Jersey to Staten Island. The State of New Jersey came in and said: "We own the bed of that stream. We have passed a statute that no bridges shall be built across the Kill von Kull." The corporation, which was a private company, had been granted the right to build a bridge by the Federal Government. Justice Bradley—this is not a decision of the Supreme Court, but it is a decision by him on a circuit—decided that the right of the Federal Government was paramount; that the State of New Jersey could not stand in the way of the construction of that bridge. He decided, further, that the State of New Jersey owned the land under the river for the public; that it had no other ownership of it, and hence the railroad company could build its piers on the submerged land which nominally belonged to the State of New Jersey without asking leave. The builders of the bridge were not compelled to condemn the land in the bed of the stream. So, when we say the bed of the stream belongs to a State, what do we mean by it? We do not mean that it has a fee-simple title. We do not mean that it can be alienated or parceled out. We mean that the State owns it as a trust for the public use; not merely for the use of the State, but for all such uses as may be considered public in their nature.

This right, whatever it may be, of the State is not taken way from it by this bill. It did not amount to much, anyway; and what the State did have it has granted to this company under the charter authorizing it to improve the Connecticut River.

The riparian owner has cerain interests there. How about him? The bill provides with the most sedulous care that every right of the riparian owner—flowage, occupancy, everything—shall be acquired by this company before it can go ahead. It is made an absolute condition that they shall acquire all the abutting or riparian property, and this company is the riparian owner of a large share of it already. So there is not any confiscation there.

Now comes the Federal Government and says: "The Connecticut is a navigable stream. There are great communities above there awaiting to have access to the water that would become shippers of freight on a very large scale. We want that river improved. We do not think it is worth while to improve it independently as a problem of navigation; but if there can be proper compensation, not to the United States"—do not indulge in that delusion—"but to the public, it may be done." Everything that is done for navigation, whether it be the building of a dam or a lock or whatever it may be, or whether it be an amount paid annually in the way of a toll, is for the benefit of the public, for which the United States Government is a trustee. The Government says we will give this permission, provided certain things are done. For what? For the right to use the surplus water? Any right in the bed is gone; the right of the riparian owner is gone; the right of navigation remains. And that right of navigation is the paramount right. Flowing water is not tangible property; it is as free as the light of the sun or the air, you may say. Some talk about proprietary rights in the water power. What property is there in the form of water power until the dam is constructed and the appurtenant works are made? The water has been flowing down the Connecticut River ever since the days of Indian occupation, when the white settlers first went there, 280 years ago, practically unused. Are you going to stop progress? Are you going to stop the utilization of this water power? No; when that dam and that lock are constructed, then property is created. It is the utilization of that which has been running to waste from the very beginning of time.

Mr. NELSON. Who owns that property? Is it the United States or the company?

Mr. BURTON. Which property?

Mr. NELSON. Who creates that property when the dam on the Connecticut River is built? Whose property is that dam when it is built and ready for use?

Mr. BURTON. The bill states, in lines 22, 23, and 24, on page 4, after providing for the size of lock, and so forth:

And when the said lock and appurtenances shall have been completed the said corporation shall convey the same—

The lock belongs to the Government and the dam to the company—

And when the said lock and appurtenances shall have been completed the said corporation shall convey the same to the United States free of cost—

And so forth.

Mr. NELSON. Exactly. Those are the appurtenances of navigation. That is the property in the lock and gates, but the balance of the property, the dam and the dam power and the machinery and everything, belong to the company.

Now, I want to put one question to the Senator from Ohio, and I should like to hear him discuss it. Would not the effect of this legislation, if it was applied in every instance, be to put the control of every dam and water power under the War Department of the Government and absolutely divest the power of the States altogether?

Mr. BURTON. So far as any dams or locks have been built for the benefit of navigation, they are under the control of the War Department now.

Mr. NELSON. But I mean the water power created in the dam. I do not refer to the locks and gates; I mean the water power created by dams of this kind. Would not the effect of this principle be to put all the water power and the control of it and the compensation it shall pay all over the land under the Secretary of War, and give him the power to sell it and the power to regulate it and to say what should be paid for the use of that power by the company constructing the dam?

Mr. BURTON. Not necessarily so. There are many water powers, probably a majority that would not come under his control. I think much the greater portion of potential water power of the country would not come under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of War at all, because it will be developed in nonnavigable streams.

It is possible that there would be a qualified control over a portion of it by another Cabinet officer, the Secretary of the Interior, but I will come to that point later. We must have a degree of uniformity. The action of the Secretary of War, the action of the Secretary of the Interior, or any other Cabinet or executive officer is constantly under the control of Congress. If there is any danger of exaction or oppression or if his power is not properly applied, Congress at any session can absolutely change the law or take it away entirely.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question right there?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Because of the fact that the Secretary of War is under the control of Congress, ought either Congress or the Secretary of War to destroy the rights of the States in this question?

Mr. BURTON. There is no right of the State to be destroyed in this case. The State organized this corporation and granted it such rights in the stream as it had power to grant. At considerable length I have shown what rights the States have in the beds of streams. This company must acquire the right of riparian proprietors. When you eliminate those rights there remains the right of navigation. I also tried to show that the property did not exist until you construct these works.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question? In whom was this right to the water of the Connecticut River while Connecticut was a Colony, before it became one of the States of the Union? To whom did it belong?

Mr. BURTON. The right to its beneficial use belonged, I suppose, to King Charles the First, King Charles the Second, and later Kings of England.

Mr. NELSON. I mean before the Constitution of the United States was adopted or the independence of the Colonies?

Mr. BURTON. There were so many different situations that I do not like to express an opinion upon them, but I presume the Colony had rights similar to those now in the State.

Mr. NELSON. Now, will the Senator answer this question? Is it not true that that stream and the water in it was either the property of the State of Connecticut or of the riparian owner, or both combined, and that the Constitution of the United States gave the Federal Government only the right in that stream to the extent of navigation, and for no other purpose?

Mr. BURTON. It is a right, however, that was paramount and superior to all others, and to which the right to the bed of the stream and the riparian ownership, both of which have been acquired by the company which is the proposed licensee under this bill, are subordinate. A decision was rendered recently by the Supreme Court of Connecticut to the effect that where the course of a channel was modified, bringing it nearer to the shore and thereby interfering with an oyster bed, that, the change having been made under the authority of the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers, the party had no redress. That does not seem to show that the State of Connecticut has any right or desire to come in here with a complaint about the use of its waters by the Federal Government. On the contrary, probably every Senator here has received letters or telegrams from that locality most earnestly urging him to support this bill, even with such infirmities as it may have.

I shall now pass to another branch of the subject. The right to use the surplus water for power rests upon the fact that the development of power is an incident to the development of navigation. Every consideration of public policy demands that the two, power and navigation, should be developed together. An improvement which might not be profitable for navigation alone or for power alone can be made profitable if the two are combined. For the growth of the country it is essential that the two shall go together, and in the language of Judge Shiras, in his decision in One hundred and seventy-second United States, in such a situation "there can be no divided empire." Let us recognize the impossibility of having a divided ownership and control. Just as the Federal Government has the paramount jurisdiction over a river for purposes of navigation it has the paramount control over a lock and a dam in a navigable stream where it is erected for the sake of navigation.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator from Ohio just referred to an opinion by Mr. Justice Shiras, reported in One hundred and seventy-second United States Reports. I ask the Senator whether he is referring to the case of the Green Bay Co. v. the Patten Paper Co.?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; that is the case.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator, of course, is quite aware that in that case the commerce clause of the Constitution was not under consideration. The rights asserted by the Government were based upon a grant and did not grow out of the constitutional provision.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator is in error about that. At any rate the principle——

Mr. O'GORMAN. I state it as a fact which can be confirmed by the decision itself.

Mr. BURTON. Let me read from the beginning the fundamental facts at issue. This case was first before the Supreme Court in One hundred and forty-second United States and again in One hundred and seventy-second United States. The commerce clause was involved. To go back to the very beginning I must refer to an act of Congress of 1846. I am reading from volume 142, United States Reports. Perhaps I am anticipating my argument a little, but I think I can now answer the Senator from New York. This is found in volume 142, United States Reports, page 255:

By an act approved August 8, 1846 (9 Stat., 83, c. 170), Congress granted certain lands to the State of Wisconsin upon its admission into the Union—for the purpose of improving the navigation of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, the former of which is one of the navigable rivers of the State, having an average flow of 150,000 cubic feet per minute.

What for?

At a later time, subsequent to the decision in volume 142, a decision was reported in volume 172, after this property had been acquired by the Federal Government from the State of Wisconsin under an act of Congress. Now, what is the basis for the action of the Federal Government in the premises? In the first place, under the Constitution Congress would have control over interstate and foreign commerce. It has control in that connection over the agencies which facilitate commerce, which make possible intercourse between the States by the movement of freight. In that development it may create agencies for traffic, for carrying freight from localities in one State to those in another.

The next point is that in furtherance of this policy it has engaged on a large scale in the improvement of rivers for navigation. In some cases the rivers flow through a level country, and in others through a broken or mountainous country. In the latter case slack-water navigation is necessary, which can be obtained only by the construction of locks and dams. In these cases water power is incidentally created. In one case there is a river that flows through a perfectly level country which can be improved with the utmost ease at a trivial expense; then in another section of the country there is a stream flowing through a mountainous area with a great descent between its source and its mouth. The second class of rivers possess potential water power. Is it fair to the Federal Government and the people of the United States to put those two cases on just the same footing, to expend millions in one case against tens of thousands in the other, when connected with this expenditure of millions it is possible to create power which is of inestimable value?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; but I prefer to proceed with my argument for a little time.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have no desire to interrupt, except that it might be desirable to have the fact accurately stated as to whether the commerce clause of the Constitution was involved in the case in question or whether the controversy grew out of a grant, as I asserted. I repeat, by reference to the decision which I hold in my hand, there is no single allusion to the constitutional provision, but, on the contrary, the opinion distinctly states that the controversy grew out of the grant, as it appears on page 62 of the One hundred and seventy-second Supreme Court Reports, as follows:

By an act approved March 23, 1871, by the Legislature of Wisconsin the directors of the Green Bay & Mississippi Canal Co. were authorized to sell and dispose of the rights and property of said company to the United States, and to cause to be made and executed all papers and writings necessary thereto as contemplated in the act of Congress.

And the subsequent controversy grew out of the rights secured by that grant; and not in the remotest way was the commerce clause of the Constitution involved in that case.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask the Senator from New York a question?

Mr. O'GORMAN. With pleasure.

Mr. BURTON. How can you authorize a dam in a navigable stream or legislate concerning a dam in a navigable stream without involving the interstate-commerce power under the Constitution?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am asserting with respect to this particular case that that question was not involved.

Mr. BURTON. But how can you get rid of it?

Mr. O'GORMAN. The Senator cited the case, and I am calling his attention to the fact that the Supreme Court at no time in the case alluded to the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Mr. BURTON. That makes no difference; they took that for granted. What right would the Government of the United States have to improve a stream except for the purposes of navigation?

Mr. O'GORMAN. By a right which is contended for by the minority, or, rather, what appears to be now the majority of the Senator's own committee, namely, the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, acting in its sovereign right, authorized a sale by one of its corporations of this franchise to the Federal Government, and among the rights secured by the franchise given by the State was the right to erect dams in one of the rivers of the State.

Mr. BURTON. For what purpose—for navigation?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BURTON. How can you avoid the jurisdiction which belongs to Congress? Does the Senator from New York maintain for a minute that the Government of the United States could purchase rights along a waterway merely for the sake of the water power? What did all this transaction mean? Was the Government doing a vain thing?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am glad to have the Senator from Ohio make the concession now that the Government has no right to engage in the purchase and sale and traffic of water power.

Mr. BURTON. As an independent proposition it does not have the power.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I assume that in the pending bill which the Senator is advocating the contrary principle is attempted to be recognized.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, not by any means. If you read the bill you can come to no other conclusion than that the object is navigation. The other is coordinate with it and incidental to it. There is no doubt of that.

The position taken by the Senator from New York would lead to this, that in a case in which there was a grant of land, a contract, as it were, made with the newly admitted State of Wisconsin for the express purpose of facilitating navigation, when statutes were passed for the development of navigation, when permission was given to build dams to facilitate navigation, when after the State had failed in its control and it was turned over to the Federal Government and the Federal Government appropriated millions for its improvement for purposes of navigation, the interstate clause of the Constitution was not involved at all. Certainly whether the court mentioned the fact or not they took it as elementary. It is not necessary to state, when you are dealing with a navigation problem, "We base our powers on the interstate-commerce clause." It was too well understood by everyone who was connected with it for that to be done. Based upon the commerce clause are, first, the control over interstate commerce; second, the right to provide the agencies for interstate commerce; and, third, in providing those agencies, the improvement of navigable streams, which has been done on a large scale. The Federal Government has a right to utilize those waters which it controls for the purposes of navigation in such a way as to subserve the public interest. The right to dispose of the surplus water for power purposes has been repeatedly maintained by decisions of the Federal and State courts. (See Kaukauna Water Power Co. v. Green Bay & Mississippi Canal, 142 U. S., p. 254.)

I fear the Senate is possibly a little weary, and I will not read at great length from these cases, as I had intended to.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Just for a brief interruption by way of elucidating perhaps the principle involved in this controversy. In the Kaukauna Co. v. Green Bay (142 U. S.), just referred to by the Senator from Ohio, the commerce clause of the Constitution was not involved. That case involved a dispute between the State of Wisconsin and the riparian owner, and the rights which the court recognized in the State of Wisconsin have been regarded by some as indicating the rights that ought to be vested in the Federal Government, while the rights recognized in the State of Wisconsin were rights pertinent to the sovereignty of the State.

Mr. BURTON. It is expressly stated in this case that the State of Wisconsin could not authorize the appropriation of money for the creation of water power. They had no stronger rights than the United States in the improvement. A certain amount of fog sometimes arises in a study of this case because of its close association with the transactions of the State, but it is decided not on the particular circumstances but on the general facts. If the Senator from New York will allow me, and the Senate will bear with me, I want to read from the decision in this case somewhat at length.

It has been suggested, Mr. President, that the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS] desires to call up the fortifications appropriation bill, and with the consent of the Senate I will suspend my argument. But I should like to ask if any notice has been given for to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENYON in the chair). The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. PAYNTER] has given notice that he would address the Senate to-morrow on Senate bill 4043, to prohibit interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors in certain cases.

Mr. BURTON. Then, on the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Kentucky, I will again address the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from California yield to me just a moment?

Mr. PERKINS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I made an inquiry near the beginning of the remarks of the Senator from Ohio as to whether he knew of an agreement that had been arrived at between the Secretary of War and the Connecticut River Co. with reference to the subject matter of this bill. The reply was that he knew of none. I am definitely informed that such an agreement has been arrived at; that the terms of the agreement have been discussed and have been agreed to; and that the division of the profits arising from this water power as between the company and the Government of the United States has been settled upon.

I send to the Secretary's desk a resolution upon this subject seeking for information, for which resolution I ask immediate consideration in order that we may have the proposed contract, if such a contract exists, to consider in connection with the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 450) was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish to the Senate a copy of the contract or agreement proposed to be entered into by and with the Connecticut River Co. with reference to a dam across the Connecticut River, and the generation of power in connection therewith, as contemplated under the proposed terms of S. 8033, being a bill now pending in the Senate of the United States entitled "A bill to authorize the Connecticut River Co. to relocate and construct a dam across the Connecticut River above the village of Windsor Locks, in the State of Connecticut."

FORTIFICATIONS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PERKINS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 28186, known as the fortifications appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 28186) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with an amendment.

Mr. PERKINS. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the bill be read for amendment, and that the amendment of the committee be acted upon when it is reached.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from California asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendment. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The amendment of the committee was, on page 2, after line 12, to insert:

Hereafter estimates shall not be submitted to Congress for appropriations for construction of gun and mortar batteries, modernizing older emplacements, and other construction under the Engineer Department, in connection with fortifications, until after plans and estimates of cost shall have been prepared therefor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE IN NORTH DAKOTA.

The bill (H. R. 27879) providing authority for the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in section 36, township 134 north, range 79 west, in the State of North Dakota, was read twice by its title.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of that bill. It is identical with a Senate bill which has already been passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Minnesota desires that it shall be passed in lieu of a similar Senate bill?

Mr. NELSON. I do. If the House bill shall pass, I shall move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NELSON. I enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 7855) to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in section 36, township 134 north, range 79 west, in the State of North Dakota, was passed, and I ask that the Secretary be directed to request the return of the bill from the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 6, 1913, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 5, 1913.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, stir the divinity within us that it may dominate our lives and bring us into a closer relationship with Thee and our fellow men in the furtherance of every good work, that our names may be written in the Book of Life and our souls filled with the peace which passeth understanding. In Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. This is Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move to dispense with the business in order under the rule to-day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves to dispense with the business of Calendar Wednesday to-day; and on that motion each side has five minutes under the rule.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is no quorum present. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] moves a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this call 286 Members have answered to their names.

Mr. FITZGERALD and Mr. MANN moved to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York is entitled to five minutes on his motion to dispense with Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I made the motion to dispense with Calendar Wednesday because of the condition of the public business awaiting to be disposed of by the House. There are still to be considered seven appropriation bills—the agricultural, diplomatic and consular, Military Academy, naval, pension, sundry civil, and general deficiency.

In addition to that, the District of Columbia appropriation bill is now under consideration. From now until the 3d of March, inclusive, there are 27 days, and 4 of those days are Sundays. There are two Wednesdays—to-day and the next Wednesday. Next Wednesday is set aside by order of the two Houses for the count of the electoral votes. There are four Fridays. Thus far the House by its vote has refused to set aside special business in order on Friday and consider general public business. There are some bills of such a peculiar character that, in my opinion, the House when put in the position of choosing between appropriation bills and that business is likely to refuse to consider appropriation bills.

There are two Mondays upon which business is in order from the District Committee, and I assume that at least one day, or a part of a day, will be required by that committee. There are two Mondays set aside for business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

So that, even if the four Fridays set aside for business on the Private Calendar be devoted to appropriation bills, there remain but 16 days until the 3d of March which are available for public business.

It must be remembered that not only must the appropriation bills be passed within 16 days, but they must be sent to the Senate in time to enable the Senate to consider them. Moreover, conference reports will take up considerable time during the remaining days. Unless the House desires some of these appropriation bills to fail and to go over into the special session of Congress, it is necessary to set aside these days for particular classes of business in order that the public business may be transacted.

Mr. MANN. Did the gentleman from New York take into consideration the fact that Saturday, the 15th of this month, the House will be invited to participate in the memorial to the late Vice President, Mr. Sherman?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had that on the list. Mr. Speaker, the 15th of February has been set aside by general order for memorial services on the life and character of the late Vice President of the United States, and the House is invited and I assume will attend the ceremony in the Senate.

Mr. Speaker, it is rarely that any of these appropriation bills can be passed in two days. Neither the agricultural bill, the naval, nor the sundry civil bill can be passed inside of four or five days, driving 12 and 14 hours a day. The responsibility for the failure to transact this business must not be placed on any individual, or on any single committee, or any number of committees of the House. The appropriation bills are awaiting consideration on the calendar. Those not reported will be in shape when reached. I am asking the House to devote its time to the public business, and I shall ask the House to assume the responsibility either to proceed with the public business or to refuse to do so by taking up other business.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of opposing the motion of the gentleman from New York, and I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, in the minority I am quite willing that the majority should control the business of the House, but I want to suggest that to sacrifice Calendar Wednesday, if the good intentions of the House become good intentions, will be in vain. We can get through in this House with the business providing the majority want to make the appropriations. If you want to make them in the next Congress, well and good; it is up to you. I am not in favor of sacrificing Calendar Wednesday to-day, and I want to say to you of the majority and to you of the minority that if we continue to waste the time of the House on unimportant matters—eating up time, burning time—the appropriations will not be made. [Applause.] It requires the presence of a quorum in the Committee of the Whole House and real attention to business instead of having a baker's dozen here to take up time in getting a quorum and in calling the rolls.

I do not charge you of the majority with anything like that, but I believe Calendar Wednesday, at least for this day, as it is probably the last one that we will have, should be devoted to business that is in order on Calendar Wednesday. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I realize that there is a great deal to be accomplished by this House between now and the 4th of March. We must soon have night sessions in order to get through with the business of the House. The committee of which I am chairman is next on the calendar. We have two very important measures to be considered by this House. They ought to be considered. A year ago Congress passed a resolution authorizing the President to invite the nations of the earth to join with us in the celebration of the completion of the Panama Canal. Twenty-five nations have accepted that invitation and have notified the State Department that they propose to participate in it. Many of them, I am informed, are ready now to begin the construction of buildings and the placing of exhibits there. They want a Government commission to deal with. The Government commission provided for in this bill is seven in number, the smallest ever provided for in any international exposition, and they are to be paid for by the Panama-Pacific International Exposition Co., just as New Orleans proposed to pay for them. That part of the bill is fashioned after the New Orleans bill. That involves no expense on the part of the Government. The Government of Japan, I am informed, has already appropriated $1,000,000 for her exhibit at this great celebration, and other nations will have exhibits, and the Government of the United States must participate in it. She has invited these people to come as nations to this great celebration. The question for the House to determine is whether we will have an exhibit at that place and have a commission to represent the dignity and honor of this, the greatest Government on the globe. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the gentleman's motion will be voted down, and that this Calendar Wednesday, set apart for the business of the people of this Government, will be scrupulously observed. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on dispensing with Calendar Wednesday for to-day.

The question was taken; and, on a division, at the suggestion of the Speaker, there were—ayes 85, noes 146.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 182, answered "present" 6, not voting 91, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, in order to save time I desire to make a preliminary statement——

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the question of personal privilege presented.

Mr. SIMS. That is what I am expecting to do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. SIMS. Yes, Mr. Speaker; I will state it.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the Chair to pass on.

Mr. SIMS. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that on the 25th day of January there was published in every paper of Washington, some of them marked as advertisements, a very long statement by Mr. Glover, of this city, in which my name was used from beginning to end. As that paper was read in part by every Member of the House, I hope to save the time of having it read. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] told me a few days ago he was requested by a friend of Mr. Glover to have the article put in the RECORD, and asked me if I had any objection. I told him I had absolutely none, and he could put it in himself. My idea at this point was that he might comply with the request, and now submit a request that the article go in the RECORD and my statement follow.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting the article mentioned.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to say to the gentleman it has been so long since this article appeared—the 25th of January—that I desire to ask him if he can not let it go over until to-morrow or the next day?

Mr. SIMS. I want to say to the gentleman, I am not going to consume time under this right that I have to use the floor. I expect to submit a written statement.

Mr. HEFLIN. About how much time does the gentleman expect to use?

Mr. SIMS. Not over 5 or 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. If a Member has a question of personal privilege he has the right to talk about it without asking anybody's consent, except the Chair has to pass on the question of whether he has a question of personal privilege or not.

Mr. SIMS. I am trying to avoid using too much time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] asks unanimous consent to print this article of Mr. Glover in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SIMS. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how can we tell——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects. Now the gentleman from Tennessee will state his question of privilege.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, that would involve the reading of about a nine-column article in a newspaper, and I do not wish to use the time of the House. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas to send the article to the Clerk's desk and have it read.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman should be required to state, in his judgment, what constitutes the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly what the Chair is trying to get the gentleman to do. If the gentleman from Tennessee has a question of privilege, he will state it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, the article which I was trying to avoid reading, to save time, accuses me of having made several false statements in my representative capacity as a Member of this House.

The SPEAKER. Then you have a question of privilege.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly I have, but I am trying to prevent the use of time.

The SPEAKER. It is not necessary to read that nine-column article. The gentleman can read the parts of it which contain the charge.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman if he is willing to wait until to-morrow.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do not think the gentleman from Illinois should attempt to interfere with the day we have.

Mr. SIMS. I am in good faith in not wanting to use the time of the House, and if I can get unanimous consent to print the two statements I will not open my mouth.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have made the objection, and I made it for this reason: I have nothing to say as to the merits of the controversy. But here was an entire page of a metropolitan paper taken up by a gentleman to explain his position. It does not seem to me that the RECORD is the place in which to reprint that matter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. SHERLEY. I do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] may have 15 minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Is not five minutes sufficient?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object unless this article goes in, too, in the discussion of this matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] have leave to have the article inserted in the RECORD and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] have 15 minutes in which to address the House and leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. CANNON. He only asks leave to print and couple the two together.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He can not get that leave.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] if he will not let it go over until to-morrow?

Mr. SIMS. The appropriation bill comes on to-morrow, which is just as important as the bill the gentleman wants to have considered now. I am trying to avoid the use of time, and the gentleman sees I am not able to do so.

Mr. HEFLIN. We have already consumed 1 hour and 20 minutes here.

Mr. SIMS. If they will only give me leave to print, I will not consume a minute.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent to print the article of Mr. Glover in the RECORD and that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] have 15 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have objected to the printing of the article. I do not think the RECORD should be encumbered with matters so extraneous as that. To rise to a question of personal privilege is the highest right a Member has. The gentleman from Tennessee can state his position in a few moments without encumbering the RECORD with columns and columns of Mr. Glover's statement. I object.

Mr. SIMS. I will make my statement and make it as brief as possible. I have never tried to filibuster.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this Calendar Wednesday should be devoted to the business of Calendar Wednesday, and it has been solemnly determined by this House that it can not be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. It has been solemnly determined time and again that a question of personal privilege is a matter of the highest privilege, and the Chair so rules.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, on the 30th of December, before the District Committee of the House of Representatives, investigating questions pertaining to some matter of insurance and valuation of buildings in this District, Mr. Charles C. Glover went before that committee as a witness.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I raise a point of order on the question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. It is too late to do that. There is no point of order to be made against a question of personal privilege.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] has not stated a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already ruled on that. That is the last authority, unless an appeal is taken.

Mr. CANNON. In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is proceeding to make a speech.

Mr. FITZGERALD. He has the right to do that.

Mr. CANNON. Can he talk six hours or the balance of the session?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would be inclined to believe that the general rule of one hour would apply, although the Chair does not rule that. But as long as the gentleman from Tennessee restricts himself to the question of having been charged with falsehood by Mr. Glover he is adhering to the question of personal privilege. The Chair does not believe that Members have to submit to being called liars.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that he permit the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] to proceed and finish his remarks. The gentleman from Illinois has interrupted and delayed more than all the other Members of the House put together.

Mr. CANNON. We are at the mercy of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. You are at the mercy of the Chair on this occasion.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that on a question like this a quorum of the House ought to be present?

Mr. SIMS. Oh, there is a quorum present—all the quorum I want. [Laughter.] Let me finish. I shall not take much time.

Mr. MANN. I thought that might head off more interruptions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will proceed.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, no one has a greater distaste for personal controversy than I. I have now about rounded out 16 years of continuous service in this great legislative body and have never had one unpleasant word with any Member of the House, whether in open sessions of the House or in committee service. In all these long years I have often become somewhat heated up and excited, but never intentionally said one unkind word of any Member or deliberately said anything to cast reflection upon any man in public or in private life. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the man who often airs his supposed wrongs and personal injuries on this floor loses rather than gains the sympathy or respect of his colleagues. But, painful as it is to me, I must, in justice to myself as a Member of this body, again ask for patient attention to a matter that I have heretofore discussed, as a matter of personal privilege.

On the night of March 3, 1909, nearly four years ago, the gentleman from Michigan, Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH, moved to suspend the rules and pass a bill, commonly called the Glover bill, to purchase about 100 acres of land as an addition to Rock Creek Park. I was not in the Chamber at the moment the motion was made, but came back into the Chamber just as the gentleman from New York, Mr. ANDRUS, was yielded five minutes' time in opposition to the motion. I listened attentively to what Mr. ANDRUS said, as he was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which committee had considered this proposition. Naturally, I relied upon his statement of facts. He is known to all of us as one of the most conscientious and laborious Members of this body. Mr. Speaker, I do not hesitate to say that in the retirement of Mr. ANDRUS this House and the country sustains a most material loss.

In that debate Mr. ANDRUS said:

Mr. Speaker, the work of a session of Congress apparently is never completed until we have some little discussion in regard to an appropriation for the purchase of land in Rock Creek Park. My time is rather limited, but at the outset I want to state how I stand on parks. I am in favor of parks, as I am in favor of public schools, in favor of churches; churches to grow a better moral influence in the community, churches so that the children may acquire an education, and parks where the children can play and grow bone and muscle and nerve to help them bear the heavy burdens of life that will follow. I would like to give you just a hasty résumé of this matter for four years. On March 27, 1906, Senate bill 5289 called for $600,000. On the 27th of March a Senator wrote to the president of the District Commissioners asking certain information, and among the information asked for I find this.

I read from his report. It is Calendar No. 2811, near the bottom of the third page:

"The price named in the bill, $600,000, for about 437,000 square feet of land, or about $1.37 a square foot, is in excess of the estimated value of the land by the board of assessors, their value being $230,000."

Mr. Speaker, I have had some experience, having bought a few lots during my life, and I found the assessor's value, as a rule, a pretty good criterion on which to act. On March 30, 1906, evidently a conscience was pricked, and a bill, H. R. 5102, was introduced for $550,000—$50,000 less. On February 16, 1907, conferees of the House and the Senate came to an agreement of $475,000, but it was not satisfactory to the House Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and the matter was dropped with the expiration of the Fifty-ninth Congress.

The thing took on new life, and on January 27, 1908, the bill S. 4441—which I have here—was reported for $423,000, a gradual coming down. That bill went directly to one of the appropriation committees, and on May 26 last, under a suspension of the rules, it was defeated by a vote of 57 for and 164 against.

Mr. NORRIS. That was this same bill?

Mr. ANDRUS. This same bill that is brought up to-day. Now, what have the Government and the people lost in these three years? We are talking now about $423,000, as against $600,000 three years ago, a saving to some one of $177,000. The interest on $600,000 for three years at 2 per cent is $36,000. It makes a total of $213,000. It may be a small sum in this House, but, Mr. Chairman, there are 10,000 boys in my district who would be exceedingly happy if in a legitimate way they could make that money in three years. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], who had control of the time in opposition, yielded me five minutes' time in which to oppose the bill. Having just heard Mr. ANDRUS make his statement above quoted, I said:

Mr. Speaker, when this identical bill, without the change of a letter, was voted on by yeas and nays in this House on the 26th day of May last, 164 noes were recorded as against 57 ayes. How many gentlemen are going to change, and what reason are you going to give for your flop in so short a time? Now, there will be a yea-and-nay vote at this time on this bill, and you will have to explain some day why you changed in so short a time without any new evidence or any new reason given for the change. * * * They started in on this tract at $600,000 and now they have got it down to $435,000. * * *

It will thus be seen that neither I nor Mr. ANDRUS said that Mr. Glover had ever asked or tried to sell the 100 acres of land for a price higher than $420,000, for which he claimed he held an option from the owners of the several tracts constituting the 100 acres. As I said on the 15th of January last, that I had never been a member of any committee to which any bill had been referred embracing any proposition to acquire this land and knew nothing about the facts, except what had been stated on the floor in debate and what appeared from a statement of Mr. Glover in a hearing before a subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations on the 15th day of May, 1908. I did not know but that the same land had been offered to the Government prior to the option of Mr. Glover. I never once intimated that he had ever asked for it more than appeared in the bill. By a misprint or mistake of the stenographer I was quoted as saying $435,000, instead of $423,000. But notwithstanding the evident purpose and intention of both Mr. ANDRUS and myself to be accurate in our statements as to all material facts, Mr. Glover, on the 30th day of December, 1912, in a hearing before the District Committee, which was investigating the office of commissioner of insurance in the District of Columbia, went out of his way and made a lengthy detailed statement as to his connection with the attempt to secure the passage of Senate bill No. 4441, of the Fifty-ninth Congress. This statement was made on oath as a witness and published as part of the hearings, appearing on pages 420 and 421 and other pages following in part 4 of said hearings. After quoting what I have just read as part of the remarks of Mr. ANDRUS and myself, on the 3d day of March, 1909, he proceeds:

> Mr. Chairman, the statement that I offered that property to the Congress of the United States at $600,000; that I was pricked by conscience and reduced the sum to $550,000; that it was embodied in any bill by my authority at $475,000, or, as Mr. SIMS says, it is now before this House at $435,000 is an absolute and unqualified falsehood.

Mr. Speaker, no graver charge could be made against a Member of this House than to charge that he had been guilty of uttering an absolute, unqualified falsehood in debate on the floor of this House. This statement of Mr. Glover was made voluntarily nearly four years after the 3d of March, 1909. A falsehood is a false statement made by a person who knew that it was false at the time he was making it.

The most casual reading of what was said by Mr. ANDRUS, as well as by myself, shows that neither of us said or intended to convey the impression that Mr. Glover had tried to palm off on the Government the land at a higher price than that mentioned in the bill, $423,000. Mr. Glover went out of his way to assume that we had said the things which he charges to have been an unqualified falsehood.

Mr. Speaker, I can not imagine why he wanted to try to injure either Mr. ANDRUS or myself in our representative capacities by putting things in our mouths which we had not said and then to indignantly charge falsehood to us. He manifested a most malignant spirit in doing so.

On page 420 of the same hearing, at the bottom of same, including one line at top of page 421, Mr. Glover said:

> I endeavored to have this option renewed for another year, having failed within the two years to cause the passage of this bill. After much difficulty I succeeded in having it continued for another year, in writing. A short time ago somebody told me that I had better get the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1909, of March 3; that I would probably find therein the cause of what I have been told has frequently occurred—a defense of my character by my friends before members of the House committees. Mr. Judson has told me that frequently he has had to defend me.
> I read this RECORD for the first time about a week ago.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I have no means of knowing whether he actually read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at the time of its issuance, but he was well aware of what occurred. As I said in my statement heretofore made, that I was in the Riggs Bank in November, 1909, and that Mr. Glover spoke to me about the matter, to the effect that the Government had lost the opportunity to get that splendid piece of land as an addition to Rock Creek Park by not accepting his option; that it was then gone forever. He then spoke of the fact that both Mr. ANDRUS and I in debate had made the statement that the land had been offered at $600,000, then at $550,000, then put in by the Senate at $475,000. He then pointed out to me that the land offered at those figures was the Meridian Hill tract and not the tract on which he had an option at $420,000. I then told him that I had simply followed Mr. ANDRUS, and that if anything had been said by me that did him an injustice that I would be glad to put anything in the RECORD that would set him right. In the same conversation he told me that a magazine article had been published using these statements I have just repeated, and that the magazine article had in substance charged that he had tried to sell the land to the Government at a higher price than called for in his option and had done him a great injustice. I then examined the RECORD and saw that neither I nor Mr. ANDRUS had stated that he had tried to sell the land for more than the option called for. I saw that the statement was that it had been offered for $600,000, and then for $550,000, but nothing in our statements charged even by implication that he had tried to sell the land at those figures. Hon. SAMUEL W. SMITH was present at least part of the time during this conversation.

But, Mr. Speaker, he did not have to read the RECORD of March 3, 1909, to know that such charges had been made as to a higher price having been asked for this identical land. My whole argument was that the land was not worth what was asked for it and that it was not rapidly rising in price, and all that I said was to justify that position. I had no purpose to injure Mr. Glover or to hurt him in any way, as anyone will see by reading the debate on the date of March 3, 1909. Mr. Glover knew that no such purpose was in my mind. Then, how unjust and how unfair and how malicious it was on his part, nearly four years afterwards, to say what he did of me in the hearing I have recited. He could have explained to that insurance investigating committee, a fact which he well knew, that Mr. ANDRUS, by a mistake easily made, in reading the report of the District Commissioners, which contained both tracts—Rock Creek and Meridian Hill—had read the part of the report referring to Meridian Hill and applied it to Rock Creek land. He could have said all that was necessary to set himself right and could have shown how the mistake had been made and no one would have been hurt or had any right to complain. But instead of doing that which would have been the decent thing to do, he falsely assumes that we had charged him with things that we did not charge, and calls my name specifically in connection with the charge that the statement was an absolute, unqualified falsehood. But in his anxious desire to injure Mr. ANDRUS and myself, not only with the Members of this House, but with all who read the papers here, he had placed his full, detailed statement in one of the Washington newspapers, for which, no doubt, he must have paid a good round sum of money, for no other purpose, that I can see, than to injure Mr. ANDRUS and myself. If he had not shown so much malice, I perhaps would not have made any reply, further than to state the bare facts connected with that particular transaction. In my statement on January 15 last I tried to be perfectly fair to Mr. Glover. I restrained my feelings and said nothing I did not feel fully warranted in saying. If anyone will read only so much of Mr. ANDRUS's speech and mine as Mr. Glover placed in the hearings before the District subcommittee on December 30, he will see that Mr. ANDRUS referred to bills by numbers and dates, and gave the correct date and number of the Senate report from which he read, which showed the tract of land offered first at $600,000 and afterwards at $550,000, and carried in a Senate amendment at $475,000, contained only 437,000 feet, which could not be, at most, much over 10 acres, while the Rock Creek Park tract, containing about 100 acres, when reduced to square feet would be more than 4,000,000 feet, or ten times as much land as the Meridian Hill tract.

All this was well known to Mr. Glover. He knew that Mr. ANDRUS had unintentionally made a mistake, and that I had accepted Mr. ANDRUS's statement in the best of faith. Mr. Speaker, a simple mistaken statement is not a falsehood of any kind, much less an absolute unqualified falsehood. Mr. Glover knew when he made the charge of falsehood that his charge was false, and the fact that he published that statement in the newspapers in Washington was conclusive evidence of a malicious purpose on his part to injure Mr. ANDRUS and myself. In my speech January 15 I did nothing but state simple facts, and all material facts are correctly stated. I may have made errors as to immaterial details. But I purposely refrained from making charges of bad conduct or bad faith upon the part of Mr. Glover. But notwithstanding my mild statement following such mean and unjust treatment on the part of Mr. Glover, he has since seen fit to publish in three of the newspapers in Washington of January 25, 1913, a most scurrilous and defamatory attack on me, for the publication of which he, no doubt, must have paid a large sum of money, establishing beyond doubt his malicious purpose to injure me. That publication makes this statement necessary. So I shall treat his newspaper attack somewhat in order.

First. As a justification for bringing into the hearing on the insurance investigation a matter in no way related to it he made the statement that he had never read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 3, 1909, and that only a week prior to his appearance before that committee he had been told by some one—whose name he withholds, like he did the fact that a Member of Congress owned some of the land he was trying to put off on the Government—that he had better read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 3, 1909.

Mr. Glover in his latest newspaper article says that I defeated his bill on March 3, 1909, by the so-called false statements about him. Mr. Speaker, I did not kill that bill by anything I said on March 3, 1909. It was already as dead as an Egyptian mummy. On May 26, 1908, that same Senate bill, S. 4441, was under consideration by the House under a motion to suspend the rules and pass it, at which time I had absolutely nothing to do with it. I did not open my mouth about it at that time. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] on that occasion demanded a second to the motion to suspend the rules, and under the rules acquired control of the 20 minutes' debate in opposition to the bill, and I now read from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what was said in debate on the bill at that time.

Mr. Speaker, in the debate on the Senate bill No. 4441, on the 26th day of May, 1908, on page 7000 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, first session of the Sixtieth Congress, I read the following, while the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] had the floor in opposition to the bill:

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. What was the price then?
Mr. BARTHOLDT. The price was just the same as it is now.
Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I have been told that several years ago, at least, the price was $600,000 against $450,000.
Mr. BARTHOLDT. That was many years ago.
Mr. RODENBERG. And it is cheaper now.

Mr. Speaker, in the same debate at the same time on the same page of the RECORD Mr. NORRIS, the gentleman from Nebraska, in debate on that bill, said:

Now, this matter has been before several committees. I was talking to-day to a Member, who was several years ago on the Committee on the District of Columbia, and he said that when he was on that committee this tract was offered for $600,000, a price then said to be very cheap, and they were urged to accept it before the option ran out.

While the bill was under consideration at that time Mr. Glover was sitting in the Members' gallery and distinctly heard every word that was said. He heard Mr. Gaines of West Virginia ask Dr. BARTHOLDT as to the fact of this land having been offered for $600,000. He heard Dr. BARTHOLDT reply "that was many years ago," thus admitting the fact that such a price had been at an earlier date asked. He heard Mr. Gaines use the words "and now offered at $450,000." He distinctly heard the speech of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] which I have just read. Why did he not fly into a rage, go into the press of the city and denounce all those honorable gentlemen as liars? I have my opinion as to why he did not do it. Although on a yea-and-nay vote the bill was defeated by a vote of more than three to one he still hoped that at some unwatched moment he might put that steal off on the Government. Now, will he claim that he did not know what was said in that debate, which he in person heard; that he did not read the RECORD, and that some friend has lately suggested to him to read the RECORD of that date?

Mr. Glover charges that it was the statements made by Mr. ANDRUS and myself, as to the land having been offered at a higher price than $425,000, that defeated the bill and deprived the Government of that beautiful piece of ground at much less than its value.

Mr. Speaker, he gives us entirely too much credit in this matter. That bill did not even have to be killed on March 3, 1909. It was already dead as Hector. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and the other gentlemen to whom he yielded time on May 26, 1908, are the gentlemen who are entitled to the credit of killing that odious bill. As I have stated, I took no part in the killing of the bill at the time it was actually killed, but when the attempt was made in the darkness of night on March 3, 1909, to resurrect that putrid corpse I used only five minutes in debate in an humble effort to show the House that it should not be resurrected.

Mr. Speaker, the only purpose in showing that the land had been offered at former periods at higher values was to meet the argument that the land was increasing or had increased in value. There was not the slightest intimation that Mr. Glover had tried to sell the land for a greater amount than named in his option. But with all these facts staring him in the face since the memorable fight, led by Mr. SHERLEY on May 26, 1908, Mr. Glover is pleased to charge that what Mr. ANDRUS and I said in the debate on the same bill on March 3, 1909, was an attack on him personally, and as an excuse for his belated and malicious charges against us, is that he did not know what had been said by us until about a week before he gave his mass of false statements to the investigation subcommittee of the District Committee on December 30, 1912. The only thing new that was brought out in the discussion on March 3, 1909, that was not fully discussed at the time Mr. SHERLEY made his successful onslaught on the bill in May, 1908, was the fact that I brought out then that a Member of the House at that time owned part of the land sought to be unloaded on the Government, which fact was unknown to me until a few days before the last attempt was made to pass the bill on March 3, 1909. Even this disclosure did not greatly strengthen the opposition to the bill. While this fact was unknown to the membership of this body when the bill was defeated in May, 1908, there were only 28 more votes cast against the measure on March 3, 1909, than on May 26, 1908, and only 26 fewer votes given for the bill on March 3 than on May 26, 1908. The vote for the bill May 26, 1908, was 57, against it 164. The vote for the bill March 3, 1909, being 31, and the vote against the bill was 192.

Mr. Speaker, in my remarks on January 15, 1913, I referred to the fact that the report made by the Appropriations Committee to accompany that bill in 1908 consisted of only four lines, and gave what I supposed was the reason for it, that the subject matter of the proposed legislation had been before the House before and was well known to Members. I had reference to the facts as to the land, its location, and the alleged reasons why we should purchase it.

I certainly did not mean to convey the idea that we knew all about the specific terms of the option claimed in favor of Mr. Glover, except what he had stated in a printed hearing before the Appropriations Committee. I never intended to be understood as meaning that the membership of the House knew anything about who the several owners of the land were. All we knew or could know was what had been stated by Mr. Glover in the hearing referred to and the report made to the Senate by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has the undisputed right to condemn every foot of land in the District of Columbia for public uses. The Government by this power has an option on every foot of land in this District, and the only benefit that is possible for the Government to receive by an option is in the price. It might be that one private individual by withholding the fact that the Government wanted a certain piece of land could get an option from another private individual at a less price than if the landowner knew that the Government wanted the land. Where is the man, if he knew an option was wanted on his land by another man for the purpose of letting the Government have it, that would be fool enough to give an option on it for less than he thought he could get for it under condemnation proceedings?

On page 420, part 4, of the hearings before the District Committee I read the following statement of Mr. Glover under oath as to his so-called option:

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Glover, do you desire to make any other statement?

Mr. GLOVER. I would like you to indulge me for a moment in connection with a matter that has had some inquiry made in connection with the value of the property known as Massachusetts Avenue Heights. I would like to state very briefly my connection with that property.

In 1906, desiring to bring the Potomac Park and the Rock Creek Park together—that is, assuming that the Zoological Park is a part of Rock Creek Park—I got an option on 100 acres of this property for the sum of $420,000. In 1907 I caused to be introduced into the Senate and House a bill looking to the purchase of this property at the option named, but with $3,000 added by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia for expenses that might be incurred in acquiring it.

Mr. JOHNSON. Who introduced those measures?
Mr. GLOVER. A Member of the House and a Member of the Senate.
Mr. JOHNSON. Do you recall whom?
Mr. GLOVER. I do not at the present moment. I am not sure that the commissioners did not ask for the introduction of this bill. I took the bill to the then Commissioners of the District of Columbia and they thoroughly approved of the scheme.

My option was for two years, and for two sessions of Congress this property was offered at the price named—$420,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. How was the property described? Was there any particular name for it?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes; it was the property lying between Connecticut Avenue and Massachusetts Avenue Bridges, and ran out to the Protestant Episcopal Cathedral Foundation. There were also 3½ acres south of the Massachusetts Avenue Bridge. It was my intention to continue down Rock Creek until these parks were finally joined. As the panic had created a very extremely critical and serious condition in the money market——

Mr. JOHNSON. Which panic?

Mr. GLOVER. The panic of 1907, which ran well into 1908 and 1909. I endeavored to have this option renewed for another year, having failed within the two years to cause the passage of this bill. After much difficulty I succeeded in having it continued for another year, in writing. A short time ago somebody told me that I had better get the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1909, of March 3; that I would probably find therein the cause of what I have been told has frequently occurred—a defense of my character by my friends before members of the House committees. Mr. Judson has told me that frequently he has had to defend me.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Tennessee is entitled to a quorum, and I make a point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMS. I do not want any quorum, and I hope the Democrats will not filibuster.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Mississippi withhold his point for a moment to allow me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee one question?

Mr. SISSON. I will withhold it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Does not the gentleman, as a Representative of long service in this House, known throughout the country, think that he can afford to drop this matter by saying that he is not a liar and that the other fellow is? [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMS. All of which might be absolutely true; but inasmuch as Mr. Glover has published a long detailed statement occupying an entire page in the newspaper, I feel bound to go a little more into the details.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi insist upon his point of no quorum?

Mr. SISSON. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and fifteen Members present—not a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The doorkeepers will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and seventy-four Members have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, it appears that Mr. Glover under oath, at his own request for permission to do so, made the above statement, a part of which was that he had an option for two years on the land referred to, and for two sessions of Congress the property was offered at the price of $420,000. He further says:

> I endeavored to have this option renewed for another year, having failed within the two years to cause the passage of this bill. After much difficulty I succeeded in having it continued for another year in writing.

Mr. Speaker, both these statements as to the length of time that the original and renewed options had to run before they expired, by specific terms, although made under the sanction of an oath before a committee of this House, are deliberate false statements, and known to be false when made. This fact I did not know when I made my statement on January 15, 1913, and never knew until the statement of Mr. Glover which appeared in the minutest detail in the Washington Post and several other papers on the 25th day of January, 1913, in which Mr. Glover publishes what he claims is a copy of his original option, which is as follows:

TEXT OF OPTION.

Articles of agreement made and concluded this 9th day of March, A. D. 1906, between the persons whose signatures are hereunto attached as owners of interests in the pieces or parcels of ground hereinafter described, constituting a part of what is known as the Thompson Syndicate property, title to which said property was vested in Charles J. Bell, Amos H. Plumb, and John Cassels by decree entered on the 15th day of April, 1903, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in equity cause No. 23345, parties of the first part, and Charles C. Glover, of the city of Washington, D. C., party of the second part:

Whereas the parties of the first part are the owners of the pieces and parcels of ground hereinafter described; and

Whereas the parties of the first part are willing that the said pieces and parcels of ground shall be made and shall become a public park upon the terms and conditions hereinafter stated; and

Whereas the party of the second part desires, without compensation, and in consideration of the public interests to be thereby promoted and subserved, to aid so far as he can properly do so to in having said pieces and parcels of ground made a public park on the terms and conditions hereinafter stated:

This agreement witnesseth, That the parties of the first part, each for himself or herself, and in respect of their several and respective interests each for himself and not one for the other, in consideration of the sum of $1 lawful money of the United States to each of them in hand paid by Charles C. Glover, before the signing and sealing of this agreement, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and in consideration of the other payments, and the performance of the conditions hereinafter specified, do hereby covenant, promise, and agree to and with the said Charles C. Glover to sell to the United States or the District of Columbia, for the purpose of a public park, for and in consideration and at the rate of $4,000 per acre and fraction of an acre, all those pieces and parcels of ground in the District of Columbia described as follows:

Parcel No. 1.—All that part of the aforesaid property lying to the south of the south building line of Massachusetts Avenue and to the east of the center line of Rock Creek Drive, as said drive is shown on the plan of the permanent system of highways in the District of Columbia, and containing 3½ acres, more or less.

Also parcel No. 2: All that part of the aforesaid property described as follows: Beginning at the center of Rock Creek Drive as shown on the said plan of the permanent system of highways, where said center line crosses the property line between the said property of the Thompson Syndicate and Woodley Park; thence southerly along said property line to the boundary of the said property of the Thompson Syndicate at or near Rock Creek; thence along said propertly line down Rock Creek to the north building line of Massachusetts Avenue; thence northwesterly along said building line of Massachusetts Avenue to the point where the property line of the said property of the Thompson Syndicate leaves said avenue; thence following said property line in a northerly and northwesterly direction to its intersection with the north building line of Observatory Circle; thence along said building line of said circle in a westerly direction to its intersection with the center line of Thirty-fourth Street, as said Thirty-fourth Street is shown on said plan of the permanent system of highways; thence due north along the center line of said Thirty-fourth Street to the center line of Garfield Street, as said Garfield Street is shown on said plan of the permanent system of highways; thence due east along the center line of Garfield Street to a point 325 feet distant at right angles from the center line of Cleveland Avenue, as said avenue is shown on said plan of the permanent system of highways; thence southeasterly and parallel to said center line of Cleveland Avenue and 325 feet distant therefrom to the point where said line intersects the center line of Twenty-ninth Street, as said Twenty-ninth Street is shown on said plan of the permanent system of highways—said line running parallel to Cleveland Avenue to be the center of a 90-foot street; thence southeasterly by a reversed curved line to the intersection of the center line of Rock Creek Drive, as said Rock Creek Drive is shown on said plan of the permanent system of highways—said reversed curved line to be the center of a 90-foot street; thence about 350 feet along the center line of said Rock Creek Drive to the point of beginning; and containing 84½ acres more or less; the pieces or parcels of land aforesaid containing together 88 acres of land more or less.

A further condition and consideration for the conveyance by the aforesaid trustees to the United States of the pieces or parcels of land above described is that, that portion of Benton Street, as shown on said plan of the permanent system of highways shall be abandoned by the United States from where said Benton Street intersects the reversed curved line referred to in the aforesaid description of the land to be taken for a park eastwardly to the junction of said Benton Street with said Rock Creek Drive; the purpose of said abandonment being that the reversed curved street is to be the boundary of the park at this point and shall take the place of that portion of Benton Street proposed to be abandoned.

A further condition and consideration for the conveyance of the above-described pieces and parcels of land by the aforesaid trustees to the United States is, that wherever the park line follows the center of a street as now laid out on the said plan of the permanent system of highways, or a street to be laid out as provided herein, a strip of land 30 feet wide on each side of said center street line shall be dedicated for roadway and sidewalk purposes by the United States and the aforesaid trustees out of and from any piece or parcels of lands within said 30-foot strips owned or that may be owned by them severally.

The covenants hereby made and entered into are upon the express condition that they shall be executed in their entirety, and that all and not a portion of the pieces and parcels of land herein provided to be set apart and become a park shall be taken and paid for according to the terms herein set forth.

Upon the performance of the conditions herein prescribed and the full payment of the purchase money herein provided for to John Cassels, Charles J. Bell, and Amos H. Plumb, the trustees who hold the title to the above described property; the said trustees and the survivor or survivors of them shall and they are hereby directed to make, execute, and deliver proper conveyances, and to do and perform all acts necessary in their judgment to carry into effect the purposes of this agreement.

It is further agreed that this agreement shall continue in force until the end of the first session of the present Congress, the Fifty-ninth Congress, and shall then cease and determine and be of no effect, unless the legislation herein contemplated and specified be obtained and an appropriation made for the purchase money herein designated at said first session.

This agreement is to bind as well the heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns of the parties hereto as the parties themselves.

This option shows that it was given on the 9th day of March, 1906. Next to the last provision of this contract reads as follows:

It is further agreed that this agreement shall continue in force until the end of the first session of the present Congress, the Fifty-ninth Congress, and shall then cease and determine and be of no effect, unless the legislation herein contemplated and specified be obtained and an appropriation made for the purchase money herein designated at said first session.

Mr. Speaker, the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, mentioned in this bogus option, had been in existence at the date of this agreement since the first Monday in December, 1905, or more than three months, and under no conceivable circumstances could have continued for two years from that date, as sworn to by Mr. Glover. The first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress did in fact expire by adjournment June 30, 1906, and by the specific and definite provision of the option it expired on that date, as no legislation had been obtained and no appropriation made as provided during the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress. So that this option became null and void within 3 months and 21 days from its date, instead of continuing for two years, as falsely stated by Mr. Glover.

The so-called renewal or extension of this defunct option, which Mr. Glover swore he had such hard work to secure, which he said was for one year and in writing, and made a part of Mr. Glover's statement in the Washington Post of January 25, 1913, is as follows:

OPTION WAS EXTENDED.

Articles of agreement made and concluded this 15th day of January, A. D. 1908, by and between Charles J. Bell, Amos H. Plumb, and John Cassels, trustees, under decree entered April 15, 1903, in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, in equity cause 23345, parties of the first part, and Charles C. Glover, of the city of Washington, party of the second part.

Whereas by an agreement bearing date the 9th day of March, 1906, an option was given to Charles C. Glover to purchase two certain parcels of land, a copy of which agreement is hereto attached and made a part hereof; and Therefore it is hereby mutually agreed to and with each other that the said option shall be held and considered as continuing and being in full force, operation, and effect until the termination of the first session of the present Congress (the Sixtieth Congress) and for such time thereafter as may be necessary to obtain the payment of any sum or sums of money appropriated at said session of Congress, and shall then cease and determine and be of no effect.

So, Mr. Speaker, it appears from this extension or renewal option, entered into on the 15th day of January, 1908, that the option of March 9, 1906, was to be held and considered as continuing and being in full force, operation, and effect until the termination of the first session of the Sixtieth Congress and for such time thereafter as might be necessary to obtain the payment of any sums of money appropriated at said first session of the Sixtieth Congress, and should then cease and determine and be of no effect. At the date of this alleged renewal contract, or option, the first session of the Sixtieth Congress had been in existence since the first Monday in December, 1907, and actually terminated by final adjournment May 30, 1908. So at the expiration of 4 months and 15 days from the date of this bogus renewal contract the same had terminated and ceased to be of binding force and effect instead of being for one year from its date, as sworn to by Mr. Glover.

So, you see, Mr. Speaker, that the first or original option ceased to exist within 3 months and 21 days from its date instead of 2 years, and the renewal option became void 4 months and 15 days from its date instead of 1 year from its date. How is Mr. Glover going to excuse himself for swearing falsely in his statement of December 30, 1912, with both the original and renewal options in his possession?

Mr. Glover says in substance that I am somewhat reckless in my speeches. That may be true, but I have never been accused of being reckless when I am making statements under oath.

This copy of the original option contract and renewal of same, Mr. Speaker, bears all the earmarks of being bogus, as being mere framed-up counterfeit devices to be used by Mr. Glover in his efforts to get Congress to purchase the land covered by them. In the first place, both of them are dated after the regular sessions of the Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Congresses were well advanced, and both provided that unless Congress acted and appropriated the money for the purchase of the lands during the then pending first sessions of the Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth Congresses that the options were to become void. All this was done, we are forced to believe, to enable Mr. Glover to urge hasty action by Congress under the spurious claim that the options could not be renewed and that the land was rapidly advancing in price. We all know that 1906 was the banner year of all the years since the War between the States for its record of prosperity and good times. This original option expired by the adjournment of Congress on June 30, 1906, so that the owners of the land had all of the eight months from June 30, 1906, to March 4, 1907, the most prosperous of any eight months in 40 years prior thereto, with no option on their lands in which to dispose of same to the best advantage. Then followed the remainder of the year 1907—the panic year—and until the 15th day of January, 1908, when this bogus option was continued, with no sale of this land. We see that this land had been free from any option from June 30, 1906, to January 15, 1908, a period of 1 year 6 months and 15 days.

On the 15th day of May, 1908, just four months after the bogus renewal contract had been made, a hearing was had before the subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations, presided over by Mr. Tawney, who was at that time chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, which hearings were printed. From a copy of the printed hearings I read the following:

The CHAIRMAN. At the same figure as was originally offered for any of them?

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Tawney, it is needless for me to say that there are no commissions or charges or benefits to be had out of this transaction. It is purely for the benefit of the city.

The CHAIRMAN. The question may be asked if this bill is reported to the House, and in that event I wanted to be in a position to state the fact.

Mr. SMITH. The options run to you personally, and you would turn them over without profit?

Mr. GLOVER. Absolutely.

And now along that line I just want to say one word about the value of property in that location. I bought for the cathedral—I am one of the trustees, and I practically started the whole cathedral proposition—I bought the property to the westward of this tract several years ago, and we paid $8,000 an acre. The ground was exactly similar to this property that Senator Nixon has just purchased, and he bought it in the spring, and he bid $6,000 or $7,000 an acre for it—26 acres. The ground near these houses has been bought for $1 per square foot. We are getting some of the same kind of ground in this tract. There is not an acre of ground in this property that could be bought for less than $6,000 to $8,000 per acre.

Mr. Speaker, you will see from what I have read, as appears on the top of page 8 of the printed hearings, that Mr. Glover uses the words, referring to the lands embraced in his bogus option:

There is not an acre of ground in this property that could be bought for less than $6,000 to $8,000 per acre.

That statement covered each and every acre wherever situate, but it turns out to be a fact that about two years after the date of this reckless statement by Mr. Glover 17½ acres of this very land were given free to the District of Columbia for park purposes.

Mr. Speaker, in the same hearing, as appears on page 9 of the printed report of same, I read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. How is it, Mr. Glover, with respect to the 88 or 98 acres; would it be possible for you to have the option renewed another year?

Mr. GLOVER. No, sir; that is out of the question, Mr. Tawney. They have assessed this ground at $7,500 an acre. The assessment has gone up tremendously.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The assessed valuation of it?

Mr. GLOVER. Yes; they have put it up enormously, and justly so. It is a pretty fine piece of ground. Bell told me the other day that they hardly knew what to do about this thing.

The CHAIRMAN. You think it would be impossible to renew the option?

Mr. GLOVER. Absolutely.

We see that Mr. Glover said at that time that the land had been assessed at $7,500; that the assessment had gone up tremendously, and, strange to state, for more than one year and a half, from June 30, 1906, to January 15, 1908, during all of which time this land was advancing in this skyrocket fashion, no sale of it had been made, and an old option, taken in 1906 at $4,000 an acre, was renewed at the same price, January 15, 1908. At the time Mr. Glover made this statement of the assessed value by adding one-half of assessed value to assessed value, we have the market value at that time of $11,250 per acre. If we can believe anything that Mr. Glover says about this matter, the very day he made this statement the 100 acres of land covered by his option at its market value was worth $1,125,000. The option by its terms expired May 30 of that year, 1908, being the day of adjournment of first session of Sixtieth Congress. From that day hence there was no option on that land or on any portion of it. But notwithstanding this fact, during the winter of 1908 and 1909, up to and including March 3, 1909, with no option of any kind on any of the land, Mr. Glover was wearing himself out and the Members of the House to a frazzle to induce the House to pass Senate bill 4441, providing for the purchase of this land for $400,000, when he had stated upon his honor before a committee of the House that there was not an acre that could be bought for less than six or eight thousand dollars; that it was assessed at $7,500 an acre, making the market value $11,250 an acre, or $1,125,000 for the 100 acres. How can anyone escape the conclusion that the option was all a bogus, fraudulent, trumped-up device to be used by Mr. Glover to cause Members of Congress to believe that if it was not taken advantage of during the two sessions mentioned that it would be too late?

There is other evidence of the fraudulent character of this make-believe option. The option on its face discloses the fact that the Government was to be the real purchaser and not Mr. Glover; that this fact was well known to the men who gave the option. I ask in all seriousness who was Charles J. Bell, that he had to have a go-between to aid him in persuading Congress to accept what we are asked to believe was in a large measure a donation to the Government of a large amount of money? Who was John Cassels that he needed anybody to enable him to get legislation through Congress? We all know that Mr. Bell is one of the best-known citizens in Washington; that he is president of the American Security & Trust Co.; that he is a man of large business affairs and wide experience and a good judge of real estate values in the District of Columbia. We all know that Mr. John Cassels was an attorney for the Pennsylvania Railroad Co., and often appeared before committees of Congress in favor of or in opposition to proposed legislation. Why did he need Mr. Glover's assistance in getting Congress to take land off his hands at a loss to him or those whom he represented?

Do we not all know that Mr. Bell, Mr. Cassels, Mr. Plumb, and the Member of Congress who gave this so-called option knew that they could have joined in a letter to the Speaker of the House, the Vice President, the chairmen of the proper committees of the two Houses of Congress offering to sell these lands for park purposes and that it would have been regarded with favor if the proposition had been a meritorious one? Why did these men want any lobbyist to press an honest proposition on Congress?

Mr. Speaker, is it possible to suppose that the owners of these lands and these trustees representing owners, after the option they had renewed January 15, 1908, had expired, and after the land had gone up, in the glowing language of Mr. Glover, "tremendously," with no obligation—legal, equitable, or moral—resting upon them, on March 3, 1909, would have conveyed these lands to the District or the Government at the alleged option price if the bill had passed March 3, 1909? Not on your life.

Will anybody believe that these honorable gentlemen would sit idly by knowing that Mr. Glover, with no sort of an agreement or option after May 30, 1908, was using all his wits, with a few extra smiles, to induce Congress to pass a bill to purchase a lot of land at a price named in a lapsed and void option, with no intention of accepting the price named in the bill? I have not the slightest doubt that if the bill under consideration March 3, 1909, had passed that the land would have been conveyed to the Government at the price named in the bill, not because of any valid, binding, then existing contract required them to do so, but because of the fact that the price was a good one and the sale to the Government a wise and profitable transaction.

Mr. Speaker, there are other reasons besides these I have enumerated appearing in the hearings, and in the face of the so-called option, that leads me to believe that it was a bogus device put into the hands of Mr. Glover to enable him to secure the passage of the bill, that the owners were anxious to sell the land at the price named, and if no option had ever been given they would have jumped at the opportunity to have disposed of the land at the price named. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that after the owners found out by repeated failures of Mr. Glover to fool Congress, that Congress had gotten on to his lobbying curves, that they quit fooling with him and gave one-fifth of the 84½ acre tract, 17½ acres, to the District of Columbia without money and without price, after Mr. Glover had solemnly assured the Appropriations Committee that there was not an acre of the land embraced in the option that could be purchased for less than $6,000 or $8,000 per acre.

Mr. Speaker, I have confined this statement wholly to matters directly connected with the attempt to sell this 99.74 acres of land to the Government, covered by the so-called option of Mr. Glover. I pass over all other matters in both his statements before the District Committee in its insurance investigation and also in Mr. Glover's long statement published in the Washington papers of January 25, 1913, not that I admit or deny any of his statements as to other matters, but because I had no connection with the legislation concerning anything else except the 100 acres covered by the alleged option of Mr. Glover, dated March 9, 1906, and claimed to have been renewed January 15, 1908, and one of my reasons for not doing so is that I do not wish to add further to the mortification and humiliation of a dishonored, discredited, self-impeached man.

Mr. Speaker, I do not desire and will not longer take the time of the House when it has important and urgent business to transact.

In justice to Mr. Glover, I ask unanimous consent to print his entire article in connection with my remarks in the RECORD, and hope that nobody will object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print the Glover article in connection with his remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky objects.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF JURISTS (H. DOC. NO. 1343).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of State inclosing a report, with accompanying papers, of the delegates of the United States to the International Commission of Jurists, which met at Rio de Janeiro in June last.

WM. H. TAFT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 5, 1913.

QUESTION OF A QUORUM.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order on the ground that it is dilatory.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, in that connection——

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions——

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, in that connection, may I submit an authority to the Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Authority on what?

Mr. SAUNDERS. On the ruling which the Speaker has just made. In strict conformity with the precedents if it is evident to the Speaker that there is no quorum present then the point of no quorum, even if dilatory, must be sustained. Such is the ruling of Mr. Speaker Reed, and the situation is not affected by the fact that a roll call has developed a quorum. If a roll call has developed the presence of a quorum and the point of no quorum is made, the Speaker being satisfied that a quorum is present, is justified in holding the motion to be dilatory, and is not required to count.

The SPEAKER. It has been the rule ever since the present occupant of the Chair has been in this House, 18 years, that when a roll call has been had and a quorum is developed, if within two or three minutes or something like that, three or four minutes, some gentleman raises the point again, it has been ruled out of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to take up the time of the Speaker or the House with a matter that has been definitely settled contrary to my contention. It is perfectly true that a recent roll call has shown the presence of a quorum, and if the Speaker is now satisfied, upon an inspection of the House, that a quorum is present, he is justified in holding the point of no quorum to be dilatory. But if the Speaker, and this is Mr. Reed's ruling, even if a roll call shows a quorum, is satisfied that a quorum is not present, a different situation is presented, and the point of order is well taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not satisfied——

Mr. MANN. Will the Speaker permit a word to refresh his recollection? In a former Congress, when Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS was the minority leader, there was an election case on before the House and a roll call was had. Immediately after the roll call the Members on the Democratic side disappeared, having gone out to break a quorum. During the roll call Mr. DALZELL, of Pennsylvania, was in the chair and held, the point of no quorum being made, that the House having disclosed by a roll call that a quorum was present the Chair declined to count to see whether a quorum was present, although, as a matter of fact, there was a quorum present at the time, and the Speaker will remember that as a result of that ruling the gentleman from Missouri, now the Speaker, then a Member of the minority, following the leadership of Mr. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, helped out a filibuster during the entire balance of the session as a protest against that ruling.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman who occupies the chair is right now and was wrong then.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I am not without authority, and I would not have consumed the time of the Chair for a moment——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Except for the following ruling:

The Chair does not feel quite certain that there is a quorum now. The fact that it is dilatory does not make any difference, if there is not a quorum present. (Hinds, sec. 5725.)

Now, the Chair has counted the House often, and looking over this House he can readily see that there is barely a quorum of the Committee of the Whole present, much less a quorum of the entire body of the House. If the Chair thinks there is a quorum present, of course the point of order should be overruled. But if it is apparent to him that a quorum is not present, then dilatory or not the point of order should be sustained.

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair holds the motion is dilatory.

Mr. CANNON. Regular order!

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, let me say a word, as I made the point of order. The Constitution requires, of course, for the transaction of all business that a quorum shall be present. Now, if it is doubtful in the mind of the Speaker whether a quorum is or is not present, under the Constitution it is the duty of the Speaker, I respectfully submit, to determine affirmatively that there is a quorum present. We are entitled under the Constitution to have a quorum present, and for that reason I demand that a quorum be present before we proceed to transact further business, and it is patent that there is no quorum present. The Chair can look over the House and count them, as I have done.

Mr. SAUNDERS. This proposition is like a call for the yeas and nays. It is a constitutional right. Even if it is made for a dilatory purpose, the call for the yeas and nays must be entertained. The Chair can rely upon a roll call recently made, and his own inspection of the House, to justify a belief that a quorum is present, and rule accordingly. But if his inspection satisfies him that a quorum is not present, the constitutional right to a quorum is presented, and the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, it is clear to the Speaker, to others, and to myself that this is a filibuster. Three minutes have elapsed since it was disclosed by a roll call that a quorum was present, and I ask that the Speaker see to it that this filibuster stop now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not any power to squelch a filibuster.

Mr. CANNON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. And evidently there is not a quorum present. There are two constitutional rights that Members have—one is to have a quorum here, and the other is to have the yeas and nays if they can get sufficient Members to support the demand.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the Chair hold there is no quorum present?

The SPEAKER. The Speaker holds there is no quorum present.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Then I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call there are 261 Members who have answered to their names—a quorum.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors, and the Clerk will call the committees.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

Mr. HEFLIN (when the Committee on Industrial Arts and Exhibitions was called). Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the bill (H. R. 27876) to provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, Union Calendar No. 416, and ask for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] calls up the bill H. R. 27876, on the Union Calendar, and the House automatically resolves itself into Committee——

Mr. SISSON rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SISSON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently there is a quorum present, and the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, pending that suggestion of going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, I ask unanimous consent to limit debate to two hours, one hour to be controlled by me (the chairman of the committee) and one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER].

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman mean general debate?

Mr. HEFLIN. I mean general debate.

Mr. MANN. If that should be agreed to, how much time will probably be allowed under the five-minute rule?

Mr. HEFLIN. It would be one hour to a side.

Mr. MANN. No; there are 10 sections to the bill. How much time will be allowed under the five-minute rule? There is quite a contest over certain sections of the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is not a very long bill, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is quite a long bill, the gentleman's assertion to the contrary.

The SPEAKER. That matter would be in control of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but largely in the hands of the gentleman in charge of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that. Pending the going into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks unanimous consent that general debate shall be limited to two hours. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The House resolves itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 27876) to provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, with Mr. JAMES in the chair.

On assuming the chair Mr. JAMES was greeted with applause.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 27876) to provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEFLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to give notice, or rather suggest at the outset, that we consume 30 minutes' time to be controlled by myself in support of the bill and 30 minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] in opposition to the bill, and at the expiration of that hour I shall move that the committee rise and report the bill back to the House.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman at any time, under the rules, can move, after general debate has been had, to rise and go back into the House, if he has a majority with him and moves to limit general debate. That is the only way it can be done, as I understand it. The gentleman could, after talking five minutes, if he chooses——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Do I understand the gentleman from Alabama now to say that he proposes to do that at the end of an hour?

Mr. CANNON. As I understood the gentleman, he proposes to do that at the end of the hour, perhaps a little before that time.

Mr. HEFLIN. Unless we can agree.

Mr. CANNON. There has got to be an amicable agreement.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for order. I do not know what the conversation is that is going on over there.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, the gentleman proposes, after he talks, to move to rise and go back into the House.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that if he believes he, as a member of the minority, can gag and rule and run this House in the same arbitrary manner as he did when he was Speaker of the House, he can not do it as he imagines.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, the raw head and bloody bones! [Laughter.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The committee can rise when it so determines, so that the House shall have ample opportunity to consider this bill fully.

Mr. HEFLIN. After the 30 minutes' time has been controlled by this side and 30 minutes by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], I shall move that the committee rise and go back to the House.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that this side of the House is entirely eliminated from the House? [Laughter.]

Mr. HEFLIN. No. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MANN. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall not shut out any gentleman of the minority who wishes to have time in opposition to the bill or who is in favor of it. How much time does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] desire?

Mr. COLLIER. One hour will be enough.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, I should like to have some time.

Mr. HEFLIN. We can not agree on one hour, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. BORLAND. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that there can be no limitation of time for general debate in the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. Except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PAGE. Except by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen desiring to oppose the bill will have ample opportunity to do so. The Sixty-second Congress has gone upon record as favoring an exposition to be held at San Francisco. I espoused the cause of New Orleans when these two cities were asking for the privilege of holding that exposition. San Francisco was victorious on that occasion. She stated at that time, as I understand, that she would not ask for any aid from the Government. The position of New Orleans was the same, except that she stipulated in her bill an appropriation of a million or a million and a half dollars for a Government exhibit. San Francisco did not at that time ask for a Government exhibit. I never understood the friends of either place to say that they did not expect the Government to pay for its own exhibit. I favor a Government exhibit at an exposition like this, which will be in celebration of the greatest engineering feat in the history of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. HEFLIN. I had rather not be interrupted at this time.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I simply call attention to a statement made by the former chairman of the committee over which you now preside, dealing with the subject of the statement you have just made.

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to yield to my friend from Texas, but I prefer that the gentleman do not interrupt me at this time. The gentleman who was then chairman will have a chance to speak for himself.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; for a suggestion.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. It is perfectly manifest that all parliamentary privileges are going to be exercised against this bill. Why would it not be wise for the gentleman from Alabama, in charge of the bill, to move that the committee do now rise and go into the House for the purpose of fixing a limit on this debate? It can be done now, and I think that is the only way in which the gentleman can get this bill through this House on this Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HEFLIN. In reply to that I desire to say to the gentleman that I think some Members need to be enlightened before we go back into the House, and I want to give both sides a chance to discuss it. I will take advantage of the opportunity at the proper time to move to go into the House to limit debate. I see some gentlemen present who would like to have the opportunity to make the point of no quorum the moment that we get back into the House. Some gentlemen are good at making points of no quorum when they have no argument of merit to make against a proposition and some are remarkably gifted for the performance of that important function in the House. [Laughter.] I never object to gentlemen making these points when they really want to transact business, but I never like to see filibustering of this kind. If gentlemen want to oppose this measure, let them do so in the open in the committee or in the House.

At the celebration to be held in San Francisco, on the shores of the mighty Pacific, in honor of the completion of the Panama Canal, I favor a Government exhibit. I favored a Government exhibit at New Orleans, and I will not now deny to San Francisco what I favored for New Orleans then. San Francisco has made great preparations, and I bid her and that western section of the Republic godspeed in that great celebration. [Applause.] The section that I represent does not want to hamper San Francisco in the least, but it wants to help her in holding this great exposition. [Applause.] The Senator, John T. Morgan, who represented my State for 30 years with distinction and great honor, is the father of the Isthmian Canal. [Applause.] He did not get this canal cut exactly where he wanted it, but for 30 years he advocated in the Senate a great Isthmian Canal, and before he died he realized in a sense his fond dream, for the Government took steps to open up that great canal, uniting the two oceans. [Applause.] The completion of that canal will be of great benefit to the South and the whole country. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, the great dignity of this Government is now at stake. This Congress has gone upon record on this proposition. We have requested the President of the United States to issue invitations to foreign Governments to come and participate in the celebration of the completion of the Panama Canal.

Mr. Chairman, do Representatives here wish to see England, the mother country, come with her exhibits, costing a million or two million dollars, celebrating a great American project, and find our Government unrepresented there? Would gentlemen like to see our Government there with no exhibit demonstrating to the world our great industrial growth and development and showing to the nations of this earth our progress along all lines in the arts of peace and in war? I can not believe that gentlemen would have us invite foreign nations to come to this exposition and then not be there officially ourselves. I would not vote to give to San Francisco money as you gave it to St. Louis. When St. Louis held her exposition the Government appropriated $1,579,000 for a Government exhibit. That was in 1904. Eight years and more have elapsed. We have developed marvelously since that time and to-day we are the greatest country on earth, standing on a hill with our light shining that the nations may look upon it and be lifted up in the love of the liberty that we enjoy. [Applause.]

Five million dollars, as I recall, were given to the St. Louis Exposition—$5,000,000 besides a loan which St. Louis paid back. If these figures are correct the Government was out on account of the St. Louis Exposition six and a half million dollars. Mr. Chairman, we are now about to celebrate at San Francisco the completion of the great Panama Canal with the world as our guest.

The committee has reported a bill appropriating $2,000,000 providing for a Government exhibit. What else? Out of that appropriation must come the construction of buildings under the supervision and direction of Government officials. These buildings on the military reservation at San Francisco are to be used by the Government, and saving to the Government $72,000 a year for rent now being paid for the use of buildings there.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. When the proposition was before the House as to which place we should have the exposition, did not the proposition for New Orleans carry an appropriation of $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit and a Government building, and the San Francisco proposition carry nothing? Did not the gentleman himself and other Members, in favor of San Francisco, all say that the San Francisco proposition meant no appropriation of any amount whatever?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have already stated that situation.

Mr. MANN. And the distinction between the two propositions was that New Orleans carried $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit, and San Francisco carried nothing for a Government exhibit?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is correct, in part. San Francisco did not at that time ask for a Government exhibit. That was nearly three years ago, in the Sixty-first Congress. This is the Sixty-second Congress. Now, we are approaching the time when if there is to be a Government exhibit it is time to go to work on the grounds and get ready, and name a commission to act for the United States. Twenty-five nations have said they were coming to this Panama Exposition.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Did not gentlemen speaking for San Francisco on the floor of the House at the time and did not the minority of the gentleman's Committee on Arts and Expositions, presenting minority views in favor of San Francisco, all state that there would be no money asked for in the future on behalf of San Francisco?

Mr. HEFLIN. I think that is correct. No money is now asked for San Francisco, except in the shape of a Government exhibit and buildings to belong to the Government for all time after the exposition. [Applause.]

New Orleans, as we stated, asked for an appropriation. New Orleans provided that the company should pay the salary of these commissioners. This bill provides the same, and San Francisco stands ready to carry out that part of the original program, as I understand it. There is no expense on the part of the Government. The Government is giving no money to help conduct the exposition in San Francisco. The Government is not asked to do as it did at St. Louis—making a gift of three million or four million or five million dollars—but two millions only to have a Government exhibit and have public buildings erected for the use and benefit of the Government after the exhibition is over. [Applause.]

I did not know, Mr. Chairman, that we were going to have such a hurrah over an exposition that looked toward the display of the physical evidence of the material growth and development of our great country.

Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the Louisiana delegation will oppose this bill. They made a gallant fight for this exposition, and I stood with them in that fight, and, as I understood it then and understand it now, I would not vote to appropriate money for the use and benefit of San Francisco in carrying on the exposition except in the sense that it is really meant, namely, for only a Government exhibit; and that is what this bill has confined itself to. San Francisco pays the salary of the commissioners, and seven have been provided for, the lowest number ever provided for service at a great international exposition.

Mr. Chairman, it is high time that something were being done to let this commission get in action to communicate with the nations of the earth. Japan, I am informed, has already announced that she will use $1,000,000 in her exhibit at this exposition in America in helping to celebrate the completion of a great American engineering feat. Japan, we are told, proposes to come into the United States and give that much money, and then what? Donate the buildings to the United States when the exposition is over, showing her deep appreciation of the relations existing between the United States and Japan. [Applause.] And yet some gentlemen oppose the appropriation of $2,000,000 for us to have our own exhibit at this great exposition and construct buildings for the use of the Government.

Some of these gentlemen who think that their constituents want them to economize in this manner mistake the temper of their people. The Democratic Party is not the party to defeat projects that look to expanding our commerce and establishing more peaceful relations with the world at large. [Applause.] The Democratic Party is a constructive party and not a destructive party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We are keeping abreast with the times. The Democratic Party in this Nation wants a proper exhibit made at that great exposition. The Democratic platform at Baltimore pledges every kindly aid to that project. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG].

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, two years ago Congress passed a joint resolution authorizing the President to invite foreign nations to participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, which is to be held in San Francisco in 1915, to commemorate the completion of the Panama Canal. In accordance with the provisions of that resolution the President has extended an invitation to all foreign nations to make an exhibit of their products and resources at this exposition. Something like 25 of the nations have accepted the invitation and have signified their intention to participate. Some of the larger countries of Europe, however, among them Great Britain, Germany, Austria, Russia, and Italy, have not yet indicated their acceptance, and their failure to do so is due to the fact that the Government of the United States, up to this time, has not made any provision for its own exhibit at this exposition. They are naturally anxious to know what we intend to do ourselves before they take final action. By the very terms of the resolution we have deliberately assumed the attitude of host to the nations of the earth, and up to this time we have neglected to perform the duties that devolve upon us as a host, and if we should persist in this neglect, if we should refuse to do that which our invited guests had a right to assume that we would do, we would not be justified in complaining if those nations should ignore our invitation or if, having accepted it, they should withdraw their acceptance.

Mr. Chairman, I take it that every American citizen, regardless of his individual preference as to the location of the exposition in the first instance, now that San Francisco has been selected as the place in which this great international event is to be celebrated, is sincerely and deeply desirous of making this exposition a success in every particular.

I believe that the great majority of the people of this country believe that the honor and the prestige and the dignity of our Nation are involved in making this exposition a success, and I do not believe that the American Congress will be so unmindful of its plain duty in the premises as to humiliate our country before the Nations of the earth. Mr. Chairman, there has been some criticism of San Francisco in regard to this exposition bill. I want to say here and now that I introduced this bill not at the solicitation of the gentleman from California, but on my own initiative, because I believed it was absolutely right. I have never believed that this exposition would or could be a success so far as foreign exhibits are concerned unless our own Nation has performed its duty and made suitable provision for its own exhibit as an evidence of good faith and its belief in the international importance of this event. I believe that the United States should have an exhibit at San Francisco; and inasmuch as this is our own exposition, commemorating a most important event in our own history, I beleive that that exhibit should be the largest and most comprehensive of any nation that participates in that exposition. We claim, and justly so, that we are the greatest and the most advanced nation on earth, and I believe in giving the people a practical illustration of the truth of that claim. The patriotic citizens of San Francisco have raised the enormous sum of approximately $20,000,000 to insure the success of this great undertaking so far as they are concerned. They have more than done their duty, and they are entitled to the thanks of the American people for this wonderful exhibition of public spirit and civic pride. [Applause.] They have not received a single dollar of financial aid from the Government of the United States in the shape of a loan or a donation, and that is something that has never occurred before in the history of international expositions in this country. Heretofore Congress has always been called upon to make a loan or a donation to assist the citizens of a municipality that has undertaken the task of conducting a successful exposition of this kind. At Chicago in 1894 Congress appropriated $5,800,000 in support of the Columbian Exposition. At St. Louis, a little over 10 years ago, Congress made a donation of $5,000,000 outright in support of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition, and later on contributed $1,600,000 for our Government exhibit there, making a total of $6,600,000. Later on they loaned the exposition company $4,600,000, which they subsequently returned to the Treasury.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield? Is it not a fact that the city of San Francisco does not ask and does not desire this appropriation?

Mr. RODENBERG. They desire it, of course, because they want to make this exposition a success. They have not asked for it, however. I regard it as a matter of absolute right, as a matter of justice, taking into consideration the great work that they have done, that they should have this appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Will the gentleman yield in order that I may read him what the gentleman himself said on this subject in the last two years?

Mr. RODENBERG. The gentleman will have plenty of time after a while to be recognized in opposition to the bill. I decline to yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, the bill under consideration carries an appropriation of $2,000,000 for a Government building and a Government exhibit at San Francisco. It will be noticed also that the Government building to be erected there is to be of a permanent nature for the future use of the War Department in San Francisco. The exposition is being held at the Presidio, which is a national military reservation, and these buildings are to be used later on by the War Department. Figures were given to me to-day showing that this Government is to-day paying $72,000 annually in the shape of rent for the use of the War Department in that city.. I regard this as a very wise and sensible provision, because it is a guaranty that all of the moneys expended in the building will not be wasted, but that the buildings will be put to practical use in the future, and this enormous rental will be saved to the Government. I do not consider an appropriation of $2,000,000 as at all excessive; on the contrary, I regard it as a very modest appropriation. Why, in 1900 the French Nation had an exposition at Paris. Congress appropriated $1,472,000 for our participation in that exposition; and I remember distinctly about five years ago that I had the honor to report a bill to this House, which was considered under unanimous consent and which was passed without a dissenting vote, appropriating $1,500,000 for the international exposition which was to be held in Tokyo, Japan, but which was subsequently abandoned by the Japanese Government. If we felt justified in making appropriations of this size for expositions in foreign countries, surely we should feel justified in appropriating $2,000,000 for the greatest exposition that will ever be held upon American soil, commemorating a most important event in American history—an event which should cause the heart of every American citizen to swell with pride. [Applause.]

This bill further provides for the appointment of a commission of seven members, whose salaries are to be paid by the exposition company and whose duties are clearly set forth in the bill itself. I have always regarded it as absolutely essential for the success of this exposition that a national commission representing the authority of the Government should be created. Every exposition ever held in this country or any other country has always made provision for a commission representing the authority of the Government under whose auspices the exposition is held, and that is responsible for the fact that some of the nations that have been corresponding with the State Department, with a view of participating in this celebration, have plainly intimated that they would prefer to deal with a commission representing the dignity and the authority of the Government itself rather than with a commission representing the authority of the municipality in which the exposition is to be held.

I believe it is a very wise provision, because we know that at celebrations of this kind questions of great import, involving international comity, are apt to arise, and those questions can only be settled satisfactorily by a commission which represents the authority of the Government itself. I have heard some criticism of the size of this commission. In reply to that criticism, I want to direct the attention of the House to the fact that in the original bill introduced in behalf of San Francisco there was a provision for nine commissioners. In the bill introduced by the friends of New Orleans there was exactly the same provision that is contained in this bill, namely, a commission of seven members, whose salaries were to be paid by the exposition company. At St. Louis, in 1904, we had a commission of nine members. At Chicago, in the first instance, we had a commission composed of 114 members, and they subsequently gave way to a joint board of control consisting of 16 members. In Paris, in 1900, the commission representing our Government was composed of a commissioner general, an assistant commissioner general, and 18 commissioners.

The chairman of this committee has well said that never in the history of international expositions in this or any other country has there been provision made for a smaller commission than has been provided for in this bill. The people of San Francisco, who are interested in the success of this exposition—who are most vitally concerned—are more than willing that this commission should consist of seven members, and they are more than willing to pay the expenses of this commission because they see the benefit that will accrue to them if every section of our common country is given representation upon it. And if they, in their judgment, after expending the enormous sum of $20,000,000, are satisfied with this arrangement, I do not believe the American Congress should interpose any objection. This exposition will open its doors in February two years hence. Two years is a very short time in the life of an exposition. There is much work to be done to prepare for the reception of the nations that will participate. It is desirous to get action at the very earliest possible moment as an inducement to all foreign nations to exhibit at San Francisco, and I therefore say that, in my judgment, in justice to ourselves, in justice to our country, in justice to the people of San Francisco, who have given to the world an exhibition of liberality unparalleled in the history of municipalities, this bill ought to pass, and there ought not to be a single vote cast against it. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RODENBERG. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] is recognized for one hour.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, it is with a great deal of diffidence, for several reasons, that I rise to oppose this resolution in its present form. It is not pleasant to differ with the other members of your own committee. I sincerely trust that my motives in opposing this measure will not be attacked by anyone on the ground that some two years ago I was in favor of another place for holding this exposition. There was, it is true, a fight made at that time, a fight which occupied the entire attention of the country for some time, but that fight was made in the open. I supported New Orleans, believing it was the logical point; yet the membership of this House decided that San Francisco was the proper place. And it was my pleasure—and it is one of the pleasing reminiscences of my life here in Washington—to recall that on that night I went down to the Willard Hotel and there heartily congratulated the gentlemen who had won that fight for San Francisco. Now, I feel—and I know that each and every Member of the House feels as I do—that they hope that this exposition will be the greatest one ever held on American soil. We all admire San Francisco. We can all recall what a thrill of horror, what an electric shock, went through the entire country when the news came of that dreadful earthquake and still more dreadful fire which laid that beautiful city in ashes. And it is with a feeling of American pride with each and every one of us, whether we were for that exposition or not, that San Francisco has so asserted herself that she, phenix-like, has arisen from her ashes and is a greater and better city than ever before.

But, my friends, I am here to oppose this bill in its present form in the interests of economy and consistency. There was a great fight some two years ago over two different propositions in the bills; one of them, the New Orleans bill, contending that the Government should pay for its exhibit $1,000,000; the other contending that they would ask no money from the Federal Government. And by reason of those contending opinions, by reason of that conflict, at least principally for that reason, did San Francisco secure this exposition.

Now, my friends, for the benefit of those Members who have come in in this Congress who were not in the Sixty-first Congress, I am going to ask this House to indulge me for a moment or two while I read a few extracts from that debate. I am going first to read from that distinguished Member from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], who——

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to whom the gentleman now refers was the man who had charge on the floor of the House of the San Francisco proposition, was he not? He took charge; he was chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Mr. COLLIER. No; Mr. RODENBERG of Illinois was chairman of the committee.

Mr. MANN. No; he had been chairman.

Mr. COLLIER. I believe the gentleman from Illinois is correct.

Mr. MANN. And on the floor of the House the resolution coming from the Committee on Foreign Affairs was turned over, so far as the San Francisco proposition was concerned, to the control of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. COLLIER. I recollect now. The gentleman from Illinois has correctly stated it.

Now, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER]—and I know I voice the opinion of everyone in this House when I say that his opinions on this and on all subjects is always given weight by this House—said:

> By the terms of the New Orleans bill, through a commission appointed by the President, the United States is charged with the duty of rendering the final decision—

And so on. But here is the point:

> Some declaimers were made in the bills which inaugurated the Chicago, the St. Louis, and the Jamestown Expositions. Yet they entirely failed to eradicate from men's minds the solemn belief that mere formulas can not relieve the United States from the payment of obligations incurred in its own undertakings.

Now listen to this:

> On the other hand, I shall be glad to cast my vote for the San Francisco resolution. It violates no fundamental principle; it calls for no expense on the part of the Government; its sole effect is to permit the President of the United States to act as a medium for the transmission of an invitation to foreign countries.

I am now going to read from the remarks of the then distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, Mr. PAYNE, who said in part:

> And I also favor it—
> Meaning San Francisco—
> because San Francisco comes here with this magnificent capital, every dollar of which seems to be available, comes here asking no aid of Congress, asking none of those insidious words of invitation going to foreign countries and coming back to us again for an appropriation because unable to pay the premiums on the goods that come here for exhibit; and I can not see the possibility of the Government of the United States ever becoming responsible for a dollar for this exposition which they propose to have there.

I am now going to read from a Democratic Member from New York who favored this appropriation, Mr. Goulden, who stated on the floor of the House, as shown by the RECORD:

> The claims of New Orleans and San Francisco have been well stated in the majority and minority report (No. 1089). The former city has raised the sum of $8,000,000 and the latter $17,500,000. New Orleans feels that the Government should erect its own buildings, at a cost of about $1,000,000, while San Francisco asserts that nothing will be asked nor expected.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a few moments?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. It is true, is it not, that at the hearings it was reiterated in our ears again and again that San Francisco on no account would either ask or take an appropriation? The word "take" was not used, but my impression is that it was distinctly implied that they would not take any appropriation. At all events I am correct in saying that we were distinctly assured that they would not ask for any, am I not?

Mr. COLLIER. Such is absolutely my impression of what occurred.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield in that connection to permit me to read a little extract from the views of that side of the House which prevailed at that time, submitted as the minority views by G. P. Gardner, JOHN M. NELSON, George N. Southwick, HALVOR STEENERSON, MILES POINDEXTER, and Harry M. Maynard, in which these statements are made:

> The people of California have thus initiated or created an exposition and have demonstrated their ability to carry it through to a successful conclusion, and to make it the greatest exposition that the world has ever seen, and without asking Congress for an appropriation of any character, or directly or impliedly committing the United States Government to any liability or responsibility.

And again—

> We have an exposition already inaugurated by the people of California, with ample funds to make it a great success, asking nothing at the hands of the United States Government except the courtesy of an invitation to the people of the world to participate in the exposition.

That was the official statement upon which the House acted.

Mr. COLLIER. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Illinois for supplementing my remarks with so valuable a piece of information. I am going back now to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] to show something that has been handed me, which I overlooked in the first instance. I do this, gentlemen, to show the condition that was in the minds of the Representatives in this body when the bill came up for action. The distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] said:

> If Congress passes the New Orleans bill now pending, it will be passed without my vote, for it violates in large part the fundamental principles which I have just stated. Moreover, it appropriates $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit. This, to my mind, is inadvisable for many reasons, although unfortunately by no means unprecedented.

Now, I am going to read from a distinguished gentleman on the other side of this Chamber from the State of Illinois, Mr. Foss, who said in part:

> San Francisco comes forward and asks not one cent, but only the designation of her name as the place for this celebration. We all know that New Orleans at another time might perchance hold the center of the stage. There are special reasons why at this particular time San Francisco commands the admiration of the whole country.

And then he goes on to show the wonderful progress and advancement of that splendid city which we all cheerfully indorse.

I am now going to read from the remarks of an ex-Member of this House who now holds the responsible position of governor of the great Empire State of New York, ex-Congressman Sulzer. He stated in part:

> The Government has aided financially every exposition of a national character ever held in this country. No Government aid is asked by San Francisco for this Panama Exposition. Not a dollar is sought directly or indirectly, only suitable recognition and the extension of an official invitation to all the world to come and see and to participate.

I will now read from the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON]. Here is what actuated him in voting for this proposition:

> San Francisco and California have offered to give this celebration and to entertain the people of the world without cost to the Federal Government. They have raised seventeen and one-half million dollars for the purpose of satisfying the most critical that the affair will be made a great success. Under the circumstances I believe it wise to give it to them.

And now I am going to read from the remarks of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. FINLEY], and I am going to ask your especial attention to this reading because it is a very clear statement of the matter. In a part of his remarks he stated:

> New Orleans is the greatest of the southern cities, situated where naturally almost every man in the South would be inclined to support an exposition; but they ask an appropriation of $1,000,000 from the National Government.
> Mr. ESTOPINAL. Just for an exhibit.
> Mr. FINLEY. I understand it was for an exhibit; yet, nevertheless, it was an appropriation out of the National Treasury, and no matter what the purpose was, the money would go out of the Treasury and would be paid by the Government for the purposes of the exhibition.
> So, Mr. Speaker, when San Francisco came up and asked not one dollar of appropriation, and when her Representatives here upon this floor consistently advocate a resolution that only asks Congress to request the President of the United States to issue an invitation to the nations of the world, I could have but one choice between the two propositions. Yes, I voted for San Francisco, and for that reason—one exposition asking for an appropriation of $1,000,000 and the other not one cent.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, it is always a very good rule to save the best for the last, and I am going now to ask your attention to some remarks of that distinguished and brilliant Member of this House, a member of the exposition committee, who lives in the State of California and represents so ably the city of San Francisco:

> Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, the question at issue here is whether the bill introduced by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ESTOPINAL] or the resolution introduced by myself shall be considered by this House. The bill of the gentleman from Louisiana inaugurates an exposition by the Government of the United States, and it is that kind of a bill that heretofore has always enabled a community that made a failure of its exposition to come to the Congress of the United States and ask for financial assistance. We of California do not propose at any time to come to the Congress for a single dollar of appropriation for this exposition. [Applause.] The legislature of our State on the 23d of January last unanimously passed a joint resolution pledging the honor of the people of California never to ask for a single dollar in aid of this international exposition [applause], and the people of California keep their faith. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. DIES. I think the gentleman has abundantly shown that it is understood by the House that there was a pledge on behalf of the city of San Francisco that no aid would be received or asked for at the hands of the Government. But does not the gentleman from Mississippi perceive that there has been a change in the relations of the parties; and the question that I wish to ask the gentleman is, Has there been a change in relation to the parties to this agreement or understanding? Are they in the same relation they were in when they had this assurance from San Francisco?

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman means on behalf of the Representatives from California? I will let them speak for themselves.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield for another suggestion?

Mr. COLLIER. I will.

Mr. MANN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to page 1751 of the RECORD, where the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] said:

> Therefore, in framing the resolution that is about to be passed upon by this House, we decided to leave out of this resolution any proposition that would enable anybody in California, at any time, to come to the Congress of the United States and ask for a single 5-cent piece in aid of this exposition.

Mr. COLLIER. The gentleman from Illinois continues to put me under obligations for his valuable addition to my remarks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we hear so much that this appropriation of $2,000,000 ought to be made because $5,000,000 was appropriated to the St. Louis Exposition. I do not think that has anything to do with this question, and, as far as I am concerned, had I been here at that time, I would most heartily have opposed any $5,000,000 appropriation for St. Louis or anywhere else.

I want now to come to another feature of this bill, and that is the appointment of 7 commissioners for the 46 months at $7,500 a year and their expenses, with a secretary for 46 months at $4,000 per annum, and with a $5,000 stationery allowance per annum, the expenses of the commission to be paid by the city of San Francisco.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman from Mississippi yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman has been reading excerpts from speeches made in the House two years ago when the bill to select a city in which to hold this exposition was before the House, in which gentlemen said that San Francisco would not ask for financial aid from the United States Government for the purposes of the exposition. But does not the gentleman see a clear distinction between asking financial aid for the exposition and appropriating money for a purely governmental exhibit at the exposition, particularly when every gentleman then on this floor knew that the United States Government in 1904 had donated $5,000,000 as an absolute gift to the St. Louis Exposition Co. and besides had appropriated $1,600,000 for a Government exhibit there? In that case $5,000,000 from the Government Treasury was donated to the company. Now, does not the gentleman see that these facts were what was really in the minds of gentlemen when they said that no money would be asked from the Government Treasury to help the San Francisco Co.?

As I am also informed, $2,000,000 was donated in 1893, in the form of Columbian silver half dollars, to aid the Columbian Exposition Co. at Chicago, and in addition to this gift the Government made a liberal appropriation for an exhibit of its own at that exposition.

In the bill before us San Francisco asks nothing to be donated from the Government Treasury to the exposition company nor to San Francisco.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] will excuse me, may I say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] that New Orleans did ask for $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit in the resolution that was presented for holding the exposition in that city, and the claim was made, I think, and generally understood upon the floor of the House at the time, that San Francisco did not ask anything, and as the gentleman from California said at that time they burned their bridges behind them and came here not asking for anything for San Francisco, not even a 5-cent piece.

Mr. MANN. And $1,000,000 was all that was provided for in the New Orleans resolution?

Mr. FOSTER. And that was all that was provided for, $1,000,000, for the Government exhibit in that city. That was one of the grounds upon which Members favored the location of this exposition in San Francisco—because they did not ask for any money.

Mr. MANN. That is absolutely right.

Mr. COOPER. But the gentleman surely sees a great distinction between contributing $5,000,000, which is to be disbursed——

Mr. FOSTER. Oh, I do; but I want to say to the gentleman that the difference is this: When they asked for the location of this exposition in San Francisco they said, we do not want a dollar directly or indirectly, and they were then answering the claim made by New Orleans that that city did want $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit—not for a loan, not for putting up their own buildings, not for a dollar to go into their own treasury, but merely for a Government exhibit.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask how much of my time has been consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 26 minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I just want to read from the speech of the chairman of the committee on this point, in which Mr. RODENBERG says:

> In fact, the gentlemen who represented San Francisco at the hearings stated distinctly, emphatically, and repeatedly that they did not ask or expect the participation of the United States in their exposition. They said that they did not even want a Government exhibit, and they announced with emphasis and as a finality that at no future time would they ask Congress to pass any legislation of this kind in their behalf.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, I also thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for his contribution.

Mr. RODENBERG. And the gentleman should also state that the chairman of the committee at that time said that the position of San Francisco was a mistake and that the future would demonstrate that they would have to have a Government exhibit in order to make the exhibition a success and in order to have foreign nations exhibit there, and that is the practical question.

Mr. COLLIER. Mr. Chairman, coming back to the proposition of the commissioners, if the city of San Francisco wants 7 commissioners or 70 commissioners, and is willing to pay for them, I do not see that that is really much of our concern, but my information is that San Francisco or, at least, a great portion of the inhabitants of California who have paid those taxes which have been assessed against them for the purpose of carrying on this exposition are opposed to having this expense saddled upon them. Let me give you briefly what I believe this expense will be. The salary of one commissioner, at $7,500 a year for 46 months, is $28,750. The salary of the entire seven will be $201,250. The secretary gets $4,000 per annum and a stationery allowance of $5,000, making $9,000 for four years less two months, which will be $34,500, making a total of $235,750. Unless this commission is very different from other commissions that we have had, I think I am making a very liberal estimate when I say that their traveling expenses, and so forth, will amount to not less than $150,000, and I understand it is their purpose to travel a great deal, and that will make the expenses of this commission approaching $400,000.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. If San Francisco and its citizens have contributed $10,000,000, which does not affect the $5,000,000 that have been contributed by the States, because they are conducted by separate boards, would the gentleman ask the House to defeat the bill if those who have paid their money are willing to carry out a proper exposition, so foreigners who come there may have fair treatment in exhibits, and to avoid all complications? Is that any reason to ask the Members of the House to vote down the rest of the appropriation, simply because these people are willing to pay for these commissioners?

Mr. COLLIER. I stated at the outset that——

Mr. MANN. Before the gentleman answers that question, may I ask him another, which he may answer at the same time? Has the California Exposition Co. expressed any willingness to pay these expenses out of the treasury of that company?

Mr. SHERLEY. And I would like to ask another question in this connection. Does the gentleman think they are in a position to express their true view of the matter, inasmuch as they are asking some other favors at the same time?

Mr. MANN. They ought to know whether they have expressed their view, because possibly they could not retract in 24 hours what they were trying to get in 24 months.

Mr COLLIER. California is a long ways from here, but my understanding of this matter, as far as I have been able to discover, is that there is a divided sentiment in that State upon this proposition; and my answer to the gentleman from California, if I wished to defeat the purpose of this exposition and this bill, is that I believe that seven commissioners are too many. I believe that for the purpose of examining, looking into, and superintending the Government exhibit that it does not take anything like seven commissioners. I believe three could do that work as well as seven could.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I do not feel justified myself in voting away other people's money when they were opposed to taxing themselves.

Mr. RAKER. Are they opposed, and is it not a fact that the House ought to know that after the legislation was passed the President did not issue the invitation because there might be a complication as to foreign exhibits, and therefore when the invitation was issued the exposition company filed a statement, and it is on record to-day in the office of the Secretary of State, that if Congress did not pay for the commission that the exposition company would pay all the money that Congress would ask to be paid for a commission to carry out these invitations.

Mr. COLLIER. I simply want to say, as I stated at the outset to this part of the question, that if San Francisco wants 7 commissioners or 17 commissioners or 700 commissioners and is willing to pay for them, why I suppose that would be their concern and they could do it; but I repeat to the gentleman that my understanding is that the people of San Francisco and California who have contributed toward this exposition do not want these commissioners.

Mr. RAKER. Is it not a fact that this written statement is on file, a national public document?

Mr. COLLIER. My attention has not been directed to it, but I assume it is, of course, as the gentleman says so.

Mr. MANN. Do they say they want to pay for it? They say they will pay for it if the Government does not pay for it.

Mr. COLLIER. If the Government does not pay for it; yes.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi refer to the fact that these commissioners under this law are to receive $7,500 a year, and the New Orleans exposition bill—how much were the commissioners under that bill to receive a year?

Mr. COLLIER. I ought to have it in my mind at the moment, but I have not.

Mr. RODENBERG. It was $7,500.

Mr. MANN. No; it was $5,000 at New Orleans. I happen to have the bill here; I do not trust my memory like my colleague does. That is the advantage I have of the gentleman.

Mr. RODENBERG. In the bill that was reported by the committee?

Mr. MANN. The bill reported by the committee, section 14 [laughter] provides:

> That the commissioners appointed by the President under authority of this act shall receive as compensation for their services the sum of $5,000 each per annum and their actual and necessary expenses.

Look at it!

Mr. RODENBERG. This is the bill originally introduced by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ESTOPINAL].

Mr. MANN. It is the committee amendment, reported in the House, that I refer to.

Mr. SHERLEY. I want to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] if he expects to discuss the proposition for the erection of permanent buildings?

Mr. COLLIER. In regard to that part of the bill which provides for a large appropriation for a permanent building, whether it was right or wrong, the wisdom of Congress for many years has been to place in the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds the right and the power to look into and decide whether or not it is feasible and proper to erect public buildings at certain places, and I do not believe that a Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions should usurp the functions of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

I do not see how a public building desired for the needs of an army, as I heard it was intended to be used, can be arranged suitably for that purpose and suitably for the purposes of an exposition without materially disarranging the purposes of either one or the other for which it is intended to be used. Now, my position is this: I accepted the ultimatum on that day when San Francisco carried the victory and won the exposition. I believe that a great majority of the Members of this House—a majority, anyway—agreed to give San Francisco the exposition on the terms that they asked for. I believe we should live strictly up to the proposition that was passed that day, and I am willing—and I believe that each and every Member who is opposed to the present bill in its arrangements is willing—that the proposition as extended by the people of San Francisco two years ago shall be carried out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how much more time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 37 minutes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a few questions for information. Are there any hearings showing just the purposes that these buildings that are supposed to be permanent are to be used for subsequently?

Mr. COLLIER. We never had any hearings on that, save an informal meeting there.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman know how much of the money is to be expended for the buildings?

Mr. COLLIER. We do not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Do you know what size they are to be or whether they are to be used exclusively for military purposes afterwards or not?

Mr. COLLIER. I will say to the gentleman that after attending the meeting of the committee and hearing the question discussed I do not know whether that building is intended to be used as a storeroom or a drill house or a mess hall.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is the gentleman aware that we have now several Government reservations in and around San Francisco? We have now before our committee estimates for large sums of money to be expended in providing certain warehouse and other facilities in connection with the military establishments at and near San Francisco. And I submit to the gentleman and the committee, with the gentleman's permission, that it may be really putting a burden and not a benefit upon the Government to provide for these buildings to be permanent in the absence of any knowledge of what we will have there.

Mr. COLLIER. I will say, in perfect fairness to the committee, that I think the bill provides that the Supervising Architect——

Mr. HEFLIN. I would like to say to my colleague on the committee that the bill provides in section 2:

> SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause a suitable building or buildings to be erected within the Presidio Military Reservation on the site set apart for that purpose, and he is hereby authorized and directed to contract therefor in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States, the said building or buildings to be constructed from plans to be approved by the Secretary of War and said Government exhibit board.

And he might use the whole two millions if he chose under the power of this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me right there, we have presented to us constantly plans by the Secretary of War for the construction of buildings for military purposes, and we do not agree always to them, because they are sometimes so extravagant that this Congress would not authorize them for an instant. Here you are giving power for buildings for military purposes—at least, that is the bait that is held out to us—when there is not a single line of testimony as to the character of the buildings or the purposes for which they are to be used.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, when the bill was referred to a subcommittee this amendment was put into it:

> Provided, That any one or all of the buildings hereby authorized to be erected shall be of a permanent and suitable character for the use of the Government on said military reservation.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COLLIER. I will say to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] that I first promised to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. I want to inquire of the gentleman if anywhere in this bill there is any provision for the confirmation of these appointments by the Senate of the United States or any other body?

Mr. COLLIER. I do not believe there is.

Mr. FERRIS. I will ask the gentleman as a matter of fact if the payment could not be made momentarily after this bill passes?

Mr. COLLIER. I think that it could. Now I will yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope a little later on to get some time in my own right in which to discuss this matter. But in regard to the matter of buildings, let me call to the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER], and also to the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], that the War Department has frequently sent estimates to the Committee on Appropriations asking for an appropriation to house the executive officers of the War Department at San Francisco. Those officers are now in rented quarters. In fact, the Government pays $72,000 a year for rent of quarters in San Francisco, approximately 4 per cent on an investment of $2,000,000.

Now, the Committee on Appropriations has never reported out a bill for the erection of a headquarters building, and I apprehend that the department proposes, if this bill passes, to put up such headquarters.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit, do I understand that this is a scheme whereby the department will get what Congress has heretofore refused to give it?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, I do not think that Congress has refused to give it simply because they did not see the necessity for it. It was probably due to that fact that the money at that time was not available. I do not think it was ever submitted to the House; it was smothered in committee. But I apprehend that the gentleman from Kentucky does not feel that where the Government can put up its own building to house the officers of the Government the Government ought to pay $72,000 per annum for rental?

Mr. SHERLEY. That might depend on what it would cost to build the buildings.

Mr. COLLIER. Now, Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further to the gentleman.

Mr HELGESEN rose.

Mr. COLLIER. I will yield to the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, assuming that the gentleman's contention is entirely correct, and assuming that the San Francisco exposition people ought not to ask any money from the Government, in what position would that leave us? I followed carefully the gentleman's argument, and I do not think that he has even suggested that San Francisco is going to pay for a Government exhibit over there. They simply say they are not going to ask for any financial assistance. Would the gentleman go on record as being in favor of having no Government exhibit at San Francisco when all the foreign countries are going to have exhibits there? My State has appropriated $50,000 for an exhibit.

If you eliminate one-half of this for a public building that is to be permanent, that is equivalent to an appropriation of $12,000,000 by the Federal Government, and, putting it solely upon a business basis, we believe that it is good policy and good business for our State to have representation there, and I do not believe for one moment that the gentleman would contend that, with all the nations of the world represented at that exposition, if it were possible to conduct it without our taking part, it would be wise for this Nation simply as a business proposition not to be properly represented there. [Applause.]

Mr. COLLIER. I will say to the gentleman that I shall offer an amendment along that line, and I wish to say this, that I trust and hope that that exposition will prove to be the greatest exposition ever held upon American soil. I believe that every Member of this House is willing to support a reasonable bill allowing the city of San Francisco and the State of California to carry out the purpose that they intended and that they asked for in the bill two years ago.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Before the gentleman does that, will he yield to me a moment?

Mr. COLLIER. In one moment. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. COLLIER. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi think it desirable for the Government to have an exhibit at San Francisco?

Mr. COLLIER. Yes; I think the Government ought to have one.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Would the gentleman, then, want the citizens of San Francisco or of the State of California to pay for that exhibit?

Mr. COLLIER. I have read you what the gentlemen said they would do.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Assuming that what they said——

Mr. COLLIER. I am opposed, as I stated a moment ago, to the $2,000,000 appropriation asked for in this bill.

Mr. ALEXANDER. Assuming that what they said was said in good faith, does the gentleman think it would comport with the honor of this country to have the citizens of California or of San Francisco pay for that exhibit?

Mr. COLLIER. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] 10 minutes.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to certain sections of this bill or to provisions in those sections relating to the commission, and I desire to speak on that subject. But first I want to say just a word with reference to the proposition of an exhibit by the Government. I think it must be conceded that the representatives of San Francisco two years ago did say that they would not ask one penny from this Government, either directly or indirectly, for this exposition. But, Mr. Chairman, it is immaterial to me whether they did or not. The situation that we have before us to-day is that our Government has invited every other nation in the world to make an exhibit there, and for us to refuse to do that which we have invited other Governments to do would be a humiliation to the United States. [Applause.] And so I am in favor of an exhibit.

But, Mr. Chairman, so far as these provisions relating to a commission are concerned, I must say that these provisions come nearer to a piece of graft than anything that I have seen since I have been a Member of Congress.

It is true that it is represented that the exposition people are willing to pay this $400,000 that it is provided shall be paid to these commissioners and for their expenses. That may be true, Mr. Chairman, but if it is, every Member of this House knows that when they did agree to it it was a holdup, and that they agreed to it upon the theory that it is necessary to submit to this holdup in order to get the Government to make an exhibit at all. Either that, or else it is with the understanding and expectation that before this bill finally becomes a law, when the conference report shall finally be adopted, this $400,000 will be provided to be paid out of the Federal Treasury.

Now, I want to say to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who is a member of the committee, and who represents his city in this matter, that while he and his people may have entertained the opinion that to make this provision for commissioners may grease the wheels for the passage of this bill, if it is finally defeated this afternoon it will be because of those provisions that you have put in the bill.

Now, reference has been made to the fact that other expositions have had their commissioners; and reference has been made to the fact that the Louisiana Purchase Exposition had nine commissioners. It had. But compare the duties imposed upon the Louisiana Purchase Exposition commissioners and the duties imposed upon these commissioners. What are the duties imposed upon this commission? Read the section and see. Nothing in the world except to act as arbitrators when a dispute shall arise between foreign Governments and the exposition company. That is all they have to do.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Briefly.

Mr. MANN. Is not the gentleman slightly mistaken? Under this section they have to force the exposition company to wine and dine and provide for the entertainment, care, and comfort of the representatives of all foreign countries—quite a delightful duty to perform.

Mr. LENROOT. I was just going to make the same observation myself that the gentleman from Illinois has made for me. Compare that with the duties imposed upon the Louisiana Purchase Exposition commissioners, of whom there were nine. And, by the way, those commissioners received only $5,000 a year, while it is proposed to give these commissioners $7,500. The Louisiana Purchase Exposition commissioners, in the act which I have before me, were given many duties; among other things, to select a site, approve of the allotment of space, approve the awarding of every premium, approve the plans of every building constructed, and report upon the financial condition of that exposition from month to month. In other words, that commission had supervisory control over the St. Louis Exposition, while the duty of these commissioners will be to draw their salaries at the end of the month and their living and traveling expenses.

Mr. Chairman, no friend of San Francsico can possibly in good faith vote for this proposition. At the most, three commissioners are all that anyone could claim would be necessary; and at the proper time, if I have the opportunity, I shall offer as an amendment to this section that there shall be one commissioner, to be detailed from the State Department or War or Navy Department. I do realize, Mr. Chairman, that under some circumstances there ought to be a representative of our Government present at that exposition, whenever our Government may properly be called upon by a foreign country to intervene, and we should have a man upon the ground there, duly authorized to speak for the Government and to settle any dispute that may arise. But further than that, Mr. Chairman, we have no right to impose any expense upon the exposition or upon the Federal Treasury. So far as my vote is concerned, I do not believe I have any more right to rob the people of California than I have to rob the Federal Treasury. I shall gladly vote for this bill if these provisions with reference to a commission are eliminated; but if they shall remain in the bill, I shall be compelled to vote against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 7 minutes of the 10. The gentleman from Mississippi has 6 minutes remaining. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP], a member of the committee.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, two years ago Congress adopted a resolution for a great exposition to be held celebrating the completion of the Panama Canal. It was the universal sentiment then that that celebration should be made a great success. It was also decided that the President of the United States should invite the other nations of the earth to participate in that great celebration. I believe that it is the sentiment of the people of this country now to make that exposition a great success, the greatest success of any exposition that has been held in the history of the world. [Applause.] It is celebrating the greatest engineering feat that has ever been accomplished in the world.

Now, the position of gentlemen on the floor who are opposing this measure to-day is that they ask the other nations of the earth to participate in this celebration but are unwilling to appropriate money for this great Government to make an exhibition at that great exposition. What would be the position of such an attitude as they assume to-day? They are inviting the people of the world to come to our shores to participate in an exhibition which they are asking this country to decline to take part in at all. Is it possible that gentlemen who take that attitude upon this measure believe for a single moment that they are representing the will of the people of this country? Do they mean by their position that San Francisco is to pay for the exhibition of the National Government? Did they not believe when they passed the resolution in Congress two years ago that this exposition was to be of advantage to the people of this country? And yet, after they have started the machinery in motion, after they have invited the Governments of other countries of the world to participate in that exhibition, they say now because it would cost this, the greatest Government of them all, $2,000,000, that we ought to withhold our Nation from participating in that great exhibition. [Applause.]

I do not believe their constituents would uphold the position they now take. I believe, as I believed two years ago, that the people of this country want that exposition to be made a great success. They knew then as well as they know now that it could not be a success without the expenditure of money and without our Government participating in that exposition.

We are to be the greatest beneficiary of that exposition of all of the countries of the earth, and it is to our advantage, meeting the other nations in the arts of peace, mechanics, and industry, that we make a greater display of our genius, of our productions, than any other country that will exhibit there. [Applause.]

Already some of the greatest nations of the earth are withholding their application to make exhibition, for the purpose of seeing what this Government will do at that great exposition in the way of display of its products and its arts. Now, what is the situation? Two million dollars, a large part of which is to be expended in the erection of public buildings which this Government requires now for use in the city of San Francisco.

The objection is made here to-day that these buildings may not be of suitable purpose for the use that the Government will require. Admit that to be true. How easily and how cheaply can alterations be made so that they will meet the requirements of the Government after the exposition is over. The permanent buildings will be there and changes can be made in the interior so as to adapt them to the requirements of permanent use, and the money then expended will be conserved.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this Government ought to make a great display at San Francisco. It ought to make a greater exhibition than any other Government that participates in that exposition. We are capable of doing it; we are advertising our products to the world; we are educating not only our own people but the peoples of other Governments as to our capacity and what our people can do. We boast that we can produce better and cheaper and more diversive products than any other people on the earth. This will be an opportunity to demonstrate the truth of our declaration upon that subject. We can show to the world the progress we are making in manufactures and in arts, in education, in all employments known to the human race. [Applause.]

Now is the time when this step should be taken in order that preparation can be made in ample time for the exhibition to open and our Government to make a display of its resources. I hope this measure will be passed by a decided vote, showing that the National Congress is ready to go upon record, and willing to do so, to declare that we are a Nation of progress and a Nation making good our boast of being greater in productions than any other nation on the earth, and that we will give evidence of that fact to all the world.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The distinguished gentleman from Indiana has made the report here upon this bill, and I see that he has a list of foreign nations that are going to exhibit. Is it not a fact that practically all of the States in the Union are going to have separate buildings in the exposition?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from California for calling my attention to that fact. Thirty-five out of the forty-eight States in the American Union have already officially decided to make exhibitions at this exposition and the others are now taking the matter under consideration, and it is safe to predict that each of the 48 States in this Union will make exhibitions there and lend their efforts to make it a great success.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If that be true, will not everything that is American be shown at the exposition through these 35 States?

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman called my attention to that fact. Here is the greatest Nation of all the nations of the earth having what is supposed to be the greatest exposition that has ever been held in the history of the world, and I ask the gentleman would he not hang his head in humiliation if this our Government did not make a great exhibit there, a national exhibit in keeping with its standing among the nations of the earth? If the States are willing to make appropriations for an exhibit of their products, why should any Member of this body be unwilling to have this Government make a national exhibit and do what it is inviting every other nation on earth to do?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman knows that the States constitute the Government, and that each State makes an exhibit of its own resources. It seems to me that everything American will be exhibited at San Francisco.

Mr. CULLOP. Why, certainly not. Let the National Government make an exhibit there of a national character, joining its sister nations of the world, and make a greater display, as it is capable of doing, and one that will fairly reflect our great industrial and governmental character.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman to yield further. I do not want to break up the force of his argument along that line, but I desire to ask him with reference to another portion of the bill. This bill provides for seven commissioners.

Mr. CULLOP. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] stated that the expense of this commission, including clerical services and expenses, would amount to probably $400,000. I want to know of the gentleman why it is necessary to have seven commissioners, at $7,500 a year each, to perform junketing trips over the country and really perform no duties, because I notice this bill does not specify anything in particular that they shall do, and they are to serve for four years?

Mr. CULLOP. Let me say the experience of every national exposition that we have ever had has clearly demonstrated the fact that a number as large as seven is absolutely required. We have never had an exhibition of any great importance with a number so small. Their duties will probably be such, judging from the experience of other expositions, they will have ample work to perform. Great responsibilities devolve upon them—great questions will arise to be settled; questions of a very important character—and therefore one man or two men would not care to assume the responsibility. Not only that, but it would be better that it have that number, as the responsibilities will require it. The work would be of such a character that no one man would want to take the responsibility of performing it, and, in addition to that, the exposition company is not objecting to that number nor to the payment of their salaries, and why should we be so much concerned about that part of the bill? This objection seems to be far-fetched.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. If the gentleman will pardon me, the gentleman said something about the responsibility that will rest on these gentlemen. I have read the bill carefully, and I fail to see anything really that they will have to do. The gentleman speaks of the fact the exposition proposes to pay for them. What guaranty has the gentleman or has Congress of the fact that the exposition company will pay for them or that it is willing to pay for them?

Mr. CULLOP. Well, the fact is Congress is not liable to pay them by the terms of this measure, but the gentleman has heard doubtless the statement made by the Member from California, Mr. RAKER, that they have already filed their statement in the office of the Secretary of State that they will pay them, and by the terms of this bill they must pay them or they will not have the services of the commissioners.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Is the gentleman absolutely certain that if the House passes this bill as it is written and it finally becomes a law it will not require the United States Government to pay the salaries and expenses of these commissioners?

Mr. CULLOP. I am, sir; I believe that the law means what it says, and this says what it means upon that point. No other construction can be placed on it.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. But the gentleman knows that this bill will have to go through another body and possibly through a conference committee before it becomes a law.

Mr. CULLOP. I know that, but I do not understand that is any objection to this feature. Now, I can not understand what the gentleman from Tennessee means, with a great international exposition of this kind under consideration, if he wants to stand in the way of his Government showing to the nations of the earth the great progress it has made, its skill in the arts, in mechanics, in education, and in everything that builds up the character of a nation and a great government. Let it, I say, show to the world its great advantages.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Oh, the gentleman misunderstands me. I do not oppose for one moment this Government making an exposition of its resources and all that it has done and all that it hopes to do, but I do object to a proposition made to Congress which resulted in this exposition going to San Francisco upon the express assurance of the Members of Congress and those who voted for it that if it was passed they would not expect any financial aid or that the United States Government should expend a dollar on account of it.

Mr. CULLOP. I am very much obliged to the gentleman for mentioning that proposition. This bill is not giving to the State of California or the city of San Francisco any financial aid, none whatever; and when gentlemen are injecting that proposition into this controversy they are not warranted by the facts, but, on the contrary, this Government is making an exhibition there. It is making a display; and does any gentleman upon this floor contend for a single minute that this Government shall make that exhibition out of some other person's pockets? We are showing our own exhibit, just as other States and other countries, and we should pay the expenses thereof and reap the reward.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Have there been any Government officials before your committee estimating what the Government exhibit would cost and fixing it at $2,000,000?

Mr. CULLOP. The $2,000,000 was fixed in part by consultation with some members of, I think, the State Department and others, who have had much to do with Government exhibits and expositions. It was fixed upon the basis of what some of the other nations have already decided to make their exhibit cost—Japan, for instance, $1,000,000—and upon the basis of what the Government had done in other expositions in the way of expenditures for its exhibit, and it was arrived at through that means at a very conservative amount, as I contend. So the committee have fixed it at $2,000,000. Does not the gentleman want his Nation to make the best show of any nation with which it is brought in competition?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Well, will the gentleman let me ask him another question? What is to be the nature of the Government exhibit?

Mr. CULLOP. If the gentleman will read the report he will find that it is stated there. It is to be the same nature of exhibits we have made at other expositions in which we have given a great deal more money to make the exhibit than we have proposed here.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will ask the gentleman this question: Does not the gentleman expect that the great corporations, firms, and individuals throughout the United States will have their exhibits at the exposition on their own account? The gentleman does not expect them to be exhibited in the Government buildings, does he?

Mr. CULLOP. I do expect this; and it was assumed that that would be the course of others, and if our Nation refuses to participate as a nation with such an exhibition in this exposition, then the citizens of this country engaged in manufacture and business would be very reluctant to go there and do what their Government was refusing to do. This would be the reasonable conclusion of such a course. We are celebrating the greatest engineering feat in the world, and we ought to make the greatest exhibition possible at the exposition. And now, what is $2,000,000 in the line of education such as this will be to us and to the nations of the earth? The benefits that will flow to our people will be an immense reward for the expenditure of such a sum as this on such an occasion as this is proposed to be. We all should rejoice that such an opportunity is afforded.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I would like to ask the gentleman if he knows how much the Government has expended on its exhibits at other expositions?

Mr. CULLOP. That is set out in the report, and I hope the gentleman will not require me to do so. We have expended very large amounts. We put nearly $7,000,000 in the St. Louis Exposition.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But that was a loan, was it not?

Mr. CULLOP. No, sir. Four million and six hundred thousand dollars we loaned it, and they paid it back; but nearly $6,000,000 was appropriated by Congress for the purpose of making the exposition a success. It was well expended.

Now, Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 37 minutes remaining.

Mr. BARTLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CULLOP. Certainly.

Mr. BARTLETT. Will he tell the committee how much this proposed building is to cost, and how much the cost of the administration, and of assembling and conveying exhibits to California will be? Or does the gentleman lump the sum of $2,000,000 without regard as to what the building is to cost, or has somebody submitted estimates to him?

Mr. CULLOP. We have no estimates, but we have lodged the matter in the discretion of the officers who are to have control of the matter, and in addition to that I desire to say to the gentleman that we have followed some illustrious examples of the Appropriations Committee on that subject.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is mistaken about that. The Committee on Appropriations makes no appropriations without an estimate, and the law requires every head of a department to submit an estimate. The gentleman is mistaken in making such a statement.

Mr. CULLOP. I have said in regard to the lump sum.

Mr. BARTLETT. We have not made any lump sum for buildings in carrying out a purpose of that sort.

Mr. PRINCE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE]?

Mr. CULLOP. After I yield to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BARTLETT] a little further.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand the committee which reported this bill had no estimates either from the head of the department or in the hearings they had upon the bill.

Mr. CULLOP. They had not in the nature of hearings, but they had conferences with some of the departments, namely, the Departments of State and War, as to what would probably be the amount required.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then, can the gentleman give the committee an estimate of what this building is to cost?

Mr. CULLOP. No; I could not exactly give that estimate. It is built upon Government ground, upon a military reservation, where a building is required, and the erection of that building will save this Government $72,000 a year, which is now being paid for rent of offices in the city of San Francisco.

Mr. BARTLETT. But the gentleman can not tell whether it would be $400,000 or $500,000 or $600,000 or $1,000,000?

Mr. CULLOP. I suppose it would cost over $400,000 and less than a million. Such a building as that would meet the requirement of the Government. Now I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRINCE].

Mr. PRINCE. As I have understood from this debate, $2,000,000 is to be appropriated out of the Treasury for the purpose of inaugurating, installing, and maintaining said Government exhibition and for said Government building or buildings? This is a military reservation?

Mr. CULLOP. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRINCE. The Presidio is located on this military reservation? Have you any estimate or any statement from the War Department, through the Quartermaster General, in regard to the buildings on this reservation and the probable cost of those buildings and the purposes for which they are to be used if they are to be made permanent?

Mr. CULLOP. I will leave that to be answered by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], who is familiar with that situation.

Mr. KAHN. Does not the gentleman think the War Department, or rather the Treasury Department, in making plans would want to know how much money it has at its disposal before it undertakes to make its plans, and does not the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] think that to make the plans beforehand, before they know how much money they are going to have, would practically show that they did not know their business?

Mr. CULLOP. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I have been quoted upon this floor several times this afternoon, and I desire to state that I did say that the city of San Francisco would ask no financial aid at any time for this exposition.

Now, what is the situation here at this time? On the 10th of December, 1912, the President of the United States sent a message to Congress in which he used this language:

> In conformity with a joint resolution of Congress, an Executive proclamation was issued last February, inviting the nations of the world to participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition to be held at San Francisco to celebrate the construction of the Panama Canal. A sympathetic response was immediately forthcoming, and several nations have already selected the sites for their buildings. In furtherance of my invitation, a special commission visited European countries during the past summer and received assurances of hearty cooperation in the task of bringing together a universal industrial, military, and naval display on an unprecedented scale. It is evident that the exposition will be an accurate mirror of the world's activities as they appear 400 years after the date of the discovery of the Pacific Ocean.
> It is the duty of the United States to make the nations welcome at San Francisco and to facilitate such acquaintance between them and ourselves as will promote the expansion of commerce and familiarize the world with the new trade route through the Panama Canal. The action of the State governments and individuals assures a comprehensive exhibit of the resources of this country and of the progress of the people. This participation by States and individuals should be supplemented by an adequate showing of the varied and unique activities of the National Government. The United States can not with good grace invite foreign Governments to erect buildings and make expensive exhibits while itself refusing to participate. Nor would it be wise to forego the opportunity to join with other nations in the inspiring interchange of ideas tending to promote intercourse, friendship, and commerce. It is the duty of the Government to foster and build up commerce through the canal, just as it was the duty of the Government to construct it.
> I earnestly recommend the appropriation at this session of such a sum as will enable the United States to construct a suitable building, install a governmental exhibit, and otherwise participate in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition in a manner commensurate with the dignity of a nation whose guests are to be the peoples of the world. I recommend also such legislation as will facilitate the entry of material intended for exhibition and protect foreign exhibitors against infringement of patents and the unauthorized copying of patterns and designs. All aliens sent to San Francisco to construct and care for foreign buildings and exhibits should be admitted without restraint or embarrassment.

That was the message of the President of the United States to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I want to call the gentleman's attention, as a supplement to the message of the President, to the platform of the National Democratic Party in convention at Baltimore, which declared:

> We hereby express our deep interest in the great Panama Canal Exposition to be held in San Francisco in 1915 and favor such encouragement as can be properly given.

[Applause.]

Mr. KAHN. I thank my colleague for calling the matter to the attention of the House. Speaking for myself, Mr. Chairman, and I believe I am speaking for every Member of the California delegation on this floor when I say it, we had no knowledge of that provision in the President's message until it was delivered to this House and read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. I have only 15 minutes, and I have a large ground to cover. If the gentleman will wait until I am through, and I have any time remaining, I shall be very glad to yield to him. I will try to yield time to the gentleman, but I want to make this statement first—I owe it to the House, I owe it to myself, and I owe it to my constituents: The recommendations contained in the President's message were referred to the various committees, I presume; but, at any rate, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], on his own initiative, introduced this bill. There was no demand from any Member of the California delegation for the introduction of a bill. It was introduced by the gentleman who led the fight against San Francisco as the location for the exposition.

I presume it was introduced by him, because he believed that this Government should be represented there. At any rate it was a most chivalrous act on his part. It has been said on this floor several times this afternoon that the people of California have raised $20,000,000 in that State for this exposition. The people of no other Commonwealth have ever done as much for themselves in such an undertaking. They feel they are called upon to represent the honor of the American people at that exposition, and they propose to make good in every particular. [Applause.] No Member of this House, no citizen of the United States will ever have occasion to blush for his country when the gates of the exposition swing open to the citizens of the world. The plan of the exposition has been completed and adopted. It is probably more comprehensive than any exposition that has ever been held, and it certainly has come to Congress with requests for legislation so trivial, so insignificant as compared with the legislation that has been asked for and given to other expositions that I am surprised that some of the gentlemen on this floor endeavor to make it appear as though San Francisco were demanding something that was outrageous and grossly exorbitant. And I assert again that this bill has not been introduced by any Member from the State of California. San Francisco proposes to entertain the world in a befitting manner. She hopes that the Government will be represented there. She hopes that the Government will make an exhibit. She hopes that all the resources of this Government will be shown at San Francisco. I believe the other nations of the world that have accepted our Government's invitation expect this Government to make an exhibit. But the Members of the California delegation on this floor have not been soliciting their colleagues and asking for assistance in this matter. They feel that whatever Congress will do in the matter will be satisfactory to them. If the Members of this House feel that San Francisco should play the host to the nations of the world, and that our own Government should not expend a dollar for a Government exhibit, the delegation from California will be content. We will have nothing to say; we will gracefully submit to the mandate of the majority of the membership of the House; but we believe, as a matter of fact, that there is enough of the spirit of fair play among the Members of this House to agree that there shall be a Government exhibit in view of the fact that the foreign Governments that are to be represented expect the United States Government to be represented. If, however, you decide that there shall be none, I assert that San Francisco will still endeavor to hold an exposition of which none of you will be ashamed.

When you think that the city of Chicago received $5,000,000 outright as a gift for her exposition, as well as additional sums for a Government exhibit; when you remember that the city of St. Louis received $5,000,000 outright as a gift, together with a loan of $4,600,000, and then on top of that had a Government exhibit at a cost of $1,579,000; when you consider that the Centennial Exposition had millions of dollars from the Government; and that the only thing that is asked of Congress in this bill is for a Government exhibit, I think the request of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG], and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is an exceedingly modest one. They are the sponsors for this bill, even though they were among the leading opponents of San Francisco as the exposition city.

In regard to the matter of a building in the Presidio, the latter is Government property. If this House will vote this sum I am confident that the building that will be constructed will be worthy of the Government. We are occupying rented quarters for the use of the Army all over San Francisco; there is one building that is badly needed out there, and that is a building to house the various departments of the Army.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not true that they want that building at Fort Mason, because it is more central and more convenient, and does not the report show that?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know. I have not looked up the report, but I do know that for years they have been wanting a building out there to house all of the officers of the Government connected with the administration of Army affairs under one roof, and the Government has no such building there now. The officers are scattered all over the city at the present time, occupying rented offices.

In regard to the matter of a Government commission, we are exactly in the same position that I spoke of regarding the appropriation. Whatever this House does and whatever the Congress does will be satisfactory to the California delegation. We ourselves have asked you for nothing. The gentlemen who have charge of the bill have brought it in here with a favorable report after it was acted upon by the committee of the House that had jurisdiction over the subject matter.

I want to say, however, that I sent copies of the bill to the exposition officials after it had been printed, and to this day I have not had a protest from them against the provisions of the bill; I think that answers the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. I believe they have felt as the California delegation has felt, that they were willing to accept whatever the Congress would do in the matter. They will undoubtedly abide by any decision Congress may make in the premises.

It has been said that the proposed commission is too large. Personally I believe there should be seven commissioners, because I believe that the work will require a great deal of attention. No one man, in my judgment, would be able to accomplish it efficiently and satisfactorily. The suggestion for a commission came originally from a distinguished Senator who had been Secretary of State of the United States in a previous administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. CULLOP. I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. KAHN. That Senator, who had been Secretary of State in a former administration, insisted upon a commission for the reason that there had been complaint among the foreign exhibitors at two of the previous expositions—serious complaint—in each case upon the score that they had not been properly treated by the exposition company. He proposed that so far as he could shape the matter there would be no recurrence of such complaints. I do not know whether the scope of work of the commissioners in the other bills was defined or not; but San Francisco happens to be noted for her hospitality. No man who ever came to that city in an official capacity, representing any State or any Government, has ever gone away from there dissatisfied with his treatment.

The exposition directors have taken it upon themselves time and again to entertain at their own expense and in a befitting manner the representatives of foreign Governments and of our sister States. Such representatives as have visited San Francisco to select sites for their respective countries have been delighted with what they have seen and with what they have learned. I know that it is the disposition of the directors of this exposition company, it is the disposition of the people of San Francisco and of the State of California to make every representative of a foreign or a State government exceedingly welcome.

But past experiences have shown that even with the best intentions of all parties concerned differences have arisen between exhibitors and the company which controls the exposition. Therefore it is deemed best that the commissioners who are to deal with the representatives of foreign Governments should be appointed by the Government of the United States in order that there might be no mistake, no misunderstanding, and no complaint that can possibly be avoided. In other words, this board of commissioners acts largely in the capacity of umpires or referees. [Applause.]

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I assert that it is unfair to the California delegation on this floor to place us in the attitude of demanding or even asking for this legislation. Even though we have but recently learned that the failure of this Government to participate may jeopardize the participation of foreign Governments, we have refrained from canvassing among the Members of this House for votes for this bill. As I said at the outset, this measure was introduced by the former chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions on his own initiative, after the President of the United States had sent a message to Congress asking that provisions be made for the participation of our Government at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition. The matter rests entirely in your hands, and whatever may be the ultimate verdict of the House the California delegation will have the satisfaction of knowing that that verdict was reached without importunings or solicitations by the members of that delegation.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 16 minutes.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana, Gen. ESTOPINAL.

Mr. ESTOPINAL. Mr. Chairman, it is possible that if New Orleans had not asked for a million dollars appropriation for a national exhibit she would have been selected for the exposition site. It is possible that the California people did not go far enough at the time and come out squarely and ask for an appropriation for an exhibit. I do not believe, however, that this ought to be held out against them at this time.

It is not a question of San Francisco people that confronts us to-day; it is a question of a national exposition. We have agreed to hold a national exposition, we have invited foreign nations to participate, and we can not get out of it. [Applause.] It would be indeed belittling this great country to say that we are not going to exhibit at this exposition at San Francisco. [Applause.] It would be a disgrace to this country if we did not do so. I do not believe that the Congress of the United States is going to write itself down now against a proper exhibit of the great resources of this country. Therefore, I say that if there were any people to be resentful about the manner in which the exposition was secured by San Francisco, the Louisiana delegation would be the ones, but, I believe, I can speak for the whole delegation, we are perfectly willing that San Francisco should have a suitable exhibit by the National Government. What that exhibit is to cost is not a matter that we are concerned about. We believe that it should be sufficient to properly show the resources of this great country. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROUSSARD].

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. Chairman, it is well known to Members of this House that there was a serious, urgent, and ardent contest between San Francisco and New Orleans to secure the Panama Exposition in 1915. It is well known that every effort was made on the part of the contending cities to secure this exposition, and I need say nothing regarding that contest, because every Member in the House is aware of the seriousness and the earnestness of the contest that then went on. The gentleman who now presides over that committee was an ardent supporter of New Orleans. The gentleman who spoke awhile ago, the author of this bill, Mr. RODENBERG, of Illinois, was an ardent supporter of New Orleans. However the fight may have resulted, we in Louisiana feel that the question involved in this bill is not one in which either New Orleans or San Francisco are concerned, but one in which the American Republic has vital interest. I am not speaking now for myself in advocacy of this proposition, but I am speaking in behalf of the Louisiana delegation in the House and in the Senate as well, and I want to place on record the statement issued by myself a few days ago at the request and upon the vote of the Louisiana delegation in the House and in the Senate in behalf of that proposition. Here is the statement:

Unanimous consent was given by the Louisiana congressional delegation when it met to-day to the project to have the United States Government participate in the exposition at San Francisco in 1915.

The question of legislation along this line was taken up and discussed, and the Representatives and Senators from Louisiana, extending the good hand of fellowship to the California people, recorded themselves heartily in favor of the proposition.

Louisiana and California two years ago locked horns in a fierce struggle before Congress for governmental sanction for an exhibition to commemorate the opening of the Panama Canal. It was a masterful fight waged by both States. Victory, by a narrow margin, rested with the Californians.

The question of governmental participation has never been settled. President Taft has strongly recommended legislation along this line. It is fathered in the House of Representatives by W. A. RODENBERG, of Illinois, who led the fight for New Orleans. The proposition calls for a $2,000,000 Government exhibit, the building to house the Government's display to be of a permanent character for use by the Government when the exhibition closes. The measure has been unanimously reported by the House Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions by Representative CULLOP, of Indiana, who was also a Louisiana sympathizer in the fight for the exposition site.

BROUSSARD, in discussing the action of the delegation, said: "We people of Louisiana know that it is absolutely necessary that the United States Government participate in this exposition. We waged a bully fight for the exposition location, but were worsted. California knew she had been in a scrap when we got through with her. We have no sore spots in the Louisiana character, and to-day we stand ready to aid California to the best of our ability to make her show the greatest the world has ever seen.

"The legislation asked for is necessary. The President, by congressional direction, has extended to all civilized nations an invitation to participate in the San Francisco show. Many of the nations have already signified their intention to participate by an exhibition illustrative of their resources.

"The people of Louisiana are in full sympathy with the patriotic desire to make this exposition the greatest and most successful ever held, and we, as its Representatives in the Senate and House of Representatives, to-day declared strongly for legislation at this session which will provide for a dignified and comprehensive Government exhibit."

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve my time for the present.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on December 14, 1910, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ESTOPINAL] introduced into the Sixty-first Congress a bill providing for a Panama exposition at New Orleans. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], I believe, introduced a bill for an exposition at San Francisco. The Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions had quite full hearings upon these bills, or upon the New Orleans exposition bill, because the gentlemen from California declined to prosecute their bill before their committee.

Mr. KAHN. I withdrew the bill.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman could not withdraw the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I asked that the committee should not consider it.

Mr. MANN. I understand. I have stated it fairly. That bill was reported to the House from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions on January 24, 1911. I have not the date when the other resolution was reported.

Mr. KAHN. My resolution?

Mr. MANN. Yes. There was also a resolution then before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, proposed, I think, by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], that resolution providing only for an invitation to the San Francisco exposition. These two propositions were pending before the House, one reported from a committee that had authority over expositions in favor of the New Orleans exposition, and the other from a committee that had no jurisdiction whatever over expositions, but had jurisdiction over a proposition to invite foreign countries, the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The two propositions were before the House. The New Orleans exposition bill did not ask for any Government aid—not one cent. It did provide, however, that $1,000,000 should be authorized to be appropriated for a Government exhibit and a Government building. No further Government aid was provided in that bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman wants to state the facts.

Mr. MANN. I am stating the facts correctly. If the gentleman wishes to correct any facts I yield for that purpose.

Mr. KAHN. At the same time that San Francisco introduced a resolution which went to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, New Orleans introduced a resolution of similar import, which also went to that committee. Both cities had hearings before that committee, and the committee reported out both resolutions.

Mr. MANN. That has nothing to do with this proposition. I was telling what was before the House and how it got there. The New Orleans bill asked no Government aid, I say, except the $1,000,000 for a Government exhibit and Government building. It provided for commissioners at $5,000 a year, who were to be paid by the New Orleans exposition and not out of the Federal Treasury.

There was nothing provided in the way of an appropriation for the New Orleans Exposition except the $1,000,000 for an exhibit and Government buildings, and in that situation the matter came before the House for a vote under a special rule. My district is in the South Side of the city of Chicago, through which the Illinois Central Railroad runs, and is filled every summer with visitors from New Orleans, who come to spend the summer in Chicago; and every winter my constituents, many of them, spend a portion of their winter in New Orleans, because they are so closely connected. I felt disposed to vote for the New Orleans bill and had intended to do so until the question was fairly presented to this House, New Orleans asking for a million dollars for a Government exhibit and buildings and nothing else, and San Francisco swearing by all that is sacred and holy that it would never ask for a cent for any purpose from the Government, a portion of which remarks have been called attention to by the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER]. The report that was made to the House on the New Orleans Exposition proposition contained with it the minority views to which I have referred, and in that report the minority called particular attention to this proposition. On the one side you have frequent invitations for Government exhibitions to which the Government contributes something for its exhibition or in some other way; on the other side we give authority to somebody to invite foreign countries to the exposition, where they will bear all the expense. On the one side the Government only exercises the function of inviting. On the other side it carries also an appropriation. The question was clearly stated by the minority in their minority views on the New Orleans Exposition bill, and attention was called in opposing that New Orleans bill to the fact that the California people asked for no appropriation; that they stood on the side of what the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] called the fundamental principle; they stood on the side of no appropriation from the Government for exhibits or for any other purpose, and the New Orleans Exposition, on the other side, asking for an appropriation, not for the aid of the exposition, but for a Government exhibit. And when the matter was presented to the House in that way I changed my mind and voted for San Francisco, because I thought then and think now that where two cities almost evenly balanced, with the argument presented in favor of one proposing a large Government appropriation and the other proposing to finance the matter by their own citizens, that I did not feel justified in helping to reach my hand into the Treasury in behalf of a city that wished the Government's money. And I feel now outraged by the proposition pending before the House. [Applause.] I feel as though gentlemen had played a confidence game upon me. This is not the only proposition that comes up. Only a few days ago the President of the United States sent a message to us calling attention to the fact that a year ago we directed him, or the State Department, to issue an invitation to the nations of the world to attend a hygiene congress at Buffalo.

When that resolution was pending before the House the question was asked whether that meant an appropriation, and the gentleman from Buffalo stated that it did not. Objection was made to the consideration of the resolution on the Unanimous Consent Calendar until that matter might be fairly adjusted, and subsequently, on the same day, the gentleman from Buffalo asked to have his resolution considered, stating that he would offer an amendment providing that no appropriation should be made hereafter by the Government. In the face of that the President of the United States sent a message to us the other day, asking us to make an appropriation for Buffalo, stating that he was opposed to Congress extending invitations without making appropriations. It is to the credit of the gentleman from Buffalo that up to the present time no one here in the House has proposed that he break his faith with the House, entered into when the original resolution was passed.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BATES. Can the gentleman inform us whether at the time the San Francisco-New Orleans question was before the House the subject of an exhibit was discussed or taken into consideration at all?

Mr. MANN. I can answer the gentleman that it was discussed—was taken into consideration. The whole issue was whether the Government would provide an exhibit at New Orleans and pay for the Government exhibit or provide for an exposition at San Francisco and not pay anything. [Applause.] It was discussed.

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman recollect any promise on the part of California or anyone in their behalf which assured us that the Government exhibit would be prepared and furnished at the expense of the California people?

Mr. MANN. I remember very distinctly, and if I have time I will produce the record.

Mr. BATES. I heard the debate, and I do not remember anything of that kind. I do not remember that the Government exhibit was under consideration.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not remember much about the debate unless he has refreshed his recollection.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Not now. The report from the committee having indicated that the issue was simply the question between the two places, as to whether we would pay for the Government exhibit or not, Congress having taken the side against the Government exhibit, this resolution went to the Senate of the United States and was reported upon by that body.

In the report upon this resolution in the Senate, similar language to that used by the gentleman from Massachusetts here was used in the report there. The report was made by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], formerly an esteemed Member of this House. It stated:

> The people of California have thus initiated or created the exposition and have demonstrated their ability to carry it through to a successful conclusion and to make it the greatest exposition that the world has ever seen, without asking the Congress for an appropriation of any character or directly or impliedly committing the United States Government to any liability or responsibility.

And it was on that report that the resolution was agreed to in the Senate.

My distinguished friend from California [Mr. KAHN], who has just recently addressed the House, is put in a most embarrassing position. On the one side is the House of Representatives, to whom he made his statement before; on the other side are his constituents, to whom he is not only under obligation, but to whom he owes the duty of representing them. He desires to keep faith with the House, and at the same time to keep faith with his constituents, and he is decidedly "between the devil and the deep sea" on that proposition.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] and myself called attention to some of the statements made by the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] on the consideration of the resolution in the House. He said:

The gentleman has made some reference to the possibility of our coming back to the Congress for an appropriation. I want to assure the gentleman that the people of California studied this question very carefully when they made the moves they have made. In talking over the matter of expositions with the Members of this House I soon found that there was a decided feeling against extending Government aid to any exposition. It was said that the people were practically "exposition sick," and I was assured by scores of the Members of this House that they would never vote for any exposition measure that carried with it a single dollar of Government appropriation. I reported the sentiment of the House to the directors of our exposition company, and they decided that we had the ability to finance this exposition without governmental aid.

Then he referred to the resolution that was passed concerning the Philadelphia exposition, originally contemplating no aid, and then coming back and getting Congress to grant them aid. And the gentleman from California intimated that he thought that that was a breach of good faith.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. That was aid to financing the exposition. This is entirely different.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the question pending before the House at the time was between San Francisco and New Orleans, and neither one was asking for any aid for the exposition. The only question was as between a Government exhibit in the way of an appropriation and not a Government exhibit.

New Orleans was not asking any Government aid to finance the exposition, and what the gentleman said and all that the other gentlemen said on the floor of the House about an appropriation referred to the distinction between California asking for nothing and New Orleans asking for a Government exhibit. And then the gentleman went further and said:

San Francisco, realizing the latent possibility hidden in those sentences in the bill, decided that it would burn its bridges behind it and that it would never ask for a single dollar, either as a loan or as an appropriation.

Now, the gentleman says that he is not asking for an appropriation, and I am willing to admit that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. For a question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. As the result of the debate and the proceedings at that time, did the gentleman from Illinois understand that the United States Government would not be expected to make any exhibition at San Francisco, or that it would make one and the expense be defrayed by the San Francisco people?

Mr. MANN. I will make my own speech, by the way.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I take it for granted; but that is a fair question.

Mr. STEENERSON. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that that matter was discussed in the hearings, and I have them here.

Mr. MANN. All through. That was the question.

Now, gentlemen, the RECORD of the time is full of statements, some of which have been quoted by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLLIER] and others—the RECORD is full of statements, some made by the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] and some made by my distinguished colleague from Illinois [Mr. RODENBERG]—all showing that the question at issue at that time was whether we preferred an exposition where we would be called upon to make no appropriations or an exposition where we were called upon to appropriate—notice—$1,000,000 for a Government exhibit and Government buildings; and as soon as the resolution is passed gentlemen interested in it start out with a propaganda to secure, not $1,000,000, not commissioners at $5,000 a year, but $2,000,000 and commissioners at $7,500 a year for the Government exhibit.

Mr. BATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. Yes; I will yield for a question.

Mr. BATES. Was it known or contemplated then that this was to be an international exposition, with 25 other nations participating?

Mr. MANN. Why, I will say to my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania, in the resolution then pending, upon which we voted, was a resolution directing the President of the United States to invite the nations of the world to participate in the exposition. Does not the gentleman think that constitutes an international exposition?

Mr. BATES. None of them had accepted at that time, had they? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. That is really the strongest argument that I have heard to-day on that side of the House. [Applause and laughter.] I compliment the gentleman upon his acumen.

Now, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] for a moment.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. I expect that the gentleman from Illinois has already read the passage in the debate which I had intended to read. Does the gentleman wish to yield me time?

Mr. MANN. No; not yet.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. If not, I will not proceed.

Mr. MANN. Not yet.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question right here?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment.

Now, gentlemen have intimated that the question comes anew before the House, and of course the House has the power to do what it pleases at any time. I want to press home to the Members of the House the faith that was pledged to the House at the time concerning the exposition. In the views presented in behalf of the San Francisco exposition, in the only official statement that was made to the House on this subject, is found this statement; after referring to the fact that the California exposition was to carry no appropriation and that the New Orleans exposition was to have $1,000,000 for exhibit and buildings, this statement occurs:

The Congress is therefore called upon to decide between two radically different plans or designs for holding an exposition for commemorating the opening of the canal.

What were these two radically different plans or designs? I will let any gentleman in favor of the California exposition take two minutes of my time to explain what the two radically different propositions were. Why, one was an exposition where we appropriated for a Government exhibit and buildings, and the other was an exposition where we invited foreign nations and the California people were to pay the expense. This is the official statement made to the House by the gentlemen on the committee favoring San Francisco. After referring to New Orleans the statement proceeds:

We feel that but one choice can be made, and that is to recognize the generosity, the energy, and indomitable will of the people of San Francisco and the entire State of California by wishing them well in their vast undertaking and to convey their greetings to the people of the world, with a cordial invitation to journey to San Francisco and to unite with the people of our country in a general rejoicing over the completion of a new ocean highway.

At their expense. The pledge made by the gentlemen officially reporting to the House in favor of California was that it was to be done at their expense.

Now, gentlemen say, "Oh, well, in the enthusiasm of a contest, in the excitement of a conflict, gentlemen make statements that are overexuberant." That is undoubtedly true, and it may be that the Government ought in some way to provide its share in the California exposition. But that does not require this bill to be passed at all. There is no way in which $2,000,000 can be used on a Government exhibit at this exposition. And it is not the intention to use that sum of money in that way. The California Exposition Co. will provide the ordinary buildings for exhibits. That is where exhibitors exhibit. That is where the interest is. We may make an exhibit and send over some matter from the National Museum. We usually send some old cannon or something of the sort, and a few uniforms, and so on, from the Navy and War Departments. We send some exhibits from other branches, mainly, I think, as far as size is concerned, samples of essays or writings gathered up by the Commissioner of Education from the primary grades of the schools of the country, which no one ever looks at, although this exhibit makes a very good trysting place sometimes, because there is nobody there to bother you.

Mr. BATES. Has the gentleman tried it?

Mr. MANN. There is no method of using this sum of money and there is no way of constructing an exposition building that is any good as a permanent building, and there is no way of constructing a permanent building for the Army that is worth a tinker's dam for exposition purposes. [Applause.] Everybody knows that.

But what is the nigger in the woodpile? In the New Orleans bill there were seven commissioners provided. Under certain conditions they could appoint two of their number to act with two others as a board of arbitration. In case of disputes they were allowed to select a fifth arbitrator. That board of arbitration, I assume, would settle disputes between exhibitors and the exposition company. There were a great many other duties enumerated for the seven commissioners at the New Orleans exposition. Now we come to a proposition in this bill which provides for the appointment of seven commissioners at $7,500 a year, when there is nothing for them to do now, to be appointed by the President immediately, so that the appointment will not get away from President Taft. [Laughter.] There is nothing for them to do now. They are to settle disputes between exhibitors and the exposition company, and as far as exhibits are concerned there is no exhibit within a thousand miles of the exposition company now.

In addition to that they are to see that the foreign visitors are entertained, and this bill provides that all this is to be done and the salaries and expenses of the commissioners are to be paid by the California exposition. You have noticed the complacency with which our California friends have witnessed this attempt upon their pocketbooks. And yet it is an open secret all over the Capitol and the city of Washington that the reason $2,000,000 is carried in this bill is not because they need that sum of money for exhibits or for buildings, but if this bill passes this House they rely upon an amendment being made in another distinguished room in Washington which will divert one-half possibly, certainly more than one-quarter, of this $2,000,000 out of the Federal Treasury to pay the salaries and the expenses and the wining and dining of our own commissioners and the visitors whom we invite, which expenses the California people intended to pay. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] was asked if an estimate had been submitted in reference to the cost of these buildings. Not at all. Has any estimate been obtained as to the cost of making a Government exhibit? Not at all. We have been engaged for many years in making Government exhibits. You can telephone down here to the Smithsonian Institution or most of the other departments of the Government and get a reply by telephone telling what it will cost to make a reasonable Government exhibit. Yet the committee has declined to obtain this information, because it knew there was no way of absorbing $2,000,000 for this Government exhibit.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Is it not true that down at the Smithsonian Institution they have a sort of traveling Government exhibit packed up which they can ship at small expense all over the United States?

Mr. MANN. I believe they are prepared to furnish an exhibit at any time, to any exposition, at very small expense. They have enough duplicate things to keep some laid away for that purpose. And there are certain other branches of the Government where certain things are practically kept on hand for exhibition. Of course, the Government exhibit requires one little expense, the chief one that I know of—for the life-saving crew—probably the most interesting and entertaining exhibit which is made by the Government.

Why, Mr. Chairman, people do not go to these expositions to see the Government exhibits. They go to see the live exhibits of the country, made by the exhibitors and manufacturers and enterprising people of the country. Some people may desire to look at some old prints, or something of that sort, of a hundred years ago, but the people who go to California or any other exposition now will want to see the electrical exhibit. We can not make one, and it is not true that the success of an exposition depends upon the success of the Government exhibit.

It is a very nice thing for the States to have State buildings. They are gathering places for the people from the States, but the exhibits in those State buildings are practically nil. The same is mainly true of the buildings constructed by foreign nations.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this House has the right in morals to put upon the California company an expense of $500,000, which it will amount to, if not more, for a commission and the entertainment provided by this bill. Nor do I believe that we have the right, remembering the pledges which were made to us and the votes which were obtained from us by the promises which were made, to appropriate such a sum of money out of the Federal Treasury for useless officers and more useless entertaining. [Applause.] I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON].

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions at the time that report was made that has been referred to on the question whether San Francisco or New Orleans should be the place for this exposition. I want to say that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has very fairly stated the situation and the arguments that were made before the House. I can fortify that somewhat by reference to the printed hearings before the committee. The question before the committee was not only whether there was a difference between the bills, that the New Orleans bill required an appropriation of $1,000,000 and the San Francisco bill did not, but the matter was urged upon the committee that the Government did not need to have any exhibit at all, nor would they ask for any exhibit.

Representative HAYES, of California, who had charge of the speeches before the committee, made this statement, which will be found on page 100 of the hearings:

> The city of San Francisco ought to have that right. And yet, with the pluck which is characteristic of our people, they are not asking the National Government for one dollar. Our people are putting it all up, and we do not propose to ask for one dollar, notwithstanding the sneers of our friends from New Orleans, who believe that by and by we are going to come back and ask for a big appropriation. I am authorized to say that we shall not ask for one dollar from the Government of the United States, now nor in the future, and I speak for our whole delegation. The simple boon that we ask only is that the Government of the United States will give an invitation to the nations of the world to come and participate with us in celebrating a great historical event, in the city of San Francisco, in 1915.

That was reenforced by every Representative who spoke for San Francisco, and the question of a Government exhibit was directly discussed.

Mr. Scott, who represented San Francisco, was introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES], and this is what he said:

> And what do we ask? Absolutely nothing but the courtesy of the United States, the honor of being designated the national host on this occasion. Mr. HAYES, our Congressman, has just pledged you his word that we shall ask for not one dollar, now or hereafter, and when we say that, gentlemen, we are business men and we mean business. We mean just what we say. We are not talking generalities; we are not talking about——
> The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Scott, you expect to have a Government exhibit there, do you not?
> Mr. SCOTT. I will answer that in this way: As far as any Government exhibit made by the National Government by funds out of the National Treasury is concerned, San Francisco pledges herself now not to ask for one dollar from the National Government. If we have national exhibits, those exhibits will be made by the independent States of the United States, and many of them have signified their intention of coming there, but we say now and we will say at all times, as Congressman HAYES has said before me, that we shall not ask the United States for one dollar to install an exhibit or for any other purpose, and I wish to be absolutely clear and unmistaken on that subject.
> Mr. LANGLEY. The National Government will pay for its own exhibit; of course, you do not expect the State of California to do that?
> Mr. SCOTT. I do not know what the National Government may want to do. But I do not want, by any implication or innuendo or by any misunderstanding, to be put into the position of sliding over this thing. Somebody has said, "They will come back later and say we want the Government to do so and so." If it were not for a feeling that it would be a presumption on our part, we would come to you as Congressmen and would say we would be delighted to build a Government building and to pay for the expense of installing a Government exhibit, because, gentlemen, the United States Government is sick and tired of expositions. Congress is sick and tired of appropriations for them. They have made them every year, and they are disgusted with them, and we do not want one cent now or in the future.
> Mr. NELSON. What do you expect, Mr. Scott, the Government will do in this matter?
> Mr. SCOTT. As far as their representation—we have been to the State Department. We stated that we were even willing to pay for the expense of a Government representation, a Government commission, if necessary. We have offered to put aside enough for the entertainment purposes by which that commission shall come out there and officially entertain the representatives of the world, if the State Department considered it a diplomatic necessity.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Who was the gentleman that made this speech saying that they would not ask for money even for a Government exhibit?

Mr. STEENERSON. I have read from Representative HAYES, and then the last I read from was a Mr. Scott, representing San Francisco.

Mr. CARTER. Was the California delegation present?

Mr. STEENERSON. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. Did Mr. Scott speak for the California delegation?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes. I continue to read from the hearings.

Now, further on is a statement made by Representative KAHN, on page 132 of the hearings:

> Now, if New Orleans were absolutely sincere in not asking for national aid she would do just as San Francisco has done, stand by her resolution of invitation, pure and simple. That accomplishes all that she now claims she is trying to accomplish. It authorizes the President of the United States to issue an invitation to foreign nations and it makes no provision whatever for Government supervision or Government control, nor does it inaugurate through the Government any exposition, and that is the crux of this entire proposition. You all know what the sentiment of the House is with respect to appropriations for expositions.

Mr. NELSON. I do not wish to interrupt your argument, but are you going to explain what San Francisco expects Congress to do with reference to buildings for the exposition?

Mr. KAHN. Her resolution speaks for itself; and the bill which is pending before this committee speaks for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. You mean San Francisco?

Mr. NELSON. I mean San Francisco.

Mr. KAHN. Yes, I will explain her position thoroughly; I will go into that very thoroughly in a few moments.

Mr. NELSON. All right.

Mr. KAHN. Now, as Mr. Bell so ably explained the other day to this committee, New Orleans, or her exposition company, can not collect a dollar of the money that would be raised under her bond issue unless the Congress of the United States inaugurates or creates her exposition. It is expressly nominated in the bond, and she can not get a dollar without congressional recognition. Now, this matter of Government aid for expositions is a pretty old one. When the first proposition came up in the Congress of the United States for the Centennial Exposition, if you will take the time to read the debates, you will discover that Members on the floor of both Houses were fearful that it was going to cost the Government a great deal of money.

Mr. WICKLIFFE. Then you stand by what you said on the 20th of December?

Mr. KAHN. I qualified it; I said that the directors of the exposition were giving the matter thorough investigation. And they did investigate it, and they came to the conclusion absolutely that they did not want a dollar, even for a Government exhibit. They submit it now. I said they would submit it later; I submit it to this committee here and now, and state emphatically that that is their position in the matter.

Mr. CULLOP. I would like to ask you a question. Do you propose, in view of your statement, for the Government to make an exhibit at the exposition if it is held at San Francisco?

Mr. KAHN. No, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. I wish you would elaborate that.

Mr. KAHN. We will ask the various States of the Union and the municipalities of this country to exhibit. There have been Government exhibits at practically every exposition held in this country; it is not a novelty. It is nothing new. It does not add much to the success or failure of an exposition. It is frequently asked for in order to get a big sum of money to help build up an exposition and make a showing. We have $17,500,000, as much as Chicago had to put up her exposition, and we do not need the Government exhibit to make ours a success.

I read further from the hearings:

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I will explain it exactly. I said a moment ago that we will ask the States, and that we will ask the municipalities to make exhibits; we will appoint our commissioners to go to the various State legislatures and appear before the various city councils, and present our claims. We can do that without fear of being turned down, because whenever there has been an exposition in any section of this country and an appeal for a California display was made to our people, the people of California, through their legislature, have invariably appropriated large sums of money for a California display; thus we expended $300,000 at Chicago, $130,000 at St. Louis, $40,000 at Buffalo, and so on all the way down the line, even to $10,000 at New Orleans in 1885. And we feel assured that when the California commissioners go to the various States and the various municipalities their appeals will not be in vain. But we are taking the chances on that and we are willing to take them.

I will say that the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was asked about a Government exhibit and whether it was not necessary to have a Government exhibit. On page 137 of the hearings before the committee he claimed that it was not necessary to have a Government exhibit. I want to make this suggestion before I conclude, as my time is limited, that there is a difference between a Government exhibit and an ordinary exhibit. As has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], it is not necessary for the Government to have an exhibit to constitute a complete exposition, and when it is said here in argument that because we have invited the nations of the world we are in honor bound to exhibit ourselves—that is, that the United States Government is bound to exhibit—the argument does not hold true.

The resolution that we sent to the world is to the effect that the President of the United States be, and is hereby, authorized and respectfully requested by proclamation or in such manner as he may deem proper to invite all foreign countries to such proposed exposition, with the request that they, the people of those countries, participate therein. The countries are the ones that are invited through their Governments. It is not expected that the Government of every country that is invited will have an exhibit. They may not have any exhibit, and the majority probably will not. The States invited will not all have a State exhibit, because this is an industrial exposition, and it was ably explained by the gentleman from California that it was expected that these exhibits would have to be made by the different industries—by individuals engaged in industries. Therefore I submit that it is no argument whatever to claim that we have invited the nations of the world. That invitation was to the people of those nations and not to the Governments to make exhibits. The Governments were the channels through which the invitation was conveyed. The Governments of the world are not engaged in carrying on industrial activities only to a very limited extent. Neither is the Government of the United States.

The proposed exposition might be a complete success without a single foreign Government, as such, taking part or having any exhibit. That was the argument of our San Francisco friends two years ago, and it is as sound now as it was then, and they are bound by it.

There will be no embarrassment from the nonparticipation of the Federal Government in the exposition, so far as foreign nations are concerned. None of them are waiting to accept our invitation on that account.

One of them, Great Britain, probably has failed to accept the invitation on another ground, for which San Francisco is largely responsible. When the Pacific Coast States selfishly forced Congress to grant free tolls to our coastwise vessels, thereby discriminating against foreign vessels, they raised an issue with Great Britain, which as long as it remains unsettled will induce that nation to not only refuse to accept the invitation, but to boycott it altogether. San Francisco evidently believes that the American people have built this canal wholly for her benefit. She not only wants her ships to pass free, thereby depriving the Government of a revenue of a million dollars a year, but that we shall give her $2,000,000 in this bill to celebrate the event. When the United States, by taxing all the people, gives to the Pacific coast a free canal she ought not to be asked to spend $2,000,000 to celebrate the event. The celebration ought to be at the expense of those especially benefited.

Be that as it may, I hold that good faith on the part of the representatives of San Francisco now precludes them from asking for this bill. They are bound by the arguments they advanced two years ago, by which they carried the day over New Orleans. They were sound then and they are sound now. I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Eight minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes of that to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE], who already has seven minutes to his credit, and after he is through I desire to be recognized for the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the analysis made of this situation by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is one such as we would expect under the circumstances, clear and forceful as far as the facts justify; but, Mr. Chairman, we are delving down in the musty manuscripts of this House, I believe, without avail and without purpose. The issue is not what the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] did or what the gentleman from Massachusetts did or the gentleman from Mississippi said two years ago. The issue is, What are we going to do to-day? And I defy any man on this floor to bind me by any fugitive expression of two years ago as to what I shall do when it comes to performing my duty as a representative of the American people in this body to-day. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, the situation is this: We have been treating this as a local and as a temporary matter. We have been trying gentlemen who happen to be members of certain committees because they made use of certain expressions instead of meeting the issue before this committee. I was one of those who originally favored New Orleans, but I came to look upon the matter in a broader way. I came to realize that this had something broader than a mere local character; that it was national in its scope and even international in its significance.

The whole original proposition was based upon the desire of the American people to celebrate the completion of the greatest engineering feat in the history of the civilized world. There was a question as to where that celebration should take place—in New Orleans or San Francisco—and there is no evidence before this committee to-day that if the million-dollar issue had not been injected into that discussion the bill would not have passed in its original form, and no one can convince me that the House of Representatives would not then have voted to hold this exposition in California in any event. Pursuant to that resolution what do we do? We invite the nations of the world to participate in an American celebration.

There are gentlemen on this floor at this hour who are probably invited out for dinner this evening in the city of Washington. What would be their notion of their host if, when they went there, they were met at the door by the butler, who notified them that they would dine alone; that the host, upon a reconsideration, had concluded that he did not have enough money to dine himself or had concluded not to lay a cover for himself for any other reason? We instructed and authorized the President of the United States to invite the nations of the world, and, pursuant to that instruction, he did his duty, with the result that 25 nations of the earth, from Cuba to Canada, from China to Argentina, have accepted our invitation; and yet at this late and critical stage of the proceedings, when the Congress is asked whether or not we, who extended that invitation, shall be present ourselves, gentlemen say no; it is utterly preposterous that the United States should be present, because the gentleman from California at some time or the gentleman from Massachusetts at some time gave vent to some fugitive expression in the course of the former deliberations of this body.

Let me ask this question: If this exposition were to be held in the city of Toronto, just across the border, and $20,000,000 had been provided by the Canadian people for a world's exposition and 35 of the nations of the earth had agreed to participate, would the people of the United States feel justified in refraining from participating therein? But here is what took place: The people of California, in the shadow of one of the greatest disasters that ever overtook or afflicted a people, arose out of those ruins and pledged themselves to raise $20,000,000, and they made good that pledge, and they are here to-day asking nothing. The people of California are not suppliants or mendicants rapping at the doors of the United States Treasury. This proposition originated in the minds of men who do not live near the Golden Gate. The question is whether or not the people of the United States shall participate in this international exposition that is to illustrate the development of the skill and the genius of the civilized world and the progress we have made in the arts of peace and of war.

Now, would we be justified, Mr. Chairman, under any circumstances in ignoring that which is of our own creation?

Let us ask further if all of those nations, with one exception, Great Britain, which I see has made a qualified acceptance, if they all appeared and produced the things that proved the progress they have made in the arts and in the industries, in peace and in war, would it be fair and would not we become the laughing stock of the civilized world if we did not—instead of bickering over this invitation—knock at the door and demand admission to participate in that great exposition?

It is a great opportunity, and the American people, I believe, would demand, if they knew this discussion was in progress, that the American Congress should see to it that they should exercise their right to perform their duty by exhibiting the best we have produced and proving ourselves a worthy host to other nations. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, the Congress is in the position of having humiliated the country before the nations of all the world, and when this exhibition of inventions that have marked the development of the nations of the world during the years since the last exposition was held, we will be in the position of having created it and then turning our back upon it because, perchance, there happens to be in this bill a provision that there shall be a commission appointed that might eat and drink and wear clothes. They might possibly take a glass of wine on their way to California; they might partake of the delicious products of the vineyards of the Golden Gate, and therefore because some man may eat a hearty meal, wear a decent coat upon his back we should kill this enterprise, and Uncle Sam should bow his head in humility and in shame before the people of the civilized world. I do not believe that any such history will ever be written by this Congress, but if it is, Mr. Chairman, I do not propose that my name shall be signed to any such pitiable chapter in the annals of this great Republic. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RUSSELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message was received from the Senate announcing that the Senate had passed the following resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution 40.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Secretary of War, under the joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory growing out of the late insurrection in Mexico, approved August 9, 1912, be transmitted to the President, who is hereby respectfully requested to cause a claim for the amount of the damages reported therein as suffered by American citizens within American territory to be presented to the Government of Mexico as a claim in behalf of the Government of the United States.

The message also announced that Mr. FOSTER, at his own request, had been excused from further service as a conferee upon the bill (H. R. 26680) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and Mr. OVERMAN had been appointed in his place.

PANAMA-PACIFIC INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois used five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it was no fugitive expression from the gentleman from Massachusetts. For years I have opposed every proposition for an exposition. As chairman of the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, I made a dissenting report on the Alaska-Yukon Exposition bill for no other reason than that it contained a provision for a Government exhibit. It did not ask for a single cent except for that. When this San Francisco project was under consideration we were told in private—we were told by Mr. Scott, representing the exposition company, and others at the public hearings—that they would not ask for a Government exhibit and that they did not need a Government exhibit. We were told that very thing on the floor of this House. Mr. FINLEY, of South Carolina, and I both stated on the floor of this House—and we both voted for San Francisco—that we would not vote for any place that asked for a single dollar of expenditure for a Government exhibit. So much for the fugitive expression of opinion.

Now, those facts do not meet the main question, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania has said. They only show the bad faith of some one. Let us get to the main question. The gentleman says that we are in a trap; that we have got the elephant in the tent, and now we must feed him. Not a bit of it, gentlemen. These Californians told us before our committee they did not need a Government exhibit. Why, they have got an exhibit from most of the States in the Union, some of them, I venture to say, costing twice as much as any amount that any exhibit from any foreign country will cost. Oh, we are told that we must entertain these foreigners when they come. Why, Mr. Chairman, during the time that the debate two years ago was in progress the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] introduced an amendment providing for a commission after the vote was taken authorizing the exposition at San Francisco; I raised the point of order that he could not have an amendment pending in somebody else's time.

I said then what is equally true to-day, Mr. Chairman. I said this:

> If that amendment were to be incorporated in this bill I should vote against the San Francisco exposition. It does nothing more nor less than open the door for persons to come before Congress, as they have frequently done already, and say: "By the appointment of your commission to control our affairs you assumed the responsibility for the failure or success of our exposition. If you had given us our own way we might have made it a success. Now you are morally bound to liquidate any debt that may have been incurred."

It was exactly on such a plea that over and over again this Government has been called on to pay the expenses of unsuccessful expositions.

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I have been compelled to be absent during the most of this debate. I heard the closing remarks of my honored colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. Speaking respectfully of what I heard of his speech and what I heard of my honored colleague from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] and of my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER], it seems to me, however strong my colleague is and was, and however strong my friend from Minnesota is and was, and however strong the gentleman from Massachusetts is and was, that they are off the mark. The remarks of the gentleman from Illinois come with poor grace after that great exposition in Chicago and what she received in encouragement from the Federal Treasury. After all has been said, it is not a question of the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN], nor is it a question of what any man said. It is not a question of what any man pledged in the heat of a great contest. By solemn enactment we have invited the nations of the world to celebrate—what? To celebrate in 1915 the completion of the canal; and, right or wrong, it is to be celebrated in San Francisco, and California has put her hand to the plow and done more than any other people have done. They pledged over $20,000,000, and the money is raised. And now, after foreign nations have accepted; now, after the people in the United States are looking toward the Golden Gate, getting ready for that great exposition after the completion of the great canal, gentlemen are haggling about the United States, after having invited everybody to go to San Francisco, and are saying that she will not participate.

There are 100,000,000 of people in the United States. Twenty-five cents apiece means $25,000,000. And yet, gentlemen protecting the Treasury haggle about giving the proper aid to make this exhibit. Great heavens! There is not a man, there is not a woman, there is not one of the 85,000,000 of the common people but would feel humiliated to see the United States refuse to make the exhibit and construct the building. [Applause.]

Now, that is the way I feel about it. I have stood for every exposition from Philadelphia on, and after we concluded to hold them I have wanted to make them good exhibitions—Philadelphia, Chicago, New Orleans, Buffalo, St. Louis——

Mr. DYER. The best of all.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman says the best of all. I trust, however much the watchdogs of the Treasury may seek to muddy the water, to seek to defeat this bill, as citizens of the United States and as Members of Congress representing the greatest and wealthiest people on the face of the earth, we will not now turn our backs. [Applause.]

Mr. HEFLIN. Is the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] in the Hall?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not present.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, the time has arrived when some action should be taken in this matter. Gentlemen of the opposition have had a long, long time in which to discuss this measure. I fear that some have taken advantage of the time that they have had in order to filibuster for one reason and another and to postpone action upon this measure. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] opposed having an exposition at New Orleans. He opposed having an exposition at San Francisco. He is at least entirely consistent in this matter. I will say that for him. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] felt very friendly, indeed, to New Orelans, but finally fell off the fence on the San Francisco side. He has voted as all gentlemen have, long since that contest was settled for San Francisco, to extend an invitation from this Government to the other nations of the earth to come and participate in the celebration of the completion of the Panama Canal.

At that time some gentleman from California spoke of asking for no financial aid. We have since that time extended an invitation for our Government to the Governments of the earth to come and expend their money to put up buildings on our soil and make exhibits to help us celebrate the completion of an American project; and yet some of you would see our Government with no exhibit there on that important occasion. Japan appropriating a million dollars for the purpose of aiding America in the celebration of the greatest engineering feat in the world, is it possible that these gentlemen will refuse to provide for a proper participation by our own Government? Public buildings for the use and benefit of our Government are to be erected there and paid for out of this appropriation. We are now paying rents for buildings out there, I am told, of $72,000 a year. So, Mr. Chairman, in 27 years we will have saved $2,000,000 in rents and we will still have the buildings. We shall have had a great Government exhibit, shall have entertained the great nations of the earth, and we shall have celebrated the completion of this great American project. [Applause.] Do gentlemen want to be placed in the position of opposing a proper Government exhibit at San Francisco when the Government, through Congress, has invited other nations to come and bring Government exhibits?

I want to say to my friends on this side of the House who hail, as I do, from the great South, you strove hard to get this exposition for New Orleans; you favored a proposition, every one of you, that carried a million dollars for a Government exhibit there, and I am glad that many of you believe now that if a Government exhibit was proper at New Orleans a Government exhibit is proper at San Francisco, and you have shown that you are willing to aid the great Northwest in making the celebration of the completion of the Panama Canal a great success. [Applause.] Some who voted for the New Orleans exposition voted for a bill carrying a million dollars for a Government exhibit there but, strange to say, oppose a Government exhibit at San Francisco.

Some do not want to give San Francisco a Government exhibit, because it is claimed that some gentleman from California said that he did not ask for financial aid. Other expositions have been held, and after they were over some of those interested have come back and asked for financial aid, and it was given to them. The representatives of the San Francisco exposition have said that San Francisco will not ask for financial aid, and I would oppose giving it if they did, and we have provided in this bill that she shall pay for seven commissioners, just as the New Orleans bill provided, and she stands ready to carry out that contract. This appropriation is only for a Government exhibit and for public buildings for the use and benefit of the Government of the United States. Mr. Chairman, since we have authorized the exposition and invited foreign nations to come and make exhibits there we ought to have an exhibit in keeping with the proprieties of the occasion and the honor and dignity of our country. I want to see every State in the Union represented there.

Let them bring an exhibit of the products of the soil, mines, and factories, and so forth. I want the South to have the greatest cotton exhibit there that the world has ever seen. [Applause.] I want the foreign countries to see what we produce from the soil of the South and I want them to know something of the multiplied uses to which cotton is put and the myriad blessings that come from the lavish use of it as wearing apparel and other purposes. I believe that that exposition will redound to our everlasting benefit by bringing about happier relations with foreign countries, help us commercially with the nations of the earth, and aid us to promote peace the world over. [Loud applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that considerable time has been consumed in discussing this measure. Both sides have been heard, and in order that we may take the bill up for amendments under the five-minute rule it is necessary to close general debate. I therefore move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. JAMES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 27876) to provide for the participation of the United States in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. COLLIER and Mr. HEFLIN rose.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] moves that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to adjourn.

Mr. KAHN. Pending that, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Pending that, there is a motion to adjourn.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HEFLIN. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 74, noes 66.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Speaker appointed Mr. HEFLIN and Mr. SISSON.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 67.

Mr. CULLOP. The yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the Speaker, after counting, announced 23 ayes.

Mr. CULLOP. The other side.

Eternal God our heavenly Father, the same yesterday, to-day, and forever, help us with renewed confidence in Thee and in the gifts Thou hast bestowed upon us, to go forward to the tasks of the new day that we may work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, assured that it is God which worketh in us both to will and to do of His good pleasure. And Thine be the praise through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

HEIRS OF SAMUEL SCHIFFER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill H. R. 8861, an act for the relief of the legal representatives of Samuel Schiffer, with a Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the amendment?

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some explanation by the gentleman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves the right to object, and asks for an explanation.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, this is a bill for the relief of the heirs of Samuel Schiffer, passed by the House unanimously a little while ago. It comes from the Committee on War Claims. The Senate amended the bill. As it passed the House it carried a direct appropriation of $62,158.34. The Senate amended the bill by referring it to the Court of Claims and giving the court authority to try the case and enter judgment. Now I desire to move to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, and the amendment I propose is simply to provide that in no event shall the judgment rendered exceed the sum of $62,158.34, the amount in the House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANTHONY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman what committee that came from in the Senate?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. The Senate Committee on Claims.

Mr. ANTHONY. Is it a fact that the Committee on Claims in the Senate is holding up bills sent over from the House?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. This is a House bill.

Mr. ANTHONY. Are there any Senate bills included in it?

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. No; it is purely a House bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MORSE of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the Senate amendment the following: "Provided, however, That in no event shall the judgment rendered in said cause, if any, exceed the sum of $62,150.34, and the amount of such, if any, when paid to the claimants shall be received by them in full settlement and satisfaction of all claims."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin to concur in the Senate amendment with the amendment which the Clerk has just reported.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION, NORTH AND SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (S. 109) to authorize the sale and disposition of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriations and provisions to carry the same into effect, and I move to agree to the same. I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas calls up a conference report and asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The conference report is as follows:

Page 6 of the amendment, line 8, strike out the first two words of said line, to wit, "four dollars," and insert in lieu thereof the words "three dollars and fifty cents," and the House agree to the same.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, at the request of my colleague [Mr. PRINCE], who has charge of the bill, I move to concur in the Senate amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

REPRINT OF A SPEECH.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the remarks I have printed this morning in relation to the District bill be reprinted to-morrow, as the printer seems to have gotten the copy confused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to have his speech on the District of Columbia bill reprinted and corrected. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 28499, the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 28499, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. RODDENBERY in the chair.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Kentucky please state to what page and line this amendment is offered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, it is not important to what page or line it is offered. It is relative to the sinking fund and interest. It might be well that the amendment go at the foot of page 67, where that item was stricken from the original bill.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the amendment can be offered just as well on page 98, before line 1.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 98, by inserting before line 1 the following:

"INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

"And there is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will, with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annum, be sufficient to pay the principal of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued under the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, at maturity, which said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually invest in said bonds at not exceeding the par value thereof, and all bonds so redeemed shall cease to bear interest and shall be canceled and destroyed in the same manner that United States bonds are canceled and destroyed. (Vol. 20, p. 410, U. S. Stat.)

"Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable, and all moneys so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriaton for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as hereinbefore provided. (Vol. 20, p. 105, U. S. Stat.)

"For the purpose of meeting the payment of interest and for the purpose of providing for said sinking fund the sum of $975,408, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated (from the respective funds described in the two acts of Congress above set out), to be charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia, derived from taxes levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, upon the amendment I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss the amendment for just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky if he has a copy of the amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; I did not have one made; I wish I had. Mr. Chairman, the original bill——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair may possibly exceed the customary exercise of authority that exists or does not exist, but he could not gather the full significance of the somewhat lengthy amendment as read by the gentleman. This is an important matter; a point of order is reserved against it, and if it could be temporarily passed until a copy can be made so members of the committee in charge of the bill and the Chair could have it before them at the time it is under discussion, it seems to the Chair that the Chair and the committee may possibly reach a more correct and speedy conclusion of the matter——

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that we may conclude the reading of the bill and take up the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky later.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I can explain the matter in a very few minutes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I was going to suggest this in connection with the suggestion of the Chair, and that is instead of having one copy made several copies may be made, so that in connection with the argument on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky the Chair might have one copy, we might have one copy, and the gentleman from Kentucky one copy. It is only a matter of a few minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In a few minutes I can explain what the amendment is to the Chair and anybody else.

Mr. SAUNDERS. But the Chair can not have it, and we want it in connection with our argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make no innovation, but the Chair is of the opinion that when an important, lengthy amendment is proposed and gentlemen are in doubt as to its wisdom, either as to being proper legislation or as to its being in order, if there is not some reason to the contrary, as a matter of expeditious practice Members of the House interested in it should have convenient access to the text of the matter. It prevents controversy which, we observe, continually arises on the floor of the House or the Committee of the Whole because gentlemen do not fully grasp what the propounders seek, nor can they at all times comprehend and grasp the argument. It tends to cause delay and may be calculated to produce an erroneous ruling thereon. The Chair not only takes the liberty of making this statement in reference to the pending amendment, but likewise to other amendments that are lengthy in their nature and important in their character. The Chair will entertain the request of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we may conclude the reading of the bill and action on such other small amendments that we propose to offer to perfect the bill, and in the meantime the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky may be considered as pending at the point at which it has been offered.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What is considered as offered?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky may be considered as pending.

Mr. MANN. And the point of order reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being reserved thereon and that the same may be taken up for consideration when the reading of the bill shall have been completed. Is there objection?

Mr. BURLESON. And action on certain small amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] It is so ordered, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I believe the main object of the present unprecedented delay is to have some copies made of the amendment which I offered. I take it for granted that it is desired in order to facilitate matters that the clerical force of the House copy this and have it brought right up.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That all laws and parts of laws to the extent that they are inconsistent with this act are repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon section 7 of the bill because it is legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from Kentucky that that section is placed there for the protection of the Government.

Mr. MANN. It ought to go out.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Notwithstanding, Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. Well, it undoubtedly is legislation, although it has been carried in every appropriation act——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It went out on the point of order last year.

Mr. BURLESON (continuing). With the exception of last year, for 30 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman concede the point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. I concede it is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] makes a point of order on the paragraph, and the point of order is conceded by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], in charge of the bill, and therefore the point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 19, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to return to page 19 of the bill, for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, what is the amendment?

Mr. BURLESON. On page 19, line 6, after the second word, "materials," insert the words "other than fuel."

Mr. MANN. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 19, line 6, by inserting after the word "material," where it occurs the second time, the words "other than fuel."

Mr. BURLESON. With a comma before the word "other."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask to return to page 31, for the purpose of offering an amendment to an item that was passed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I wish to hear what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] asks unanimous consent to return to page 31 for the purpose of offering an amendment, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] reserves the right to object until the amendment is reported.

Mr. BURLESON. The amendment is to restore the lines at the top of page 31 that went out on a point of order, with this addition:

Provided, That there shall be paid to the United States from the revenues of the District of Columbia the value of said lands so transferred, and for that purpose the sum of $2,818.50 is appropriated, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not object to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The question is on getting permission to return.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that this is a plat of ground that was to be used as an abutment to the bridge that is provided for, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] said he would have no objection to it provided the District government paid for the plat of ground. I have in my hand a statement from the assessor showing the value of the ground.

Mr. MANN. Do pages 29 and 30 remain in the bill?

Mr. BURLESON. They remain in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I do not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Reinsert lines 1 to 6, inclusive, on page 31, as follows:

"And the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, is authorized and directed to transfer to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia the land under his jurisdiction in square 1194 which is necessary, in the judgment of said commissioners, for the construction of the aforesaid bridge and approaches."

With the following proviso:

Provided, That there shall be paid to the United States from the revenues of the District of Columbia the value of said lands so transferred, and for that purpose the sum of $2,818.50 is appropriated, to be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment. As I understand now, the paragraph relating to the bridge, on pages 29 and 30, remains in the bill.

Mr. BURLESON. In the bill?

Mr. MANN. I understood a moment ago that they were stricken out.

Mr. BURLESON. No, sir; they remain in the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. My understanding is that pages 29 and 30 went out on a point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. No; there was no point of order directed against those items.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is right about that. I intended to, and afterwards changed my mind in regard to it.

Mr. MANN. Now is it proposed to have the District to pay out of its own revenues the expense of acquiring the land for this abutment?

Mr. BURLESON. That is the proposition.

Mr. MANN. That is contrary to the half-and-half principle.

Mr. BURLESON. It is. But I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that we are dealing with this suggestion as we found it. This is the abutment for the bridge.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. BURLESON. It is a small matter. The entire cost of the two lots is $2,815.50.

Mr. MANN. But it goes along toward establishing a principle which is violative of what some of us believe ought to be maintained as the practice of the House to follow the organic act.

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, there are a number of items in the bill that are not in accordance with the organic act.

Mr. MANN. Oh, there are a few items in the bill, including the playgrounds item, although I was not willing to have it that way when it was established. I am not willing to put on the District of Columbia the entire payment of the cost of any portion of the construction of a bridge in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BURLESON. This is no part of the construction of the bridge.

Mr. MANN. I understand. It is to acquire land on which to place an abutment. I think that is part of the cost of the construction of the bridge; but it is neither here nor there which it is. I shall make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. That it is new legislation?

Mr. MANN. That it is legislation. It is all legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. I would state to the gentleman from Illinois that this plat of ground is absolutely necessary if the bridge is to be constructed.

Mr. MANN. I think the bridge ought to be constructed; I will assume that it ought to be constructed. I do not have knowledge on that subject. And I assume that for the construction of a bridge an abutment is necessary, and that for the construction of an abutment the land is necessary, just as necessary as to have police and fire protection in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he understood him correctly in maintaining that for the construction of a bridge the abutment is necessary, and for the construction of an abutment an authorization is necessary?

Mr. MANN. Yes. This is pure legislation, authorizing the transfer of land owned by the Government to the District of Columbia. It is clearly legislation.

Mr. BURLESON. I admit that it is legislation, but I sincerely hope that the gentleman from Illinois will not make the point, because it is very important and necessary that this bridge should be constructed.

Mr. MANN. Admitting that that is all true, it is also important that the Government should preserve its proper relation to the District of Columbia, and any expense that is necessary and required in the District of Columbia ought to be paid on the same principle. We need a fire department; we need a police department; we need many things in the District of Columbia. The gentleman might argue with equal force that they should be paid for wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. I think it is to the interest of the Government to maintain the relationship under which we control, through Congress, the government of the District of Columbia, and pay one-half of the public expense of the maintenance of this city. Without that provision the city would not be respectable to live in nor would we have the same pride in it that we have now. I am not willing to assist toward the reversal of that policy by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order against the amendment because it contains legislation not authorized by law. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I concede that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 5 for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] asks unanimous consent to return to page 5 for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ascertain the purpose.

Mr. BURLESON. It was a matter that was passed by agreement, with a point of order pending against it, on account of the words "and $500 additional as chairman of the excise and personal-tax boards," beginning in line 1 of page 5. The point of order was reserved against that by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and we agreed to pass it over until we could make an investigation of the matter.

I concede that it is subject to a point of order, but I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that after the duties of the assessor had been defined by certain acts of Congress additional burdens were imposed upon him when these two boards—the excise board and the personal-tax board—were created by law; and inasmuch as these duties were imposed upon the assessor the District commissioners recommended $500 additional compensation to cover his services in connection with his duties as chairman of these two boards. It has been carried in the bill for a number of years. It is true that there is no specific authorization of law for this compensation, yet the acts creating the excise board and the personal-tax board did not say that this service should be rendered without additional compensation. And inasmuch as the duties imposed upon him were onerous in their character we thought it was only just and proper that this additional compensation should be allowed him. For that reason, I ask the gentleman not to insist on the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, when the assessor was made chairman of the excise board his duties were not increased. Instead, his duties were decreased, because the number of assessors was increased, and so was the number of clerks increased, to do the additional work. Heretofore, up to this time, I have reserved the point of order. I now make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. I will state that the gentleman is wholly mistaken about his facts.

Mr. CANNON. If this transaction was between him and myself and I was the party who opposed what is claimed to be the additional duties, does not the gentleman think he could recover under the common counts on a quantum meruit against me?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think it amounts to that, Mr. Chairman. The fact still remains that when additional duties were imposed upon the board of assessors abundant help was given to them because of that additional imposition of duty. Therefore I now make the point of order.

Mr. BURLESON. But the gentleman overlooks the fact that there were certain duties imposed upon the assessor by reason of his connection with these boards. I concede that this is subject to the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Regular order!

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the following words, on page 5, beginning in line 1:

And $500 additional as chairman of the excise and personal-tax board.

The point of order is conceded, and it is therefore sustained.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may be permitted to correct the totals where they are changed by the operation of points of order and any amendments that have been adopted to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the Clerk be allowed to correct the totals as they appear in the original bill, which totals have been altered by reason of divers and sundry rulings sustaining points of order and the adoption of amendments. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. On page 16, line 20, I move to strike out the word "of" and insert the word "or." It is a typographical error.

The CHAIRMAN. Which word "of"?

Mr. BURLESON. The first one, before the word "livery."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 16, line 20, by striking out the word "of," after the word "hire," and inserting the word "or."

Mr. MANN. It will then read "hire or livery"?

Mr. BURLESON. That is exactly what it is intended to be.

Mr. MANN. I think it means what is says—"hire of livery."

Mr. BURLESON. No; it is "hire or livery." It has been carried in the bill in that way for many years. You may hire a horse, or you may pay for the livery of a horse, and the latter is the purpose of it.

Mr. MANN. When you hire a horse you pay for the livery of it. I do not care how it is printed. It is correct as it is.

Mr. BURLESON. If the officer owns a horse and puts him in a stable, the Government intends to pay the livery charge. That is what is meant by the livery of a horse.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. That finishes the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 24, in order to ask that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] withdraw his point of order against a paragraph changing the designation of a block on Twentieth Street.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to recur to page 24 for the purpose stated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, while the bill was under consideration a few days ago the gentleman from Kentucky made a point of order against lines 11 to 18, inclusive, on page 24. The language referred to changes the designation of two blocks on Twentieth Street. One of the blocks—3300, Twentieth Street—is to be called Park Road. Block 2200 is to be called Walbridge Place. The last-named block is entirely unimproved. The first-named block is, in fact, the first block of Park Road. Its being called Twentieth Street probably resulted from the fact that for a considerable length of time the part of Park Road entering the park was not improved. When it came to be improved and slightly changed in locality for some reason or other, difficult to understand, it was not called Park Road but Twentieth Street. It is, in fact, the only part of this old road, nearly a mile long, that is not called Park Road. It is the first block of the street as it leaves the park from which it derives its name. I think the gentleman from Kentucky did not understand the situation when he made the point of order, and my understanding is that he desires to withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to page 24, lines 11 to 18, inclusive.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to recur to page 24, lines 11 to 18, inclusive. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of order lodged against the provision in lines 11 to 18 in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. During the reading of the bill there was an amendment, which I offered, that was passed over by unanimous consent. It was an amendment to the paragraph on page 64, pertaining to the Tuberculosis Hospital. The gentleman from Texas reserved a point of order on the amendment, and I take it that we should return to it for the purpose of disposing of it.

Mr. BURLESON. I made the point of order.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman reserved it because the matter was passed over by unanimous consent.

Mr. BURLESON. The statement of the gentleman from Missouri does not accord with my recollection. As I recollect it, the gentleman from Missouri offered an amendment to which I made a point of order, and it was sustained by the Chair.

Mr. DYER. I think the gentleman is mistaken. It is an amendment to insert a provision with reference to the Tuberculosis Hospital at the end of the section on page 64, putting the hospital under the direction of the board of health, because of its being a contagious hospital.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. DYER. I make the motion that the amendment I presented be adopted.

Mr. BURLESON. According to my recollection, the point of order was made against the amendment and the point of order was sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that before the motion can be entertained it is his impression that unanimous consent should be had to recur to the page to which the gentleman refers.

Mr. DYER. Then I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN. But, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment was offered and the point of order was reserved and passed over by unanimous consent it would not require unanimous consent to return to it. But the gentlemen do not agree as to what the fact is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the following amendment was offered by the gentleman from Missouri when the bill was being read in its order:

Add, at the end of line 23, page 64, the following:
"Provided, That hereafter the Tuberculosis Hospital shall be under the direction and control of the health department."

I am advised by the reading clerk that a point of order was made against the amendment and the Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. DYER. My recollection is that the point of order was not sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will correct the statement he has just made. He is advised by the reading clerk that the point of order was made against the paragraph to which the amendment was offered, and that the point of order to the paragraph was sustained.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me, the RECORD shows, on page 2551, the following:

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. First, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DYER. While the point of order is pending here to this paragraph is it in order to offer this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to offer amendments and have them read and remain pending, subject to such disposition as may be made of the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Very well. I offer the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Add, at the end of line 23, page 64, the following: 'Provided, That hereafter the Tuberculosis Hospital shall be under the direction and control of the health department.'"

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, to that I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves the point of order to the amendment, which will be pending, and the Clerk will read.

Then they proceeded to dispose of the other parts of the bill.

Mr. DYER. I think that is correct, Mr. Chairman. I do not think the point of order has ever been disposed of. I ask the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the point of order, because it is desired by the health department and Board of Charities, or at least one of them, that this hospital should be put under the health department because it is a contagious hospital, and the principal work of the board of health is in looking after contagious diseases.

Mr. Chairman, to support the amendment which I have offered, providing that the Tuberculosis Hospital of the city of Washington should be put under the management and control of the health commissioner instead of as at present under the Board of Charities, I cite the testimony of Dr. George M. Kober, himself a member at present of the Board of Charities. He was a witness before a subcommittee of the District of Columbia Committee during a recent investigation of the Tuberculosis Hospital. At this hearing Dr. Kober testified in part as follows:

Dr. KOBER. My opinion is that the Tuberculosis Hospital, for example, might well be under the supervision of the health officer, because tuberculosis is a contagious disease, and the health officer might be intrusted with the immediate supervisory powers of such an institution.

Mr. Chairman, this hospital—the tuberculosis of the District of Columbia—was established and opened to the public four years ago. Congress appropriated $100,000 for its erection and equipment. The building was designed for 130 persons, but the average number of patients that have been in the hospital since it was opened four years ago has been only 85.

Dr. John E. Lind testified before our committee on the 31st day of last May. Dr. Lind is in special charge of tuberculosis cases at the Washington Asylum Hospital and Jail. He stated that at that time there were five positive tuberculosis cases at the Washington Asylum Hospital and Jail, and that some of them had been reported as such to the Board of Charities for a month or more previous thereto, and yet were permitted to remain at the Washington Asylum Hospital to the great danger of other patients and attendants. He further testified that there were no facilities for the special treatment of such a disease at the Washington Asylum Hospital.

This all occurred while the Tuberculosis Hospital was not filled to its capacity.. It is convincing, therefore, that the Washington Tuberculosis Hospital was not at that time, at least, meeting the requirements needed for such an institution in this city. Therefore there must be something radically wrong with the arrangements of the Tuberculosis Hospital or with its management, otherwise numerous cases of tuberculosis would not be at the Washington Asylum Hospital, but would be at the Tuberculosis Hospital, one especially equipped and built for the treatment of that dreadful disease. Other testimony elicited at this hearing, including that of the visiting physician at the Washington Asylum Hospital, Dr. D. Percy Hickling, showed that there were, on an average, from 75 to 100 tubercular cases treated at the Washington Asylum Hospital during the last several years, during all of which time the Tuberculosis Hospital has been in operation. For these reasons, and because I believe that this hospital should be under the care and management of the health commissioner, I submitted this amendment.

Prof. Irving Fisher, of Yale University, says that the cost of tuberculosis to the United States, aside from the losses to the victims themselves, amount annually to $570,000,000. This includes the depletion in earnings of those affected by the disease, and the loss of such earnings entirely through untimely deaths. Therefore, not only from a humane standpoint, but from a monetary one, should the Government of the United States use every means within its power to fight this dreadful plague. Whatever is needed in the way of money to make this hospital efficient and a credit to the Capital of the Nation should be readily voted by Congress.

Mr. Chairman, the sick poor should receive proper care and treatment from those in authority. Hospitals should be so conducted and managed that the best possible results can be obtained. Hospitals for contagious diseases should be scrupulously clean, and so conducted as to give the best scientific treatment to such diseases, as well as with due regard to preventing the spread thereof. The hospitals for the sick poor of the District of Columbia should receive the careful consideration of Congress, and legislation should be enacted to the end that money that is appropriated for such purposes should bring the best results possible. At the present time the management, control, and supervision of these institutions are too much divided. The authority should be centered and responsibility fixed in one principal head, be it a health commissioner, a hospital commissioner, or a supervisor. I hope to see legislation enacted in the next Congress looking to this end.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri offers an amendment which the Clerk will report. Will the gentleman from Missouri state at what point and on what page of the bill he desires his amendment to be considered.

Mr. DYER. At the end of line 23, on page 64. That is where the amendment probably belongs, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 23, page 64, add the following:
"Provided, That hereafter the Tuberculosis Hospital shall be under the direction and control of the health department."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Missouri that the entire paragraph between lines 3 and 23, inclusive, has gone out on a point of order. Does the gentleman still desire to offer his amendment in that form as a proviso?

Mr. DYER. No. I ask, then, that it be offered to the end of line 2, at the end of the paragraph having to do with the health department, on the same page—

For the installation of additional furnace at public crematory, $3,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 64, by adding at the end of line 2, the following:
"Provided, That hereafter the Tuberculosis Hospital shall be under the direction and control of the health department."

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, to that I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I think the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman desires to discuss this, I am perfectly willing to reserve the point of order.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss it, but I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD upon the Tuberculosis Hospital and the necessity for having it under the direction and control of the board of health.

Mr. BURLESON. The gentleman understands that I have no disposition to shut him off.

Mr. DYER. I understand that perfectly well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the subject indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I believe that disposes of all matters in connection with the bill, save the point of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, there is one other matter I wish to bring up. On page 33 of the bill that portion of it as brought in by the committee relative to the bathing beach went out on a point of order. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill in the exact language of the original bill, with the additional words, however:

All of which shall be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia, derived from taxes and privileges.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that unanimous consent is required to return to that page.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; no unanimous consent is required to be obtained. There is no provision in the bill for a bathing beach. The law authorizes the establishment and maintenance of a bathing beach, provided the expenses of it are paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia, and that is what I propose to do.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair is inclined to the opinion that the gentleman from Kentucky can not offer an amendment on page 33, that page and section having been passed, unless a right to recur thereto is first obtained.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. But I do not wish to return to page 33 except for the purpose of getting the language therein contained. I do not care whether the amendment be offered at the last portion of the bill or not.

The CHAIRMAN. But the burden is upon the gentleman from Kentucky to designate the place in the bill so that the Clerk may know to what portion of the bill it is offered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to the bill:

Bathing beach: For superintendent, $600; watchman, $400; temporary services, supplies, and maintenance, $2,250; for repairs to buildings, pools, and the upkeep of the grounds, $1,500, to be immediately available; in all, $4,850; of all which shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxes and privileges.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that if the amendment is considered to be before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I made a point of order against the original provision in the bill because it provided that the bathing beach should be maintained, one half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the other half out of the money in the Federal Treasury. The Chair sustained the point of order, because there was no law authorizing the payment of one-half of it out of the Federal Treasury. An amendment, therefore, is in order, complying with the original bathing-beach act, and my amendment is in full compliance with that.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky——

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon the Chair for just one moment, the Chair will state again that he is inclined to the opinion that this amendment can not be entertained unless some particular place in the bill is designated to which the amendment is offered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if it comes as an addition to the bill, it comes immediately following that which has gone before; in other words, after the last word in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman offer it to be so considered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I offer the amendment to the bill, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURLESON. Where?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It does not matter where. I do not care where it comes in. I am not very particular whether it comes in at all or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky will be considered as having been offered at the end of the bill. The gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment. May I ask the gentleman from Kentucky—I was not in the Hall when the matter was disposed of on page 33—was there any law cited to the Chair at that time providing that the maintenance of the bathing beach should be paid wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes; the bathing-beach act was produced and discussed, and the Chair held that it was payable out of the revenues of the District.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order that the amendment was not offered at the proper place in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I reserved all points of order.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Texas has a very peculiar notion relative to this bill. Will the Chair please indulge me for just a moment? The gentleman from Texas has intimated that nobody but the committee can offer anything which may go into this bill, although it is authorized by law. Any Member upon the floor has a right to have incorporated in this bill any provision which is authorized by law and which has been left out of the bill. It is a fundamental principle which, carried to its last analysis, nobody can dispute that anything that is authorized by law to be put into this bill can be put into it by anybody, a majority of the House agreeing and voting with him.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kentucky pardon me? I do not understand that there is any law authorizing the maintenance of the bathing beach wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. I recall now reading in the RECORD, having my recollection refreshed by the statement made to me privately by the gentleman from Texas, the reasons on which the Chair based his reasons the other day, that the original provision in the bill providing for the creation of the bathing beach and expenses should be paid wholly out of the District of Columbia revenues. I can not see how that requires or authorizes the maintenance of the bathing beach payable wholly out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. Whether it authorizes it at all or not I do not undertake to say. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. On a former day when the item of bathing beach was reached in the consideration of the bill a point of order was made against the paragraph by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] on the ground that the provision charging the expense of upkeep, operation, and conduct of the beach on a half-and-half basis was not authorized by law. The original paragraph provided that the items covered by the paragraph should be paid half from the revenues of the District and half from the Federal Treasury. The Chair then ruled that the point of order should be sustained, because under the law no part of the expense was chargeable to the Government revenues. The gentleman from Kentucky now moves an amendment providing for the bathing-beach item, with a modification and proviso that all the expense of maintenance shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxes and privileges. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the point of order against the paragraph upon the grounds as stated. The Chair finds in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Fifty-first Congress, first session, the following:

FREE BATHING BEACH, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Mr. ATKINS of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7056) establishing a free bathing beach on the Potomac River near the Washington Monument.

The bill was read, as follows:

"Be it enacted, etc."—

This is section 1, and is the same as already has been fully set out in the RECORD and upon which there is no controversy here—

"SEC. 2. That the sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated from any unexpended moneys in the Treasury of the United States to be immediately available for the purposes of this bill."

It will be noted that the bill as reported from the appropriate committee provided that all the expenses should be paid from the Federal Treasury.

Immediately upon a completion of the reading of the bill and report by the Clerk, and before any debate was had, Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, was recognized.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] moved to amend section 2 of the bill by striking out the clause making the appropriation payable wholly from the United States Treasury and providing that one-half of the expense should be charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia and one-half against the Federal Treasury. Thereafter Mr. Bliss, of Michigan, was recognized, and the following appears in the RECORD:

Mr. BLISS. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the District of Columbia having a public bathing house, but I have objections to the United States Government paying for it. I wish to offer an amendment as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Illinois. It is to strike out, in line 2 of section 2, the words "any unexpended moneys in the United States Treasury," and insert the words "the revenues of the District of Columbia," so that the section will read:

"That the sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia, to be immediately available, for the purposes of this bill."

It will be observed, then, that the amendment by way of substitute offered by the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Bliss, was to provide that all the expense should be borne by and chargeable to the revenues of the District of Columbia. A vote, after debate, was had, as shown by the following language in the RECORD:

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Michigan for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, which substitute will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Strike out, in line 2 of section 2, the words 'any unexpended moneys in United States Treasury' and insert the following: 'That the sum of $3,000 is hereby appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia, to be immediately available for the purpose of this bill.'"

The substitute was adopted.

The amendment as amended was adopted.

That is the history, therefore, as it appears in the RECORD on the subject. Now, the question further arises on the point of order, as made by the gentleman from Illinois, that while that might be true, yet the act of continued maintenance of the bathing beach would not be necessarily covered by the language of the act as passed.

Therefore, for the purpose of ascertainment by the Chair as to what the intent of the law was and what the proper construction of the law is, the Chair made inquiry, and from the discussion had when the amendments were pending he finds the following:

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have only a word to say. I suppose this will furnish a very pleasant sport for the youth of the District of Columbia, and perhaps some of the grown folks; and I commend it to the farmers' organizations of the country whose mortgages are being foreclosed as the relief tendered to them by the Fifty-first Congress, notwithstanding what was promised during the campaign, namely, the appropriation of public money for the purpose of furnishing a bathing place for the people of the District of Columbia.

* * * * * * *

Mr. KERR. * * * It does not seem to me that the people of the United States ought to be charged with the expense of keeping the people of Washington clean. I think they ought to furnish their own soap and everything necessary for that purpose, and the people living in other parts of the country ought not to be required to pay any portion of that expense.

In the early days of the Roman Empire the people of Rome took care of themselves. As the city declined and became more opulent and less patriotic, it was said by a Roman historian that they had declined so much in public virtue that their only aspiration was to be furnished with theaters and bread. I hope that is not the condition of the people of Washington City. I hope they have a little of the spirit which was spoken of by a dstinguished gentleman, who afterwards became the candidate of the Democratic Party, Mr. Greeley, who said that "the most unfortunate day in a man's life was the day in which he made up his mind to get a dollar without earning it." I think the most unfortunate day for the city of Washington is the day in which its people ask for money without earning it, as other people in the country around them have to do.

* * * * * * *

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I rose for the purpose of making the very statement just made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]. I apprehend that they have built bathing places at Philadelphia, but I apprehend also that the Federal Government did not pay for them, but that they were paid by the city government; and I think if we are going to appropriate public money or enter into this business at all it ought to be in the shape of a bill authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to locate and pay for this establishment from the District funds.

I concede, sir, that we have the power to do it, for we can do what we please within the limits of the District of Columbia. We have exclusive authority here. But I do not believe it would be right for Congress to appropriate the money paid by my constituents to make bathing places for the people of this District. We had just as well appropriate money to build tennis grounds for the people of the District or baseball grounds or to erect ten-pin alleys, or anything else in the shape of amusement, as to appropriate the public funds for the purpose specified by this bill. All of these are sources of amusement and pleasure.

And the discussion went on, participated in by other gentlemen, and after the debate the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Bliss, was adopted as just above recorded, charging the entire expense against the District of Columbia. That being the law as it reads, and this being the discussion had at that time, the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] follows the only statute which authorizes an appropriation for the bathing beach to be made and is therefore in order. Accordingly the point of order is overruled.

Mr. BURLESON. But the decision of the Chair overlooked the point that that is disturbing the orderly arrangement of the bill, and that the amendment was offered after the reading of the bill had been completed and after we had asked unanimous consent to return to other items simply for the purpose of correcting clerical errors and omissions. The point of order is made now that the appropriate place in the bill for this amendment has been passed, and that the gentleman can not tack an amendment onto the end of the bill, even if it is authorized by law, because in that event there would never be any conclusion to the consideration or reading of the appropriation measures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me, I am going on the assumption that this House can attach to an appropriation bill anything that is authorized by law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] does not dispute that proposition, as the Chair understands, but the Chair will add that the point that the gentleman from Texas makes is that it must be done orderly and in accordance with the rules governing the right to offer amendments.

Mr. BORLAND. I want to speak on that point of order, Mr. Chairman, and say that that question came up at this session in the consideration of the river and harbor bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] had offered an amendment to improve the rivers of Illinois at a place in the bill where the rivers of Illinois were not mentioned. I raised the point of order that it would disturb the orderly procedure of that bill and that it should be offered at the place in the bill where the rivers of Illinois were classified. The chair then being occupied by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], he overruled that objection, and held that if the amendment were in order at any place in the bill the question of its place would not be important.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, that is not the question before the committee at the present time at all. When the end of the bill was reached it was not gainsaid that it would be in order to offer that particular amendment at that time, but that is not at all the situation presented by the gentleman from Missouri. If the amendment had been offered then it would have been in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question, then, after all, resolves itself for the Chair to determine when the end of the bill was reached.

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is all.

The CHAIRMAN. After the reading of the bill was completed Members began to rise, and, not as a matter of right, but as a matter of unanimous consent, asked to recur to certain pages of the bill, it being then a matter for the House to determine as to whether or not unanimous consent would be granted to recur to certain other pages in the bill. Nothing else save these requests for unanimous consent having been preferred and nothing else having occurred subsequent to the reaching of the end of the bill, the Chair is of the opinion that the amendment offered now by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], at the end of the bill, would be in order. Therefore the point of order is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes; to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] offers an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and the Clerk will report it.

Mr. LLOYD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LLOYD. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read. Quite a number of us did not hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LLOYD] asks unanimous consent that the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] be again reported. Without objection it is so ordered, and then the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] will be read without further order.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, the correct amount is "$4,750." By changing "$480" in the original bill to "$400" the amount is changed to "$4,750."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the figures will be changed accordingly.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the amendment by striking out all after the figures "$4,750."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] offers an amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Oh, no; the gentleman is too late. The original amendment has been declared in order, and, of course, my amendment is quite in order under the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania insist that the point of order comes too late?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I insist that the point of order comes too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so rules. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that to make the departure that the original amendment seeks to enforce would be unfair, or at least very inconsistent.

The situation is this: The Congress of the United States has absolute control over this District and over this city. The people of this city are at the mercy of the American Congress. They are at our mercy, because in the creation and enforcement of the laws under the Constitution they can not escape it.

We have charge of the health and sanitation of the District of Columbia. It is our business, as the legislative body controlling this District, to see to it that the health of this community is preserved and promoted; and we have just as much right to invite and encourage the people of this, the capital city of the Nation, the one national city in the Union, to participate in the pastime and natural custom of bathing and keeping their bodies clean for the promotion of their health as we have to dig sewers to keep the streets clean and to erect hospitals for the care of the afflicted.

It has been suggested that somebody at some time in connection with this legislation said that Rome fell at a time when her people were indulging in the luxury of baths. That statement is a revelation to me, that Rome fell because she kept herself clean. My impression has always been that Rome fell because she became unclean, unclean morally, because she decayed mentally and decayed physically. There never has been in the history of the world a case pointed out where any nation fell because of the inclination of her people to keep their bodies clean. In the Office Buildings of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States the Government provides and we use soap and water freely—at least I hope we all use them freely. One gentleman shakes his head [laughter], as if there were some doubt about that, but I hope that the rule is universal.

Mr. TAYLOR of Ohio. The opportunity is universal.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The opportunity is universal at least, whether the practice is or not. But the bathing beach that we speak of is within the reach of the 500 Members of the Congress of the United States, and I know that many Members of this House have taken advantage of it in times past. It is within reach of the thousands of Government employees and their children, whether taxpayers or not, who reside in this District. Now, would it not be absurd to say that in a great appropriation bill of this kind the Congress of the United States made one exception, departed from the organic law of the District and general custom of the Government in only one case, and that in the case where they sought to discourage the men, women, and children of the Capital City of the greatest Nation in the world from keeping clean. I hope this committee will not indulge in any such absurd action, and I hope that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who now takes the floor, will agree with me and make the passage of this amendment as amended by me unanimous.

Let us encourage it in remaining what it is to-day, not only one of the cleanest in the world morally and physically, but the most attractive and beautiful on earth.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly agree with the remarks of the distinguished gentleman just read by the Chairman of this Committee of the Whole when the original bill was under consideration. That is, that the people of the city of Washington ought to furnish their own soap and water to keep themselves clean, and not impose upon the taxpayers as far away as California to help them buy their own soap and water.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that a body coming directly from the people as this has come desires to impose a tax upon the Nation throughout its length and breadth to keep the citizens of Washington clean. This has been referred to as coming under the "organic act." The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] has just made that reference. It does not come under the "organic act." It never has been under the "organic act," and if the gentleman had listened closely to the proceedings which took place at the time of the authorization of the bathing beach he would have been informed that it was at the expense of the people of the District of Columbia, the Congress then being unwilling to impose its maintenance upon the people at large.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. This bill itself in the first paragraph of it refers to the fact that all the amounts shall be equally divided under the organic act.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment will be adopted. The city of Washington is made up of a population that comes from every section of the Nation. The rich people who reside here close up their homes in the summer. They go to the seashore or to Europe for their creature comfort. There are thousands of Government clerks living here who are accredited to the various States of the Union. They are not residents of Washington. Few of them are taxpayers here. They live in rented quarters. They represent, as I say, every State in the Union, including the State of California, and I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the taxpayers of my State do not object to paying their small pro rata share included in this item for keeping the people who live here, and who have to remain in this humid climate all summer, absolutely clean. I sincerely hope the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania will be adopted.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, the original appropriation used for the construction of the bathing beach was made from the treasury of the District of Columbia. Subsequently an appropriation of $5,000 was made jointly from the Treasury of the United States and the treasury of the District of Columbia for an addition. Then an appropriation of $7,000 was made for still further additions, one-half from the Treasury of the United States and one-half from the treasury of the District of Columbia. For many years the force necessary for supervision and control of the bathing beach has been paid for on the half-and-half plan. It is one of the useful services taken advantage of by the children of the District of Columbia, and your committee, acting in accordance with the spirit of the law as we understand it to be, embodied this provision in the bill just as it will be if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania is agreed to. I sincerely hope the committee will adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania and not now, on an appropriation bill and in this way, overturn the plan which was adopted in 1878 for the support of the government of the District of Columbia. I ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to the amendment be agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BELL of Georgia having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills and resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 8082. An act to amend section 1440 of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

S. 8230. An act for the relief of Loren W. Greene; and

Senate concurrent resolution 40.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Secretary of War, under the joint resolution directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of American citizens for damages suffered within American territory growing out of the late insurrection in Mexico, approved August 9, 1912, be transmitted to the President, who is hereby respectfully requested to cause a claim for the amount of the damages reported therein as suffered by American citizens within American territory to be presented to the Government of Mexico as a claim in behalf of the Government of the United States.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 28186. An act making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3952) for the purpose of repealing so much of an act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indians located in Kansas City, Kans., providing for the sale of a tract of land located in Kansas City, Kans., reserved for a public burial ground under a treaty made and concluded with the Wyandotte Tribe of Indians on the 31st day of January, 1855.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 7855) to authorize the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in section 36, township 134 north, range 79 west, in the State of North Dakota.

Also:

Senate resolution 451.

Resolved, That the Senate extend to the Speaker and the Members of the House of Representatives an invitation to attend the exercises in commemoration of the life, character, and public services of the late James S. Sherman, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, to be held in the Senate Chamber on Saturday, the 15th day of February next, at 12 o'clock noon.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 27879. An act providing authority for the Northern Pacific Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Missouri River in section 36, township 134, range 79 west, in the State of North Dakota.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) there were 33 ayes and 19 noes.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BURLESON. And I make the point of order that that comes too late.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And on that, Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order against the amendment, and the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky comes too late.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I introduced this provision on page 33 relative to the bathing beach. It went out on a point of order. The Chairman of the committee has just read at some length his reasons for sustaining that point of order. I offered an amendment which was in order; that amendment was in order for no other reason upon earth than because it had attached to it the imposition of its maintenance on the District of Columbia. Now, when that is stricken out then we recur to the original matter which was subject to the point of order. If it was subject to a point of order then, it is subject to a point of order now. Consequently we are now where we were before I introduced the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. However harmoniously the Chair might agree with the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky relative to the bathing-beach proposition, that can have no bearing here as to whether or not the amendment as it now stands is in order. The gentleman from Kentucky is an able lawyer, and recognizes that there is such a term in the law as "res judicata" and a "day in court." The amendment is now in the control of the committee for adoption or rejection. The gentleman from Kentucky and all Members have had their day in court, and the matter of being in order is res judicata; the point of order of the gentleman from Texas is sustained, and therefore the point of order of the gentleman from Kentucky is overruled. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky) the ayes were 41 and the noes were 15.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky and Mr. BURLESON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were 69 ayes and 21 noes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that no quorum is present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and three Members present—a quorum. The ayes have it, and the amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

"And there is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter, such sums as will, with the interest thereon at the rate of 3.65 per cent per annum, be sufficient to pay the principal of the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued under the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, at maturity, which said sums the Secretary of the Treasury shall annually invest in said bonds at not exceeding the par value thereof, and all bonds so redeemed shall cease to bear interest and shall be canceled and destroyed in the same manner that United States bonds are canceled and destroyed. (Vol. 20, p. 419, U. S. Stats.)

"Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable; and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, as hereinbefore provided. (Vol. 20, p. 105, U. S. Stats.)

"For the purpose of meeting the payment of interest and for the purpose of providing for said sinking fund the sum of $975,408, or as much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated (from the respective funds described in the two acts of Congress above set out), to be charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia, derived from taxes levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privileges of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the Chair understands that the point of order is reserved upon the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized, the point of order being reserved. The language is, "All points of order are reserved against the paragraph."

Mr. MANN. The reason I asked that is because the amendment when originally offered was to go in ahead of line 1 on page 98, but as now reported by the Clerk it is offered to come in at the end of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I offer it to come in at the end of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Texas reserve all points of order on the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in the bill as originally brought in by the committee there were just a few words under the heading "Sinking fund and interest." These were "to pay interest and sinking fund on funded debt, $975,408." To that provision I made a point of order upon the ground that as the item was then in the bill it required half of the sinking fund and interest to be paid out of the Federal Treasury. My contention was and is that the law requires all of this sinking fund and interest to be paid by the District. The Chair in sustaining the point of order decided that the point of order was well taken, and in rendering that ruling stated that the law did require this amount to be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. From that ruling an appeal was taken to the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole sustained the Chair and made his ruling its judgment that the whole of this amount was payable out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, and not half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia and the remainder out of the Treasury of the United States.

The act under which these bonds were issued pledged the faith of the United States to their payment. I have heretofore argued at some length—and I shall not do so again on this occasion—but shall simply state my position as briefly as it is possible for me to do so, and that is that the United States has pledged its faith that these bonds shall be paid. That plighted faith is obligatory on the part of the United States only as between the United States and the bondholder, that obligation between the United States and the bondholder in no sense relieving the District of Columbia from its original obligation. As I said, the Chair has thus ruled, sustaining my contention, and the Committee of the Whole House in sustaining the somewhat lengthy opinion of the Chair has passed judgment and has said that the Chair's ruling is the judgment of the committee.

Mr. Chairman, I have never been and am not now in favor of the repudiation of any sort of a debt. The United States has bound itself, has pledged her faith, rather, to see that this interest and debt are paid, and, as has been determined by the Chair and by the Committee of the Whole, this is a debt owing by the District of Columbia. I offer this amendment for the purpose of putting into execution that plighted faith of the United States to compel the District of Columbia not to repudiate but to pay this debt. Parliamentary rules permit the act itself to be reenacted, and in order that the whole matter may be before the House and before the executive officers when they finally come to determine the matter, I have incorporated the act relative to interest in my amendment, and I have also incorporated the act relative to the sinking fund in my amendment, those two acts making it clear to every man who wishes to read impartially that this is a debt of the District of Columbia. Then, carrying out the ruling made by the Chair, carrying out the judgment rendered by this House by a vote of nearly 3 to 1, I provide that that debt shall be paid by the District of Columbia. That, Mr. Chairman, I deem to be sufficient explanation of the matter.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, the point of order really brings up the same question that was presented to the Chair a few days ago, and having reference to the importance of the ruling, asked a little further argument, and some additional authorities in support of the position of the committee may not be amiss. A few moments ago the Chair in sustaining a point of order to the bathing-beach item, read copious extracts from contemporaneous debate to show the meaning that was attached at the time to the original act authorizing this beach, and appropriating therefor. This was entirely proper as a legitimate aid to the interpretation of an ambiguous section. But the same aid to interpretation is furnished in a more abundant and emphatic form in the debate upon the act in 1879. This act in part is reproduced in section 1 of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky, now pending. We insist again, that if this section is ambiguous, a flood of light is afforded as to its real meaning by the arguments of Mr. Blackburn, and others. The gentleman from Kentucky insists that this act is a contract of reimbusement. But in the contemporaneous debate it was admitted on all hands that it was a contract of assumption, and on that ground was vehemently opposed. If the Chair will look to section 1 of this amendment, which is the part of the act of 1879 with which we are concerned, he will find the following language:

> There is authorized to be appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expense of the District of Columbia * * *.

The real meaning of this sentence must be sought not in this language standing apart and alone, but in its relation to other acts, and in the general attitude of the Government at that time toward the District of Columbia.

Looking to this entire body of legislation without reference even to the illuminating debate on the section under consideration it is palpable that Congress meant to say in substance that the appropriation for the sinking fund thereby authorized should be a part of the proportional sum contributed by the United States to the payment of the expenses of the District. That is to say the amount required for the sinking fund would be included in the first instance in the estimates for the expenses of the District, and the same amount, when paid by the Government, would be credited on the one-half of the total expenses for which it was liable. This was entirely proper. In other words, the United States having assumed to pay one-half of the expenses of the District by their antecedent legislation, did not propose to pay in addition one-half of the sinking fund, but intended to include the same as a portion of their proportional part of one-half. This intent might have been expressed differently. Any statute on the books might be expressed in other, and often in happier terms. It does not argue that a statute is incapable of satisfactory and coherent interpretation, because it is inaptly phrased. To say the least of it, the language used, if it imports an assumption of the whole debt, with a provision for reimbursement is not a clear and positive assumption. At best, whether the one view, or the other is taken of its meaning, the language used is somewhat ambiguous. What then? Shall we look to this section alone, and abandon the usual principles of interpretation? For the time being, I pass by the precedents in the form of parliamentary rulings on the meaning of this section, though these precedents are admittedly in our favor, and taking up the contemporaneous discussion of the act of 1879, I challenge any Member of this House to take issue with me, when I assert that from first to last, this section was discussed with an agreement on all hands, that if it was adopted, a new liability would be fastened upon the Government.

Concede that the act of 1879 was an assumption of the whole debt by the United States, with an accompanying contract of reimbursement, and the whole ground of Mr. Blackburn's vigorous antagonism is at once cut away. Upon this view of the section, he was making a foolish, as well as futile fight. Instead of opposing, he ought to have welcomed the amendment. So far from imposing a burden, it really afforded a protection, since it provided for the repayment in full of any money advanced by the United States for the discharge of the indebtedness of the District. Mr. Blackburn, as a rule, was not a debater to overlook any crevice in the armor of an adversary, but for the time being, he was more than purblind. Setting up a man of straw by virtue of his contention that this section would impose a liability upon the Government for one-half of an unjust debt, he proceeded to belabor this straw man in most terrific fashion. In his benighted condition he did not recognize a friend in disguise, and so far from applauding Mr. Atkins for the very handsome fashion in which his report protected the interests of the Government, he criticized this item in merciless fashion, again and again warning the Members of the House that if they adopted the amendment, they would saddle the Government with an outrageous and indefensible liability for one-half of a fraudulent debt.

At no time did it dawn upon Mr. Blackburn that should the House of Representatives adopt the section which he was urging it to reject, they would admit a friend within their gates, and so far from assuming a liability, would protect the Government against imposition. These foolish predecessors of ours consumed two or three days in the discussion of an amendment, under an entire misapprehension of its terms and effect. After all they builded better than they knew. Who were the real friends of the Government in this controversy? It is a curious inquiry. Blackburn in his desire to protect the Government, insisted that the House reject the amendment. The friends of the amendment agreeing that it would charge the Government with a new liability, urged its passage. Mr. Blackburn in the result is a winner, in spite of himself. After all of these years it is now ascertained that the friends of the amendment erred in supporting it, and the opponents of the same were sadly at fault in their rancorous antagonism to a proposition of real merit. Who is entitled to criticism for his part in that debate? Mr. Blackburn for approving a measure which he ought to have supported, or Mr. Haydee and others in advocating a measure which they ought to have opposed, since in the result, relief and protection has been afforded, when an obligation was intended? In the view now pressed upon the Chair, the Government, as a result of this act of 1879, has a valid claim for many millions upon the District. This is what Mr. Blackburn said in 1879, speaking to section 1 of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky:

> This report of the committee on conference binds this Government in its own capacity to the payment of one-half of the debt.

Further, he said:

> This proposition of this section of the bill is to fasten upon the Government of the United States for the first time an obligation to pay one-half of the funded debt.

To the same effect Mr. Atkins, and Mr. Hendee, and many others.

Mr. HAYES, Mr. SIMS, and Mr. MADDEN rose.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have not concluded, Mr. Chairman. I thought the Chair was going to ask a question, and, therefore, I paused.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the law, the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States is required to pay the interest and the sinking fund that is provided by law?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. And he is required to pay it, of course, out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. Then the Secretary of the Treasury is required under the law to give the United States credit by the amount which has been paid?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. LLOYD. Would not that divide the amount that is paid equally between the District of Columbia and the United States?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think it would, and I think that is where difficulty has arisen in minds of many who have construed this section as it was never intended to be construed. Because the law says the amount paid, shall be credited on the proportional liability of the United States, they have construed this to mean a reimbursement, when as a matter of fact if the amount needed for the sinking fund and interest, is included in the total estimate for expenses, the amount thereafter paid by the Government in this respect, that is for sinking fund and interest should be credited on the half for which the Government is liable. If this is done, the Government in the result will pay merely that one-half which it has assumed to pay. I append a statement to make this clear.

Whole expenses of the District including sinking fund and interest, payable half and half, say $4,000,000, proportional part to be paid by the United States $2,000,000, interest and sinking fund charge paid by United States and by law to be credited on the proportional part of one-half of whole expenses, $1,000,000. Balance to be paid by the United States $1,000,000. Total actually paid by the Government $2,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, the importance of this matter justifies a repetition of some of the points presented a few days ago. If the Chairman is still of the same mind, and if he is not aided by the clarifying debate of Mr. Blackburn and others to arrive at the true meaning of section 1, of the Johnson amendment, if he is able to differentiate this case, from the bathing-beach case, if he is mindful of, but not constrained by the precedents afforded in the rulings of Chairman GARRETT and others, why then as a matter of course, he will abide by his former ruling. But I hope that a different conclusion will be reached upon the merits. Is it possible that for so many years so many people have been in error in this matter?

Is it possible that all of the participants in the debate were at fault? Is it possible that in this gathering of distinguished men, Blackburn, and Hewitt, and Grout, and many others, there was no one acute enough to see the manifest meaning of this beneficent amendment now ascertained to be a shield and protection for the Government? So far from binding, this amendment unloosed, so far from entangling the Government in the meshes of a fraudulent debt, it is now insisted that by its very terms the cords of entanglement are cut away. The Committee on Appropriations has not been concerned to inquire into the righteousness of the half-and-half principle. It may be wholly wrong. We have been concerned merely to inquire whether this section authorized an appropriation for the sinking fund on the half-and-half basis. If so, we were required to make it, but it was competent for the committee to strike out the appropriation. The committee can refuse to appropriate for the discharge of this obligation, if it is so disposed, even if it agrees that the half-and-half obligation was explicitly assumed. But no such discretion was lodged in the Committee on Appropriations. Whether the assumption was righteous or unrighteous, conceding that it was actually undertaken, the committee must appropriate accordingly, and its action is not subject to a point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly. I yield with pleasure, because I wish nothing better than to bring before this body not a controversy over the half-and-half principle, which is sought to be injected into the determination, of this controversy, but the merits of the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Would not that involve the question as to what the half-and-half division was to apply to?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I am referring to the act of 1878.

Mr. SAUNDERS. 1879. That is the one relating to the sinking fund.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Does the gentleman contend in either of those acts, where the items are enumerated, that the District is to pay half and the Government is to pay half, that the item of interest or sinking fund of the debt was enumerated?

Mr. SAUNDERS. The provision for the sinking fund does not come into existence until the act of 1879.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Is it not true that the particular items to which the half-and-half rule is to apply are enumerated in that act of 1878?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Perhaps I am not able to read it right, then.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let me answer this in my own way. I know what the gentleman is going to read. The provision for one-half payments was established, in 1874, and 1878. Before that time Congress had aided the District by varying appropriations. The acts of 1874, and 1878 were intended to establish, and did establish fully the half-and-half principle. The act provided that this principle should apply to the expenses of the District. Clearly the interest on the funded indebtedness for which the District was liable, was one of the expenses of the District. Interest is fairly included within the meaning of the word "expenses."

This is my answer to the gentleman from South Dakota. I will say further to my friend from South Dakota that in the debate in 1879 it was admitted on all hands that the antecedent acts committed the Government of the United States to the payment of one-half the interest, and that if they adopted the first section included in the pending amendment, such action would commit the United States Government to the payment of one-half of the principal.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The first one in the proposed amendment seems to be the substance of the item in the act of 1879.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is the act of 1879.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And something of the same language is in the act of 1878, which reads as follows, if the gentleman will permit——

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It reads this way:

> Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 28, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable, and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as hereinbefore provided.

The provision thereinbefore enumerates the different items.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. How does the gentleman reconcile his present contention with the provision here, that if the Government pays the interest on these bonds it shall get credit for the amount as part of its proportion for general expenses, not for one-half, but credit for the whole amount paid?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That refers to the system of bookkeeping in vogue.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Oh, well, that——

Mr. SAUNDERS. Permit me to answer the gentleman's question. It may be that I will submit a very imperfect answer, but I desire to answer the gentleman's question as best I can. I have already argued that the language of that section, and the language of the other section, are not very apt, and require reference to other sections of the statute for their proper understanding. When this is done there is no real difficulty. I assert that when these sections were interpreted by the men who enacted the act of 1879, those gentlemen were not troubled by the suggestions that now trouble the gentleman from South Dakota. They interpreted these sections, just as the Committee on Appropriations has interpreted them. That interpretation was of great aid to us, and to every man who seeks to arrive at the real meaning of the language used.

If you segregate this section from the cognate body of legislation, segregate it from the general attitude at the time of the Federal Government toward the District of Columbia, you may find yourself in difficulty. But you must look to all of these aids. In the interpretation of a will, if you take one section by itself, apart from the balance of the will, and look to that section alone, you may find difficulties not easy of solution. Yet on the whole the will may be readily interpreted.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Well, I will say to the gentleman that perhaps the action of an administrative officer had not been questioned promptly enough to bring out what occurred at the time.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The meaning of the section was discussed by the very men who enacted it into law.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The gentleman is not allowing me to make a statement of what I had in mind.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I thought the gentleman asked a question.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I am seeking light on the question, and I am seeking it from the gentleman who is the source of light, but I can take a little time of my own later.

The gentleman from Virginia says that while the language of the bill under an ordinary construction of language would indicate a certain thing, the administrative officers of the Government have determined otherwise, and that probably they are better qualified to make the interpretation than we.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I made no such statement as that. I did not refer to the interpretation by the administrative officers. I did not refer to their interpretation.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I want to ask the gentleman a question as to the meaning of the language. Are we not obliged to interpret those provisions by the antecedent acts?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That is what I said.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. If the Government is to get credit for the payment of the interest, is it not also safe to assume that it is to get credit for the payment of the whole amount?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No. I do not say that. On the contrary I have undertaken to show that the Government agreed to include the sinking fund and interest, in the expenses of the District, and to pay one half of the total. This is what it means by acts, crediting the amount paid on the proportional part.

I have said nothing about any interpretation of this act by ministerial officers. What I said was this, that it has been interpreted three times by chairmen of this committee. I said that it was interpreted by the body which passed the act of 1879, and in that body there was no contrariety of attitude as to what this section meant. I said further that the action of this body from 1879 forward, was a further interpretation of this act.

I said further that the very body which passed the act of 1879, when it came to appropriate for the sinking fund, appropriated precisely as we have continued to appropriate from that day to the present time. I have referred to all of these things as an aid to our interpretation. If the gentleman, or any Member of this body fastens his attention on one section of these acts without looking to the whole body of legislation, and to the rulings of antecedent Chairmen, one of whom was the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], why of course they may create difficulties, that a recourse to aids ready to hand, would easily resolve.

The CHAIRMAN. A moment ago the gentleman made reference to the act of 1879. To what act of 1879?

Mr. SAUNDERS. That section which the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] embodied in his amendment. I think that act is really not difficult of construction. I think that act could be construed without the aid of the contemporaneous debate, which I so fully cited a few days ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman direct the attention of the Chair to the particular act of 1879 which the amendment refers to?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why, the amendment is the act itself. The amendment simply reproduces the section of the act of 1879, which affords the foundation for the appropriation originally contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman mean to say that the first paragraph and the second paragraph of the amendment are taken from the act of 1879?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No, not at all. The amendment before the Chair, reproduces in one case the act of 1879, and in the other the act of 1878.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman read to the Chair that part of the amendment where the act of 1879 appears?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is all there:

> And there is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia in pursuance of the act of Congress approved—

And so on, down to the reference to the act, volume 20.

That was the language contained in the conference report of Mr. Atkins, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations——

The CHAIRMAN. On what bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS. On the bill of 1879.

The CHAIRMAN. On the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Why certainly. It has been understood all the time, that the appropriation for the District of Columbia for the year 1879 was made in the sundry civil bill. Section 1 of the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky was brought before the House by a conference report. It was immediately attacked by Mr. Blackburn, then a Member of this body, afterwards United States Senator, upon the ground that it proposed to saddle the Government of the United States to the extent of one-half of the funded debt of the District. This was conceded to be its meaning and intent.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Has there at any time from 1879 been either a bill or a report from any appropriation committee or any conference report or any interpretation placed by any administrative officer with reference to the application of this fund in line with the amendment now suggested by the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No. On the contrary, whenever the attention of a presiding officer has heretofore been called to this contention, it has been overruled.

That is all, Mr. Chairman. This has been in a measure a repetition of some portions of the discussion of last Tuesday, but this is so important a subject that it deserves the fullest consideration. The point of order to this amendment raises anew, the question embraced and considered in the former ruling of the Chair. It is hoped that on further consideration the Chair may modify that ruling.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BORLAND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had, on February 5, 1913, approved and signed bill of the following title:

H. R. 24194. An act to create a new division of the western judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Pecos, Tex., and for other purposes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. BORLAND and Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota rose.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Will the Chair hear me upon the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he has recognized the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND]; but the Chair will be glad later to recognize the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, the amendment to which this point of order is raised is offered for the purpose, and has the effect, of making the law as decided by the Chair the other day apply to the appropriations in this appropriation bill. It has no other effect, and it is a proper item to go in. The interest and the sinking fund are amounts that should be appropriated for in this bill, but should be appropriated for in accordance with the law as it was determined under the discussion the other day. The argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] is largely a repetition of the argument he used at that time. That matter is, as the Chair said a few moments ago, stare decisis—it has been adjudicated. The particular item in the bill was taken out and the point of order was sustained.

Under that ruling, under that stare decisis, this amendment becomes in order, because it complies with that ruling and with the law upon which the ruling was founded.

In order to refresh the recollection of the gentleman from Virginia and the Chair and the House as to the exact operation of this half-and-half principle, I want to refer to the language of the law of 1878. It is always stated in debate, was so stated a few minutes ago in reference to the bathing beach, and is stated in reference to all of these items, that some kind of a general contract or organic law exists between the Government of the United States and the District of Columbia by which the Government of the United States is obligated to pay one-half of all the expenditures, general and special, of the District of Columbia. That is not the law and never was the law; but that general assumption has enabled items from time to time to creep into appropriation bills to the disadvantage of the Treasury of the United States and to the advantage of the treasury of the District of Columbia. That general impression is cultivated and made universal through the constant appeal to the half-and-half principle as the organic law of the District of Columbia.

As a matter of fact, there can be no organic law of the District of Columbia. I will not stop to argue that question. The statute providing for the form of government for the District of Columbia and amended from time to time is an ordinary act, no different from any other act of Congress. As times and conditions change, as the District gets out of difficulties in which it then was involved, other situations present themselves, and that law is subject to amendment from time to time as the wisdom of Congress may determine.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. We are fully agreed as to that. We never contended that what was called the organic act, and which is a misnomer, is not capable of repeal or amendment at the pleasure of Congress at any time.

Mr. BORLAND. That being true, and no difference existing between us, that impression being removed, I hope, as far as it may have taken lodgment in the mind of any Member here, I want to refer Members and the Chair to what the half-and-half division originally was.

In the act of 1878, United States Statutes at Large, volume 20, page 104, it is said:

The said commissioners shall submit to the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and annually thereafter for his examination and approval, a statement showing in detail the work proposed to be undertaken by them during the fiscal year next ensuing and the estimated cost thereof.

There is one item, the work proposed to be undertaken and the estimated cost thereof.

The cost of constructing, repairing, and maintaining all bridges authorized by law across the Potomac River within the District of Columbia, and also all other streams in said District.

That is another item.

The cost of maintaining all public institutions of charity, reformatories, and prisons belonging to or controlled wholly or in part by the District of Columbia and which are now by law supported wholly or in part by the United States or District of Columbia.

That is another item.

The expenses of the Washington Aqueduct and its appurtenances.

That is another item.

An itemized statement and estimate of the amount necessary to defray the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the next fiscal year.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. I think I anticipate the gentleman's question, and if he will be patient I will answer it. I will yield later. Those are the items referred to in that law of 1878 which must be estimated for by the commissioners and submitted to the Secretary of the Treasury. Then the Secretary of the Treasury sends them to Congress, and the language of that same section continues in these words:

To the extent to which Congress shall approve of said estimates Congress shall appropriate the amount of 50 per cent thereof, and the remaining 50 per cent of such approved estimates shall be levied and assessed upon the taxable property and privilege in said District other than the property of the United States and of the District of Columbia; and all proceedings in the assessing, equalizing, and levying of said taxes, the collection thereof, the listing, return, and penalty for taxes in arrears, the advertising for sale and the sale of property for delinquent taxes, the redemption thereof, the proceedings to enforce the lien upon unredeemed property, and every other act and thing now required to be done in the premises shall be done and performed at the times and in the manner now provided by law, except in so far as is otherwise provided by this act.

So that those are the items and the only items to which the 50 per cent ever did apply by virtue of any so-called organic act. It is not contended that that includes the interest or the sinking fund.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It does. It was specifically contended in reply to the gentleman from South Dakota that it covered the interest and not the sinking fund.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend that the payment of interest and the payment of the annual proportion of the bonded debt is not a part of the Government expense?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes; and I will explain exactly why, because that is the question I anticipated the gentleman was going to ask. It is not contended that that language specifically designates the interest or the sinking fund. It certainly does not designate the sinking fund, and does not specify the interest. It is contended by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] and by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], possibly, that the interest is included under the term "expenses of the District of Columbia." That construction must be drawn, as the gentleman from Virginia has himself pointed out, from the entire act, if it is drawn at all. If that implication is drawn at all, it could only be drawn in the absence of some specific language in the act which made provision for the interest. Let us see if the language of the act itself does not make a specific provision for the interest. If the language of that act makes specific provision for the interest, then it is apparent that it dispels any implication that the interest was included in the general language in this estimate.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. DALZELL. I am asking for information. As a matter of fact, have the estimates that have been submitted to Congress since 1879 included interest and payment of the sinking fund as part of the expenses of the District?

Mr. BORLAND. I believe so. To return to the proposition I made, this enumeration, not having included the interest in terms, if we want to extend that enumeration by implication to the interest, it must be in the absence of some language in the law which would otherwise take care of the interest. I do not think that would be a necessary implication if the language were entirely absent, because the interest is not a general expense of the District. It might be an expense and it might not be an expense, but it is not necessarily included in the general word "expense."

But this bill makes specific provision for the interest in these words:

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance of the act of Congress of June 20, 1874, when the same becomes due and payable—

The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay them, so that there is no question between the bondholder and the United States—and all amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as hereinbefore provided.

The United States, as between the bondholder and the United States, pays the interest. Then, as a matter of bookkeeping, it charges that amount against the amount that it would have contributed in cash under the general appropriation bill for the District of Columbia. There is no other construction that can be placed upon that language. It is not necessary for the Secretary of the Treasury to estimate for the interest. He is given specific authority to pay it, and when he pays it, if Congress has contributed an amount equal to one-half of the general estimated expenses under that preceding section, the amount that Congress has appropriated out of the Treasury shall be credited with the amount it has already paid toward the interest coupons.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Certainly.

Mr. LLOYD. Would not that make the United States pay the full amount of the interest?

Mr. BORLAND. No; I think not.

Mr. LLOYD. If it is paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the Treasury of the United States, and then credited to that part of the fund which is contributed under the District of Columbia appropriation bill, that would make the United States pay all of it.

Mr. BORLAND. No; the word "credited" means a subtraction and not an addition. It does not say in addition to the amount contributed. It says that it shall be credited on the amount contributed.

Mr. LLOYD. But would it not have the effect of requiring the United States Government to pay out of that part it is expected to pay of the District expenses the whole amount of interest?

Mr. BORLAND. I think not. I think it has exactly the reverse effect.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not the gentleman's whole position predicated necessarily on the proposition that "expenses" do not include the interest?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not that begging the real question at issue? The matter at issue is whether it does or does not include it.

Mr. BORLAND. No; the argument was made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] that the general word "expenses" might be stretched to cover interest. The gentleman said there are cases where that might be true. I do not think it is necessarily true, but even the implication would not exist if specific appropriations were made in the same act for the interest and——

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I am not now passing upon the question of whether the term "expenses" does include interest, but it seems to me the gentleman has not quite established the argument that it should not include interest, because provision was made in the same act for the taking care of interest. That very argument seems to fall to the ground because it is predicated on the idea that the interest so paid shall be charged—that is, credited—against the United States part of the "expenses," and there you are brought back to the original question whether "expenses" do or do not include interest. The language quoted was this:

And all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriations for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia as hereinbefore provided.

What are those expenses, and do they include interest?

Mr. BORLAND. My view of that is this, I would say to the gentleman from Kentucky: If these estimates come in, as the law of 1878 requires the carrying of these estimates, then the United States Congress, so far as it approves the estimates, appropriates 50 per cent. Of course it is not bound to appropriate for any particular item only so far as it approves the item. Now the Secretary of the Treasury under authority of the same act is bound to credit the United States share whether they have included some items or no particular items in that estimate; he is bound to credit all he has paid for interest against what they have chosen to appropriate.

Mr. SHERLEY. If the gentleman will permit me there, that does not answer the contention because of the fact you have not determined the primary question whether expenses do or do not include interest.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me answer the question further in this way: If the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury do not include any interest and Congress appropriates under those estimates, as I believe is the intention of the law, and then the Secretary of the Treasury by virtue of the same act of 1878 had paid the interest in the meantime, the law would compel him to credit against the share the United States contributed toward these expenses what he has paid in the way of interest whether the United States had included the interest in the estimates or not. Now, if the United States has included the interest in its estimates, he goes through the same formula except that the result is that the interest that he credits is the same interest that has been estimated for and allowed, and therefore it nullifies the express wording of that statute because the wording would not be quoted there at all if that were the only result of it; that it should be estimated for by one officer and credited for by another officer would not require that express language in it.

Mr. LLOYD. Is not this true? If the money is paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of the Treasury of the United States, as is now required by law, and the expense in the District of Columbia is divided equally between the District of Columbia and the United States, and then the amount of this interest account credited to the United States on that account, would not the effect be for the United States to pay one half and the District of Columbia the other half? It has paid the one half which it ought to pay under the equal distribution, and the other half it would get a credit for in its relation with the District account.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield for just one moment in that connection? I think I can clear the mind of the gentleman——

Mr. BORLAND. I think I can clear it up.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky (continuing). I think I can clear up the mind of the gentleman from Missouri a little bit. If he will take my amendment and read the first two lines of it, he will find it reads this way, and it is a copy of the law:

> And there is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia.

Under that there is no provision for an appropriation out of the Treasury, but there is a provision for appropriating out of the proportional sum that is contributed by the District of Columbia.

Mr. LLOYD. And the proportional sum is half and half—50 per cent?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That depends upon whether they contribute half or not.

But if they do contribute half, for the sake of argument, then the sinking fund must be created out of the amount that is appropriated by the Federal Government toward the District of Columbia.

Mr. LLOYD. But the proportional part that is referred to is the proportional part that is provided in the statute, and the proportional part that is provided in the statute is the 50 per cent base—50 per cent by the District of Columbia and 50 per cent by the United States. There is no other proportion, so far as I know, that is mentioned in any of these statutes. If there is, I would like to know what it is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. And the gentleman can search all the statute books of the United States from the foundation of the Government until now, and he will find that the appropriation bills read:

> That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

This is the only exception, and it says:

> There is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute to the District of Columbia for the purpose of sinking fund for the payment of its funded debt.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I understand the gentleman from Missouri to answer the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] to the effect that the payment of interest on the funded debt of the District could not be properly considered expense of the District.

Mr. BORLAND. I said it was not necessarily included in the word "expenses."

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman answer this question: If the Secretary of the Treasury in the enforcement of the corporation-tax law should refuse to allow a corporation, as a matter of bookkeeping, for $100,000 interest on its bonded indebtedness, would the gentleman regard that as a fair proposition or as a legal one?

Mr. BORLAND. The gentleman must recollect that the corporation tax law specifically points out how interest shall be credited and how much interest. It says that the debt must not be larger than the total capital stock. It is specific on that subject. There is no analogy at all.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Applying to any general business having a bonded indebtedness, are not the first items that are included in the list of fixed charges the interest on the funded debt?

Mr. BORLAND. Now, the gentleman and I may have come to a purely political question.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. No.

Mr. BORLAND. I have always contended that the amount of interest on capital that is in a business, public utility, or otherwise, borrowed on its bonds, is not generally a legitimate expense of the business. And to charge the consumer with a rate covering the interest on the bonded indebtedness is a proposition that is rapidly going out of the legislative mind of this country. It is even being dispelled from the judiciary mind that interest on the bonded indebtedness, fixed charges as they are called, are necessary elements of the expenses of the business. We all know now it is not true; that some businesses may have borrowed money in some amount; but, after all, it is capital, whether borrowed or unborrowed.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Does not the gentleman think a corporation has a right to borrow?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. And would it not be its duty to pay the interest on that debt?

Mr. BORLAND. Of course, on its contract.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Would not that be a legitimate expense of its business?

Mr. BORLAND. Not at all. They might have borrowed $15,000 when they needed only $10,000. It is not a general expense of the business.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. There is no question that this particular loan we are discussing now is a legitimate one.

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, yes; there is a great deal of question.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is not discussing it from that standpoint.

Mr. BORLAND. I am not discussing that, because I did not want to go too far afield in this discussion.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. But you admit it was a properly acquired loan?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not admit anything, and that is not necessary to this argument.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If it was not, the gentleman would repudiate the whole debt?

Mr. BORLAND. My point is that the existence of a loan is merely an incident and not a usual or necessary expense of the business. It is always specific in its obligation.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Let me ask one question. The language there is "expenses." Can you conceive of any situation in which a municipality, bound for municipal indebtedness and therefore under obligation to pay the interest on the same as it accrues, would not properly treat of interest incurred in that way as expense? Give me a case in which a city would be required to pay interest and at the same time say that the interest was not an expense.

Mr. BORLAND. In this case provision has been made specifically for interest and sinking fund of an indebtedness. I have known of very, very few cases, except when they are trying to fix the rates charged by a railroad, where the interest is figured in as a part of the general expense of the business. I never knew of a business man to do it in his own counting room, or in consultation with his attorney, or in a board of directors. I have never known it to be otherwise than a simple, clear-cut proposition of capital for the business itself, but not a necessary expense. I do not think the word "expense" includes interest as a general proposition.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman contend, although he claims that the borrowing of money and the payment of interest on a loan is simply an incidental proposition to the conduct of the business, that after that proposition has been entered into it is not a legitimate part in the conduct of the business?

Mr. BORLAND. I do not think there is any misunderstanding about my position, and that is that the obligation to repay money is a mater of specific contract. It is not included in any general words at all.

Mr. MADDEN. Very true; but while the obligation exists, does the gentleman contend that whatever interest must be paid on the obligation is not a specific part of the legitimate annual expenses of conducting the business on which the loan is made?

Mr. BORLAND. Well, I do not know that it is necessary to repeat what I said a while ago. I did not know whether the gentleman was in here or not at that time.

Mr. MADDEN. Yes; I was here and listening to every word the gentleman said; and, as I understand now, the gentleman has worked his mind out to such an extent that he can say to the House that the payment of interest is not a legitimate part of the functions of the government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORLAND. I repeat that the payment of interest is not, in my view, either as a legal or a business proposition, included in the word "expense," but is a specific and separate matter in almost every case. There is no particular reason why interest should be an item of expense. Interest may exist or it may not exist. The loans may be too large or they may be too small or they may not exist at all. Now, the gentleman says that if a party is in debt, if the interest on that debt is not a part of the expenses of his business, what is it?

The only implication that interest could arise incident to this expense must be founded, as I presume, upon the absence of any other provision in the same law for the payment of such indebtedness, and if the same law makes other provision for the payment of the interest on the same indebtedness it would be presumed and argued in every court that that special item for interest would take it out of any implication in a general item.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not contend that the item of interest can be taken out of the category of expense, does he?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes. It does not make any difference to the gentleman from Illinois whether I owe $100 or $1,000, or pay interest on $100 or on $1,000. Neither one of those circumstances is an incident to my living in the District of Columbit, nor has it anything to do with my expenses.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Suppose a man offered the gentleman from Missouri $1,000 worth of stock in a corporation, and the gentleman from Missouri purchases it on the strength of this statement, that "last year we made $15,000," and after he had acquired that stock and investigated the business, he found that in fact they had not made a cent, or had lost that much. Suppose the gentleman from Missouri accused the man of false pretense, and he said, "Oh, there is no false pretense about it. That $15,000 went to pay interest on the mortgage indebtedness." Would the gentleman from Missouri say he was deceived? Would the gentleman say the vendor had been guilty of false pretenses in that case?

Mr. BORLAND. Oh, no; but I do not see any application in that to this proposition. If the money was really made, the purpose for which it was used cuts no figure.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If it was not used as a part of the expense of the concern it could not be so considered.

Mr. BORLAND. Let me ask the gentleman a question. He is a good lawyer. Suppose the gentleman wanted to go into a business that required $50,000 worth of capital, and he had the $50,000 worth of capital and put it into the business, and thereafter his earnings were $5,000 a year on that capital. He did not have any interest to pay at all. Now, suppose I was located adjoining him or across the street, and I had the same business, and the capital of my business was $50,000, but I had borrowed $25,000 from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] and was paying interest on it. Now, when we come to figure out what were the relative expenses of the business, in the gentleman's case it would not include interest and in my case it would. Is it not evident that the interest is really a dividend or the return on the capital borrowed, just as much as on what the gentleman pays himself? The difference between interest and the running expenses of a business is always clear. That, however, is running far afield from this argument.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest this to the gentleman in that connection, that in the one instance that the gentleman cites payment is made on a fund that is not related to the business at all. Of course it has no relation to the expense of the business; but suppose it was money paid and interest on a debt that was specifically chargeable on the business. Would not that be part of the expense of the business?

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: What does he consider the capital of a city or municipality?

Mr. BORLAND. That is getting to be a pretty deep political question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Very well. Then where does it get its income for the payment of its expenses? It gets it through its taxing power, does it not?

Mr. BORLAND. The capital of a city is its aggregate taxable wealth.

Mr. SHERLEY. Its taxing power?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if it is a solvent, going city, does it not have to levy sufficient taxes to pay the expenses of its government, and would it not have to consider a debt as a part of those expenses, or else repudiate it? Is that true or not?

Mr. BORLAND. It would either have to pay the debt or repudiate it.

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes. Then if it has to pay the debt, is it not an expense of the municipality?

Mr. BORLAND. No; it does not follow from that statement that it is an expense. It follows from that statement that it must comply with its contract, whatever it is.

Mr. SHERLEY. There is no contract, other than that the city owes certain money. Now, it has got to pay that.

Mr. BORLAND. It has got to pay that.

Mr. SHERLEY. The paying of that becomes an expense of the city, does it not?

Mr. BORLAND. The general word "expense" is broad enough to cover anything that anybody has to pay.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is there anything here that qualifies the "expense" to make it current?

Mr. BORLAND. I think so, and if we can get back to the law, I want to point out to the gentleman from Kentucky why I think so.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is just the point I want to hear you on.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman from Missouri permit an interruption?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will read just one little extract from a speech that I made upon this subject on the floor of this House a year ago, in which I said:

While section 7—

Of the act of 1878—

said that all classes of indebtedness set out in section 6 evidenced by board of audit certificates might be exchanged for the 3.65 bonds, the creditors saw all the "taxes, moneys, credits, securities, assets, and accounts" set aside by section 2 for the payment of "current expenses, schools, fire department, police, and debts secured by a pledge of the (District) securities."

In addition to that I called attention to another feature of this proposition when I said:

If the United States was to pay any part of the interest upon these bonds, why should such often-repeated expressions in the various acts of Congress relative to "reimbursing," "refunding," "credited as a part," and paid "out of the proportional appropriation," and other such expressions be used, when not one of these expressions of limitation is used in connection with any other appropriation?

This is the only expense, if you choose to call it such, of the District of Columbia that Congress at that time saw fit to attach any limitation or qualification. That limitation or qualification was that it should be paid out of the Federal Treasury and then returned to the Federal Treasury by the District of Columbia.

Mr. BORLAND. Now, while it is true, as I have no doubt, that the word "expense," being a word of very broad signification, may be broad enough in a great many cases to cover the payment of interest or the payment of any other charges, yet inasmuch as interest is usually specifically provided for in public acts, and even in the acts of private corporations it is usually classified by itself separately and specific provision made for it, I deny that there is any necessary implication from the word "expense" that would include interest; and if we find in the very same law a specific provision for the payment of interest, then we are entitled to assume, in fact we must assume, that it was not included in the general words which precede it. If it was included in the general words preceding it, the specific provision for its payment would not be necessary; and that is the fact concerning this law of 1878.

Mr. SAUNDERS. May I interrupt my friend a moment?

Mr. BORLAND. Yes.

Mr. SAUNDERS. John Sherman in his day was regarded as the foremost financier of that time. He was Secretary of the Treasury when the first estimates in this matter were submitted to him. He revised those estimates and returned them. Under the head of "General expenses of the District of Columbia" was included provision for the sinking fund and interest. Does not my friend think that is pretty good authority for the proposition that even under that act these items were properly related to the heading "District expenses"?

Mr. BORLAND. That is a repetition of the same position which the gentleman from Virginia has assumed, that this having been acted upon contrary to the wording of the law, if it be contrary to the wording of the law, that that construction of the law is binding upon subsequent Congresses. Of course, that is not necessarily true. The half-and-half principle that has been so often spoken of here does not, according to the wording of the law and the four corners of the law of 1878, apply to interest or sinking fund. That was the ruling of the Chair the other day, and is still the contention of the gentleman who offers the amendment.

In 1874 and 1878 every municipality in the country was on the verge of bankruptcy. A very general period of depression, and we might say of corruption, had swept over the country, and every city was confronted with a large city indebtedness, and some of them had to go out of existence as municipal corporations because they could not meet their obligations.

What occurred in the District of Columbia, where a debt of $22,000,000 was confronting them? The United States stepped in and took the debt, some of which was in dispute, and reduced the interest to 3.65 per cent, or less than 4 per cent. At that time there was no municipality or private individual in the United States that could get money at such a price. If the District of Columbia got money for less than 4 per cent, it was getting at almost half the current rate paid by the public and municipalities. The District of Columbia, by reason of the guaranty the United States made that it would see that the bondholders were paid out of the appropriate revenues, was enabled to cut its interest bill in half, and the District for 30 years has enjoyed the fruits of that guaranty. Instead of its being in a worse condition, it is in a better situation than any county or municipal corporation or quasi municipal corporation in the United States that went through that familiar wholesale bond issue following the Civil War.

There is not a community in the United States that has been so favorably treated as the District of Columbia from that guaranty of the United States behind it. I do not know of a municipality in the country that would not be glad to have the United States step in and guarantee the interest on the bonded indebtedness and cut the interest down to less than 4 per cent.

Now, the District comes in after that favored treatment of nurturing and nursing that has gone on and after its taxable wealth has largely increased, when it has more taxable property per capita than any other city in the United States, when its taxing power is only used to one-third of its limit—more than two-thirds of the District of Columbia's wealth escapes taxation, where only the little fellows are taxed—I say it now comes in and says that some great hardship is being done and that the Federal Government should continue to pay half of its sinking fund and interest.

We say under these circumstances that unless the strict letter of the law, unless the very letter of the bond, calls for the pound of flesh, the pound of flesh ought not to be rendered. If the District of Columbia can show that either it or the bondholders has a legal enforceable right, a naked, bare, harsh right to demand payment from the Federal Treasury, let it insist on that legal obligation and stand upon its legal rights. But as to its having any moral right, it has no moral right at this time, and never did have a moral right. It was taken out of the slough of bankruptcy and has been started on a prosperous career. It has secured the refunding of its debt at a lower rate of interest than has ever prevailed in any municipal indebtedness of the United States. It has enjoyed the fruits of that statute which has increased its taxable wealth beyond all other cities of its size. It has no moral right at this time. If it has the bare legal right, that is bad enough. It has been decided here that it did not have a legal right to insist upon the continuation of the payment of one-half of the interest of the sinking fund. That being true and the point of order having been ruled upon and it being ruled that the payment of one-half by the United States was not authorized by law and therefore subject to a point of order, it necessarily follows that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky that the amount be put in and charged against the funds of the District is in order and must prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule, but recognizing the importance of the question, he will not decline to hear gentlemen further if they wish. But he will ask them to address their remarks to the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I understand that no argument has been made as yet on the point of order.

Mr. SAUNDERS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] rise?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for 5 minutes to submit a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia, a member of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Chairman, as showing how widely gentlemen may differ and fairly so, with respect to the interpretation of the original acts, I will simply say that every citation which my friend from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND] has adduced this morning in support of his position, was adduced by me a year ago in an argument on this proposition to support an entirely different conclusion. This being so, it emphasizes the importance of the contention that the Chair should look to the contemporaneous discussion of these ambiguous statutes for their proper interpretation.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a portion of the language cited by the gentleman from Missouri, and to submit a brief argument showing that the use of this language was necessary, and strictly in harmony with the present contention that the Government assumed one-half of the interest on the funded debt as a portion of the debt of the District. The language cited is as follows:

> Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest on the 3.65 bonds of the District of Columbia issued in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 20, 1874, when the same shall become due and payable.

If the act had stopped at that point, it might have been argued that this payment was something additional to the one-half which it had already assumed. Therefore, it was necessary to add the language:

> And all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation toward the expenses of the District, as hereinbefore provided.

The concluding words "as hereinbefore provided," relate back to the half-and-half principle which had been established. Permit me to illustrate by the statement of a hypothetical account between the Government and the District the inevitable effect of this requirement, and demonstrate that in the result the words merely serve to make the Government pay one-half of the interest and no more. Suppose that the expenses of the District of Columbia for the first year after the act of 1879 amounted to $4,000,000, those expenses including of course the sinking fund and interest. How much would the Government of the United States be liable for, under the act 1878. The answer is simple, $2,000,000. Now suppose that the Government proceeded to pay $1,000,000 on the sinking fund and interest. This amount would thereupon be credited on the amount of two million for which it was liable. This would leave the Government liable for one million more.

The aggregate amount therefore paid by the Government would be $2,000,000, the exact amount for which it would be liable, according to the statute, upon the assumption that in any one year, the amount of the aggregate expenses of the District was $4,000,000. So that the direct application of the requirements of this statute, to a settlement of accounts between the District, and the United States, compels the Government to pay one-half of the expenses, in a word the proportional part for which it is liable.

I submit a statement of an account illustrative of my contention:

Whole expenses, including sinking fund and interest, payable half and half	$4,000,000
Proportional part to be paid by the United States	2,000,000
Interest and sinking fund charge paid by United States, and by law to be credited on its proportional part or one-half of whole expenses	1,000,000
Balance to be paid by United States	1,000,000
Total actually paid by the Government	2,000,000

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] has said what I was going to say, but he has said it so much better than I could have said it that I will not detain the committee longer.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of order is simply reserved and that all the gentlemen have been discussing the merits of the amendment. I do not understand that a point of order is pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order has been made.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has taken a very wide range, not only to-day but previously, and I desire to submit some considerations, not upon the point of order but as to the merits of this amendment. I was present last Saturday when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] made his point of order against the provision in the bill and discussed the proposition substantially now before the House. I was astonished when he made the point of order. I was still more astonished at various statements which he made in the course of his remarks which he submitted in speaking to the point of order. I wish to call attention to one or two things that were stated in that discussion, and I ought to say in this connection that I am not desirous of criticizing the gentleman from Kentucky, and I am not implying in what I shall say that he has willfully made any misstatement, but I wish to call attention, among others, to the part of his statement which I read from the RECORD of last Saturday, February 1:

Tracts of land in the District of Columbia in the midst of primeval forests are opened up and laid out into town lots. Under that plan the District of Columbia calls upon the Federal Government to pay one-half of the expense of the streets that are opened and macadamized and paved through that, and the Federal Government does it.

Mr. Chairman, I was very much astonished at that statement, and it caused me to make a little investigation upon my own account. I want to say to the House that that statement is erroneous.

The law of 1893 provides that when new land is to be subdivided or platted in the District of Columbia the owner must dedicate the streets included in the plat in accordance with the District highway plan; and without a single exception since 1893, according to my investigation of subdivisions of land in the District of Columbia, the owners of all subdivisions of land have not only dedicated the streets without expense to the District, but they have, as a general rule, improved those streets at their own expense.

Other public improvements that are made in the undeveloped parts of the District of Columbia are generally paid for at private expense or are charged to the abutting or adjacent lands. This is not true of the improvement of the streets in the older part of the District where the District government pays for the expense of the improvement. It is also true that in the older parts of the city of Washington, when streets are opened, the universal practice of Congress has been to provide in every case that the total expenses shall be assessed to the neighborhood as benefits so as to cover the total cost of opening, and paying for the lands for those streets, and no part of the cost comes out of the Public Treasury. There are certain exceptions to this rule, notably Massachusetts Avenue extended and Sixteenth Street, where Congress has made appropriations on the usual basis for the opening, improvement, and macadamizing of these streets.

For example, in Massachusetts Avenue Heights subdivision, where improvements are now going on; on Connecticut Avenue, in Sauls's Addition; in Cleveland Park; in all of those subdivisions the District of Columbia has never paid for the improvement of the streets nor for any other public improvement. I think I am stating the fact, and I have been quite carefully investigating the matter——

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will permit, I want to corroborate what the gentleman has stated. I know he has stated the fact, because the legislation providing for the opening of those streets provided that the property abutting should pay for the improvements.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HAYES. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes: I have not taken up much of the time of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAYES. Now, Mr. Chairman, one more thing I think in justice to the District of Columbia should be stated, and that is this: That in every case the improvement of extending water or sewer connection to any part of the District is paid for by the abutting property. That is rather unusual, I think. I know that in most of the cities where I have lived the waterworks being owned by the cities which charge rental to the various property owners for the use of the water, thus having a revenue from its investment, the city puts in the mains, but in this city that is not the rule, although the city does charge the property owner for the use of the water.

Mr. LOBECK. It gets no rental from the sewers.

Mr. HAYES. Not from the sewers, but from the water. It gets a rental or charges the consumer for the use of the water, and yet the consumer is obliged also, under the laws of the District of Columbia and the practice here, to pay for putting in the mains along the streets upon which his property abuts.

Mr. CARY. I would like to say that in the city of Milwaukee, where it owns the waterworks, the laying of the mains is charged to the abutting property owners; they pay all of it.

Mr. HAYES. In the city of Madison, where I once chanced to be a part of the government, and in other cities where I have lived, that is not the rule. It seems to me an unjust rule——

Mr. LOBECK. In a majority of the cities it is the rule, except where storm sewers are constructed; the sanitary sewers that belong to the residents are paid for by the people.

Mr. HAYES. Of course, that is the rule in the city of Washington——

Mr. LOBECK. That is the rule in a majority of cases.

Mr. HAYES. I think the gentleman is mistaken. Now, Mr. Chairman, I criticize no Member of this House who regards it as his duty to attack the District of Columbia or its people, but I do think when a gentleman attacks the people of the District of Columbia, the Capital of the Nation, he ought at least to base his attack upon the facts. Statements were also made in the course of this discussion on Saturday, not only by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], but by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PROUTY] and by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REDFIELD], that the city of Washington pays the lightest taxes of any city in the United States. Now, Mr. Chairman, I investigated that matter somewhat, and I have here a statement showing the taxes paid by some cities in the United States approaching the size of the city of Washington. That statement will bear me out in saying that the city of Washington is assessed, or at least it pays as high taxes as the average of the cities in the United States near its size.

That statement is as follows:

City.	Population.	Total assessment of real estate.	Tax on real estate.	Revenue from other sources.	Tax on real estate per capita.	Total tax per capita.

[1] Personal.

Mr. HAYES. An examination of the table will show that Buffalo and Providence pay higher taxes per capita than the city of Washington, while the taxes of the cities of Cincinnati and Indianapolis are much lower.

Now, the gentlemen I have referred to have gone upon the theory that because the city of Washington paid only 1½ per cent on a two-thirds valuation they could compare that with other cities which pay a higher rate per cent on their valuation, and because they found in other cities a lower rate have jumped to the conclusion that, therefore, Washington does not pay the taxes it should pay. Now, of course, the tax rate has nothing to do with the taxes a city pays. I have in mind a city where the total rate is 2½ per cent on the valuation, but the valuation is only 40 per cent of the market value of the property, because that city is part of a county, and it not only has its city tax to pay, but State and county tax, and in order to put it on the same basis as the county and State the attempt is made by the assessor to put it on the same basis as to valuation, whereas in the city of Washington the valuation of the assessor is supposed to represent the value of the property.

I went over a list of the property reaching from the Mall to H Street and from the Capitol to the White House, and I find the valuation of the assessor is within 5 per cent of the market value of the property as indicated by the sales for the last five years of that property. I mean that the valuation of this property by the assessor is within 5 per cent of its market value.

As a further refutation it can be shown that during the years 1908 to 1912 there were some 200 sales between Ninth and Fifteenth Streets and B and H Streets NW. These sales aggregated over $13,000,000, and the basis of assessment for this property, which was examined and valued in 1910, is within 5 per cent of these sales. More than 90 of these sales were below the basis of the assessment, showing that the assessors had taken an average figure in making their appraisement, and it is generally conceded that a fair assessment should agree with the average sales of any section.

As an example of how property was valued I will state that the northwest corner of Fourteenth and H Streets was valued at $132,810 in 1910 and sold for $135,000 in 1912; 1409 H Street was valued at $70,335 in 1910 and was sold just before the valuation for $70,000; 1405 G Street was valued at $136,000 in 1910 and sold for $130,000 in 1911; 1407 and 1409 F Street were valued at $121,000 in 1910 and sold for $110,000 during that year; 1406 G Street was valued at exactly the amount of the sale. The southwest corner of Fourteenth and G Streets was valued at $553,000 in 1910 and sold in 1909 for $499,490. The Hall of the Ancients was valued at over $200,000 in 1910, and two years after that sold at auction at nearly 25 per cent less; No. 722 Thirteenth Street, $25,000 in 1910, sold at that figure in 1912; No. 609 Fourteenth Street, valued at about $76,000 in 1910, sold for a little over $72,000 in 1911; 1227 New York Avenue, valued at $16,762 in 1910, was sold at $17,500 in 1912; 719-21 Thirteenth Street, valued at $151,000 in 1910, sold at $150,000 during the same year.

The northwest corner of Twelfth and F, valued at $211,320 in 1910, has been offered for three years at $215,000, and was finally disposed of by a trade; 1229-1231 E Street, valued at $29,000 in 1910, had been sold the previous year for $28,000; 519 Thirteenth Street, valued at $28,000 in 1910, sold during that year for less than $22,000; 1216 F Street, valued at $124,000 in 1910, sold two years after for $120,000; 1215 to 1219 Pennsylvania Avenue, valued at $151,000, sold the year previous for $114,000; 1227 Pennsylvania Avenue, valued at $57,000 in 1910, sold the year previous for $52,000; 732 Eleventh Street, valued at $12,429 in 1910, sold for $11,000 in 1912; 726 Eleventh Street, valued in 1910 at $21,000, sold during that year at $18,000; 611 Twelfth Street, valued in 1910 at $46,845, sold two years after for $41,200; No. 708 Tenth Street, valued in 1910 at $13,450, sold for $13,300 in 1912; 1004 E Street, valued at over $17,000 in 1910, sold for less than $14,000 in 1912; 934 New York Avenue, valued at $13,000 in 1910, sold for a less amount in 1912; 922-924 F Street, valued at over $64,000 in 1910, sold the year after for about $10,000 less than the valuation. Many other sales can be shown through this section, illustrating the closeness of the assessment, one of the most recent sales on F Street between Ninth and Tenth being almost exactly on the basis of assessment. The same thing can be shown in the high-class residential portions of the northwest, for although sales have been cited to show an underassessment of high-class property, yet hundreds of sales can be given where the values are below the basis of assessment. For instance, just north of the Pinchot property on Massachusetts Avenue is a residence situated in the same way as the Pinchot property in reference to Scott Circle. This residence sold at about $10,000 less than the basis of the assessment and a majority of the sales for five years within a radius of a thousand feet of the Pinchot property have been less than the basis of assessment. Property values have been increasing along Sixteenth Street, Massachusetts Avenue, and Connecticut Avenue during the last three years, and I am informed that the new assessment will show a decided increase on this account.

It seems likely that the erroneous statements that the gentlemen have made, although really without much if any foundation in fact, have largely influenced the votes of many Members on this floor in this matter. Hence I have thought it best to correct them.

We have in this House a committee charged with the duty of representing and taking care of the interests of the District of Columbia. I am credibly informed that this Committee on the District of Columbia has had but one legal meeting since last April or May, and therefore the interests of the District have received no consideration at the hands of this committee, and no legislation, except a few bills that were reported by unanimous consent, has been reported by this committee to this House. I believe I am stating the fact. Yet the chairman of that committee seems to feel that it is his duty to get up here and object by raising a point of order to every provision in the interest of the District that another committee of this House felt called upon to place in the bill which is now under consideration.

If there was ever an emphatic argument for representation on this floor of every part of the United States, the way District business is handled in this House certainly affords it. The exhibition we have had here while this bill has been under consideration is a most pronounced illustration of the outrageous evils of taxation without representation. The people of the District of Columbia have no one on this floor whose duty it is to represent their interests and to speak for them. And so gentlemen who are full of spleen, from whatever cause, seem to feel called upon to vent it upon the people of the District, and upon the District of Columbia generally. I do not deny their right to do this, but I do say that when they do it they should be very sure that the facts on which they base their statements are real facts and not error generalities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAYES] has expired.

The Chair is ready to rule. Substantially the same questions for ruling that are presented now were presented on Tuesday when the point of order was made against the interest and sinking fund paragraph in the bill. The Chair has indulged gentlemen at length in the argument to-day because the question determined on Tuesday, and to be again ruled on now, involves not only the exercise by Congress of the taxing power as it affects the District of Columbia, but it involves the exercise of the taxing power as it affects the people of the United States. And further, that if, may be, the Chair had not given sufficient attention and entertained full comprehension of the question on the first ruling, he is now given again an opportunity to correct any error he may have made or to correct any error the committee may have made when it voted the decision of the Chair to be the decision of the committee. Therefore, the Chair now rules somewhat further on the question, although it may be said that if the Chair and the committee were right on the former ruling, of course the point of order must now be overruled. Yet the question is of sufficient importance in view of the arguments presented, and particularly the able and researchful argument of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS], that a further and more extended ruling touching the interpretation and meaning of the act of 1878 and the act of 1879 perhaps should be made now.

The amendment as offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], against which the point of order is made, consists of three paragraphs in its form, but not of three paragraphs by number. Therefore, for the purpose of orderly treatment and clearness of decision, the Chair will consider the first grammatical paragraph as "paragraph 1," the second grammatical paragraph as "paragraph 2," and the third grammatical paragraph as "paragraph 3." As between the contending opinions there is no doubt or difference on some points involved. A proposition that we all agree upon is that the Government of the United States, by the act of 1878, in some cases contributes a proportional sum to the support of the District of Columbia.

There is no disputing the fact that that proportional sum is 50 per cent, because the language of the statute itself says "50 per cent." In the light of this common ground let us examine the words of paragraph 1:

> And there is hereby appropriated out of the proportional sum which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved June 11, 1878—

And so forth.

As stated, the proportional sum is 50 per cent, and there is no dispute on that. Then the act of 1879, if read to conform, would be:

> And there is hereby appropriated out of the 50 per cent which the United States may contribute toward the expenses of the District of Columbia—

And so forth. If that be true, there can be neither duplicity, obscurity, nor ambiguity in the act of 1879 unless there is ambiguity in the plainest terms of the English language.

Consequently the Chair now rules that the act of 1879, by the plain terms of the act, provided and directed that that proportional sum, to wit, 50 per cent, should be ultimately chargeable to and borne by the District of Columbia. If so, is it not a palpable violation of law to otherwise appropriate for it?

So much for the act of 1879. The act of 1878, paragraph 2, reads:

> All amounts so paid shall be credited as part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia.

And so forth. By the literal language of law, if the Government appropriates anything from the Federal Treasury, it appropriates 50 per cent, and the express language of the act says it shall, when paid, be—

Credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States—

And so forth. Then if, in fact, the money is paid or advanced from the Treasury it would, under the letter of the act, be credited to the proportional half that the Government may appropriate toward the support of the District of Columbia. If that be true, then the language—

Hereafter the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the interest—and all amounts so paid shall be credited as a part of the appropriation for the year by the United States toward the expenses of the District of Columbia—

And so forth—

Is clear.

Then there is no duplicity, there is no obscurity, and there is no ambiguity in the language of the act of 1878.

It is not contended that any authorization of appropriation, in any form provided for in this or any past bill, has stood for its foundation on any other law. Members of the committee will observe that the first and the second paragraphs of the amendment follow the exact language of the statute. The Chair now comes to rule on the question as to whether paragraph 3 of this amendment is in order. Paragraph 3 reads:

For the purpose of meeting the payment of interest and for the purpose of providing for said sinking fund the sum of $975,408, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated—

From the respective funds described in the two acts of Congress above set out—to be charged against the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxes—

And so forth, following the statute.

If the legal construction by the Chair of the first paragraph, being the act of 1879, is correct, and if the legal construction by the Chair of the second paragraph, being the act of 1878, is correct, then the third paragraph, in explicit language, provides that Congress by its annual appropriation shall give force and effect to existing law. The Chair is of the opinion that the ruling made on a former occasion and sustained by a vote of the committee was correct, for the reasons then stated, and for the further reasons, somewhat analytically, we hope, presented at this time to the committee.

This point of order raises, as already observed, a question of law, which the Chair is compelled, in the very nature of things, to reach and announce an opinion upon. After an earnest and careful consideration of the several acts it is the opinion of the Chair that the first two paragraphs of the proposed amendment correctly set out the appropriate law and that the interpretation given is the correct construction of that law. The last paragraph of the amendment, in fulfillment of this law, appropriates the money and directs its payment according to the construction announced. So the point of order lodged against the amendment is overruled.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order against the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky reserves all points of order against the substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for the amendment:

"Interest and sinking fund: For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, $975,408, which sum shall be paid out of funds and accounted for in accordance with the acts of Congress in relation thereto."

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BURLESON. I should like to know what the point of order is.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That it is legislation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BURLESON. It says:

In accordance with the acts of Congress in relation thereto.

I will state to the Chair the purpose I have in mind. If this amendment is adopted, the question of the payment of this interest and sinking fund will be passed upon, under the Dockery Act, by the Comptroller of the Treasury. Under the terms of that act he is directed to settle the question. He can take the advice of the Attorney General of the United States, and if any citizen of the District of Columbia or any other interested person sees fit to test his ruling, the question can be decided in the courts.

I feel quite sure that there is no one in this committee who desires to repudiate any part of the debt of the District of Columbia, or relieve the General Government if the General Government is bound, or to impose this debt exclusively upon the District of Columbia if it should not be imposed exclusively upon the District of Columbia. The purpose of this substitute is to relieve us from passing on the legal questions involved; to impose the duty upon the Comptroller of the Treasury, who has the advice of the law officers of the Government, and to give an opportunity to test this question in the courts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair will indulge me just a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As far back as five years ago I sought diligently to get into this appropriation bill, under the item of sinking fund and interest, something more than the unqualified charge against the United States. In other words, I have endeavored to get out of that very item the direct mandatory language that it should be paid for upon the half-and-half principle. In all of my efforts I have been unsuccessful. A year ago I stood here for more than two weeks, and upon the presentation of every opportunity I sought to get into this bill either the law itself, or a construction of it by somebody else other than the committee.

On Tuesday, under a ruling of the Chair, and by a vote put to this House, my views were sustained. To-day, insisting that there shall be no repudiation of this debt, I offered the language of the statute itself as an amendment.

The language of the statute, incorporated into this bill, quoted verbatim, may be of no more value than the amendment which has just been offered by the gentleman from Texas. If the language of the statute, quoted word for word as I have offered it, were incorporated in the bill, then it would be subject to construction by the legal authorities of the United States. Now the gentleman from Texas himself has come to offer an amendment, without quoting the statute, which in substance and effect is just what I contended for in previous years.

If it is the law that the Federal Government is to pay half of this item, I have said repeatedly, and I repeat it now, that I wish it done. I have never believed it to be the law. When it has been passed upon by the highest legal officers of the Government, then I shall accept it. But I have believed all along, and I believe now, that nothing more horrible could happen to the Nation than to come in here and repudiate the faith of the United States, so solemnly pledged to see both principal and interest of this debt paid. It is unfortunately better that the States should pay their part wrongfully than that the people who have bought these bonds with that plighted faith of the United States behind them should have that plighted faith repudiated. I believe that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] accomplishes what I have been contending for through these long years, and if my remarks of last year are taken, it will be found that hour after hour I stood here and contended for that much at least. It was denied then, but granted now, and I am glad that the bill with that amendment will contain no mandatory clause directing the payment of one-half by the United States.

Mr. MURDOCK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. MURDOCK. The upshot of this whole matter is, if the gentleman accepts the amendment of the gentleman from Texas and it is adopted and this becomes the law, that we shall have an opinion from the Attorney General to the administrative officer as to what this law means. Is that true?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. That may be true, or we may go into the courts. But if Congress does not wish to stand by the Attorney General's opinion in the matter, then another Congress almost immediately follows, and we can offer a bill and change the law.

Mr. MURDOCK. I will ask the gentleman if in past years an administrative officer of the Government has not interpreted the law, and if his interpretation did not have the support of an opinion by the Attorney General?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The Comptroller of the Treasury has not interpreted all of the law. I believe now the law will be put before him just as it has been in this discussion, and I hope that he will see the law as this House has seen it and as this House adjudged it. If he does not, we can at least change the law. Now, I have never sought, and I challenge anybody to point out an instance where I have sought, to change existing law. My contention has been that the half-and-half act should not be violated to the detriment of the Federal Government. Other people have been insisting that it should not be violated to the detriment of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MURDOCK. Has not the gentleman contended that the act has not been properly administered?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; it has not.

Mr. MURDOCK. And now the gentleman appeals to the executive branch of the Government for a new interpretation. Is not that exactly the gentleman's position?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. I will say that I would rather have my amendment setting out before the executive officers a copy of the law just as it is, but if it be couched in other language that the executive officers are to construe these two acts, I see but little difference. In the one instance the law would be in the present bill, while in the latter it will be in the statute books.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire for this time to be consumed by a conversation between the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from from Kansas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I think we ought to have a few minutes to discuss it.

Mr. BURLESON. Very well; I withdraw it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. As I was about to say, the third paragraph of my amendment is mandatory that the District of Columbia pay it, and therefore I very greatly prefer it to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]. I stood here last year and I not only argued but begged and pleaded for what is now conceded. If they had conceded it then, or if the House had adopted the amendment then, I would have been pleased.

Now those opposing my views have come to do that for which I begged and pleaded and argued as strenuously as I could a year ago and two years ago and three years ago. I must say, however, that I prefer my own amendment, because it is mandatory that it should be paid by the District of Columbia, but I have never been unwilling to leave the question to the courts as to whether I was correct or not.

I am not unwilling to do so now, although I prefer that my own version of it be taken and Congress declare, as it practically did on Tuesday, that it is the duty of the District of Columbia to pay this item out of the taxes and privileges levied by the District of Columbia.

Mr. DIES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. DIES. If the gentleman's amendment were adopted instead of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, could not the officers of the law still rule as to whether or not the people of the United States were bound to pay half?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No; in the third paragraph, if the amendment which I offered should be adopted, it is mandatory that the District pay it out of the revenues derived from taxation and privileges.

Mr. BURLESON. That is a statement that I desire to make, that under the gentleman's amendment there is a construction of the question to be determined. Under the substitute I offer it is left for the accounting officers of the law department to construe the law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I wish to modify what I first said, that I would accept the amendment. I can not do that because that is beyond my privilege. The amendment is the property of the House, but in so far as I am concerned, my modification is that I will not accept it, but I will be pleased to get either one of the amendments.

Mr. DIES. If the amendment which the gentleman [Mr. BURLESON] is contending for is adopted in good faith, does not that leave the situation just where we found it?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Oh, no; where we found it was mandatory that it should be paid for on the half-and-half plan. My amendment is just as positive that it should be paid for out of the revenues of the District of Columbia. The amendment now offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] does not say it shall be paid upon the half-and-half plan, neither does it say that the District of Columbia shall pay it, but it leaves the plain law heretofore enacted to be followed.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, in order to have a ruling from the Chair upon the peculiar language of the amendment, I am going to make the point of order against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being reserved, the gentleman from Texas makes the point of order.

Mr. BORLAND. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Texas to reserve his point of order.

Mr. DIES. No; I make the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to put in just one single sentence in my remarks before concluding.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to take the gentleman off his feet on a point of order. I reserve the point of order, to be made as soon as the statement is concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point should be overruled it would leave both amendments open to debate.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky if it is not true that the officers of the law, under the act of 1878 and under the act of 1879, have uniformly charged one half of this interest, when paid by the Government, to the District and the other half to the United States Treasury?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They have; and I will tell the gentleman why: Because all of the appropriation bills have embodied a direction that it shall be paid half-and-half, whereas I have been contending and fighting for five years to get that direction out of the bill.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the very first appropriation act of 1879, following this act of 1878, did not make such direction to charge it half-and-half.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. And, notwithstanding that fact, have not the law officers of the Treasury charged one-half to the District and one-half to the General Government?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They have, because all the bills carried the item as a half and half since about 1879. But I wish to make this statement: The accountant who has been going through these items down there has found that the accounting officers did not give the credit under the act of 1879 they should have given, and I believe that if it were put up to this Congress, and I believe still more strongly when put up to the succeeding Congress, they will compel the District of Columbia to refund to the United States, just as the District of Columbia under the lunatic-asylum matter has been compelled to refund $769,000. I do not wish to be understood as advocating the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas. I still advocate my own amendment, but if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas should prevail, then I shall have accomplished that for which I have been contending through these long five years, that the positive direction that this item should be paid on the half-and-half plan will not be in this bill.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, if the Chair overrules the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled, but the Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. When the "interest and sinking fund" paragraph was reached in its order on the bill on Tuesday the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] lodged against it a point of order upon the ground that by the terms of the bill half of the sum would be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia and half from the Treasury of the United States. In order for the Chair to rule on the point of order as made it was necessary to announce his judgment of what was a proper construction of the effect of the interest and sinking fund paragraph in connection with the first paragraph of the bill, which contained the half-and-half clause. The Chair did so, and sustained the point of order. To-day the gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment which directs that the entire sum be paid from the revenues of the District of Columbia. Thereupon the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] made a point of order, upon the ground that the entire sum is not chargeable to the District of Columbia. Accordingly there was presented a question that again required that the Chair in his ruling must of necessity interpret what in his judgment, the several relevant statutes meant. Accordingly the Chair did announce his construction of the law and overruled the point of order.

The gentleman from Texas now offers an amendment by way of substitute in this language:

> For interest and sinking fund on the bonded debt, $975,408, which sum shall be paid out of the funds and accounted for in accordance with the acts of Congress in relation thereto.

To that amendment the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] makes the point of order. Now, the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] provides that the interest and sinking fund on the funded debt shall be paid out of funds, and accounted for, in accordance with the acts of Congress in relation thereto, which presents no question for the Chair to determine or rule upon save whether or not the Congress is authorized to appropriate for the interest and sinking fund when such appropriation is unequivocally directed to be paid out and accounted for in accordance with the law authorizing such appropriations to be made. The amendment of the gentleman from Texas being framed and presented in such language, the Chair accordingly overrules the point of order.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. I move to strike out the last word of the substitute. Mr. Chairman, for two full legislative days some of us in good faith have been following the leadership of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] in his effort to demonstrate and have declared by a congressional interpretation of this House that the ruling of the Treasury Department as to what the existing law is upon the subject of the application of the half-and-half rule to interest payments was wrong. Now here is simply a horseplay by which we are throwing it back upon the Treasury, making it possible for them to continue to interpret it in their own way. If that is the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, we have certainly wasted a lot of very valuable time. What reason has the gentleman from Kentucky, or any other Member of this House, to suppose the Treasury Department will interpret the act of 1878 any differently from what they have——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I have only a short time.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has five minutes.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I can give the gentleman one minute of that time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman realize that under the Dockery Act it is in the power of a citizen to have the matter tested in the courts?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It is no more in the power of the citizen to have the matter tested in the courts than it has been in the last 30 years. The interpretation has been uniformly different from what some think it ought to have been——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman is mistaken there, because in the first clause is the provision requiring it to be paid on the half-and-half basis, and therefore there was nothing to interpret.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The act of 1879 had no such provision, and yet the Treasury Department interpreted that half should be paid by the Government, and the present Treasury officials will take that interpretation of the act of 1879. The gentleman assumes that 30 years afterwards they will make a different interpretation from the one passed upon it in 1879. Gentlemen can vote upon this subject as they please, but they had better understand that we have thrown away this whole debate and our time has been wasted if this sort of an amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas prevails.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has not Congress for 35 years, or such a matter, been giving an interpretation that it should be paid for on the half-and-half basis?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. That goes to the merits of the question. I think it has, and I think it has wrongfully done so, and I shall keep my stand upon that question at least until the end of this closing short session of Congress. I think we are throwing away the whole fight made under the leadership of the gallant knight from Kentucky, who has now practically surrendered to the opposition all he has gained under the present legislative situation.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment——

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] who rose simultaneously with the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I was laboring under the apprehension that this question of law—for it was and is a question of law, as stated by the Chairman—was passed upon by the Chairman on yesterday, and an appeal having been had from the decision was passed upon by the House of Representatives. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair was wrong in his interpretation of the law, if the House was wrong in sustaining the Chair upon that interpretation, then you are justified in marching back down the hill so suddenly as this proposes to do. If the Chair was right in his interpretation, the taxpayers of the United States are not bound to pay any part of this interest. If that is true, then the amendment of the gentleman from Texas ought not to be adopted because Congress, having said that no obligation lies against the Federal Government, we ought not to leave it in such a shape that any officer of the Government may impose an obligation where Congress says there is none.

Mr. Chairman, that seems so clear to me that to argue it almost insults the intelligence of the House. You say in one breath that no legal obligation rests, and in the next one we submit it to the officers of the law if a legal obligation does exist. For myself, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. DIES. Indeed.

Mr. CANNON. What are the courts for except to construe the law?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, Congress made this law, if it is a law, and if it is a law, Congress can unmake it; and for myself I plant my feet on the ground here now that, if it is the law, the Government of the United States should pay half of all of these expenses, I want, as one Member of this body, to repeal that law. [Applause.]

Mr. BORLAND. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

Mr. BORLAND. I agree with the gentleman thoroughly in his desire to repeal that if it be the law, but we have been contending that it is not the law, and have been seeking some way to determine it.

Mr. DIES. The House of Representatives passed on the question, as I understood, yesterday.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me another question?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. CANNON. If it is the law, and rights have accrued to creditors, citizens of the District, is it in the power of Congress to pass a provision that would forfeit those rights? Of course, we can legislate for the future.

Mr. DIES. I do not understand that any such proposition is before the House or was before the House. But I want to address myself just a moment to the equities of this whole question. I conceive that a patriotic man might want to make this Capital of the Nation the city beautiful. I conceive some justification for appropriations extraordinary, to be paid for by other people of the country to help make it a city beautiful, but a proposition which taxes the people of the United States six or seven million dollars a year toward the extension of streets far away from the center of the Capital, making improvements of all description, building up additions, laying out pavements far in advance of the foot of man, is no longer in line with building up a great and beautiful Capital in the District of Columbia. If those who believe that Congress should share the expense of improving the National Capital beautiful would confine their endeavors and their aspirations and ambitions to the Capital proper, there would be some little justification for this tremendous expenditure. But to tell the District of Columbia that you will give them a dollar every time they spend a dollar of their money, that you will make them a present of a dollar of the people every time they spend a dollar of their own money, is to invite them to do that which they have done. It is to invite them to enter upon a career of extravagance and of unnatural expansion. So it follows, Mr. Chairman, that you will see in this city that which you will not see in any other American city.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendments and amendments thereto be closed in six minutes, five minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] and one minute by either the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SAUNDERS] or myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on these amendments and amendments pending thereto be closed in six minutes, five minutes of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] and one minute of the time to be controlled by himself. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, just as I have been saying, year after year the District appropriation bill was brought into the House with a provision in it affirmatively compelling the Federal Government to pay one-half of this interest and sinking fund. After a long fight, which started almost without hope of success, the subcommittee upon the appropriation bill has been driven at last from its untenable position that the Federal Government should by this bill be charged with the payment of one-half of the interest and sinking fund item of about a million dollars. It is a victory to which I have looked forward with gratification and hope during all these years. I am like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] and like the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BORLAND], in that I believe the Federal Government should pay no part of it.

I am confident that the two sections of the law which I have incorporated in my amendment permit the Federal Government to pay no part of it. I further have sufficient confidence in the courts to believe that when this matter is put to them they will say that these two provisions of the law forbid the imposition of any part of this debt upon the Federal Government.

Now, in reference to what the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] has just said, I will say the department officials have placed no construction thus far upon this law.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In a minute.

In the year 1879 they paid this interest and sinking fund, but thus far the succeeding officers have failed to reimburse the Federal Government upon that account; and since then those executive officers have had no right to speak, for the reason that the language in the bill has since then been mandatory that it should be paid on the half-and-half plan. At last I would be glad to see the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] defeated and that offered by myself adopted. But either amendment brings relief to the Federal Government, because either gets away from the positive direction that the Federal Government must pay half of this large sum.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Did not the accounting officers of the Government, in paying the appropriation of this interest under the act of 1879, charge one-half of it to the Federal Government and one-half to the District?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. They did not. They simply advanced the money and paid it; and have not reimbursed the United States, as they should have done.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. The expert of the Appropriations Committee, then, is not as well informed as the gentleman upon that subject?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think he is upon this subject.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. It seems the gentleman has no hope of improving the condition in the Treasury Department.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. By either amendment, I say, we get rid of the positive direction that the District of Columbia must pay half. That is the thing I have been fighting. My amendment is far better than that of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON]; but the gentleman from Texas, the head of the subcommittee on the appropriation bill, has at last conceded that for which I have been fighting.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I yield.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Is not the situation about this: If the amendment of my colleague is adopted, before any part of this appropriation shall come out of the Federal Treasury there will have to be some construction to that effect by some executive officer?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It must be found that the United States is liable under the law as it exists, else the United States escapes.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Now, under the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], before anything can be done, before any money can be taken out of the Treasury of the United States, there will have to be a judgment of the court.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. No. Under my amendment the matter will never go to the court, for the reason that the third paragraph of my amendment is so certain and mandatory that it shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia that the executive officer will have to obey it and the court will have nothing to do in connection with it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, under the terms of the substitute offered by me there will undoubtedly be a ruling on this much controverted question by the Comptroller of the Treasury, who will have the advice of the law officers of the Government.

I want to direct the attention of the committee to the further fact that we ought to be practical in our efforts to legislate. All of you gentlemen know that there is absolutely no hope of securing the passage of a District appropriation bill containing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON]. There is a chance—and I am as anxious as anybody else to have this legal question determined—there is a chance, if this substitute offered by me is adopted, that it will be continued in the bill and that we will have an actual test of this question, just as was said by my colleague from Texas, Mr. BEALL. If the substitute I have offered goes through, there will be an opinion by the Comptroller of the Treasury and some of the law officers of the Government, whereas if the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] is adopted, even if that could get through the Senate, the money would never be paid until after a bitter lawsuit.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURLESON], in the nature of a substitute.

The question was taken, and the Chair being in doubt, a division was ordered; and there were—ayes 45, noes 50.

Mr. BURLESON. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky and Mr. BURLESON.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 58.

Accordingly the amendment in the nature of the substitute was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. RODDENBERY, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 28499) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and the amendments thereto to the final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. MANN. I ask for a separate vote on what is known as the Borland amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other demand for a separate vote?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I demand a separate vote on the amendment in relation to the payment of interest on the funded debt.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Borland amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 31, after line 6, insert the following:

"That hereafter whenever, under appropriations made by Congress, the roadway of any street, avenue, or road in the District of Columbia is improved by laying a new pavement thereon or by resurfacing an existing pavement from curb to curb or from gutter to gutter, where the material used is sheet asphalt, asphalt block, asphaltic or bituminous macadam, concrete, or other fixed roadway pavement, such proportion of the total cost of the work, including the expenses of the assessment, to be made as hereinafter prescribed, shall be charged against and become a lien upon the abutting property, and assessments therefor shall be levied pro rata according to the linear frontage of said property on the street, avenue, or road or portion thereof upon the roadway of which said new pavement is laid or the existing roadway of which is resurfaced: Provided, however, That there shall be excepted from such assessment the cost of paving or resurfacing the roadway space included within the intersections of streets, avenues, and roads, as said intersections are included within building lines projected, and also the cost of paving the space within such roadways for which street railway companies are responsible under their charters or under law on streets, avenues, or roads where such railways have been or shall be constructed.

"The assessments hereinbefore provided for shall be levied in the following manner, viz: Where the average width of roadway is 32 feet or less between curbs, or between gutters where no curb exists, one-half the total cost of the work, including the expenses of the assessment, shall be assessed as hereinbefore provided; where the average width of roadway is greater than 32 feet between curbs, or between gutters where no curb exists, one-half of the proportion of the total cost of the work which the width of 32 feet bears to the total width of the roadway between curbs, or between gutters where no curbs exist, together with one-fourth of the proportion of the total cost of the work which the balance of the roadway width in excess of 32 feet bears to the total width of the roadway, including the expenses of the total assessment, shall be assessed as hereinbefore provided.

"Assessments levied under the provisions hereof shall be payable and collectible in the same manner and under the same penalty for nonpayment as is provided for assessments for improving sidewalks and alleys in the District of Columbia, as set forth on page 248 of volume 28, United States Statutes at Large: Provided, That the cost of publication of the notice of such assessment upon the failure to obtain personal service upon the owner of the property to be assessed therein provided for, and of the services of such notices, shall be paid out of the appropriation for the work, and such assessments when collected shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts."

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 94, noes 35.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the Burleson amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"Interest and sinking fund: For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt $975,408, which sum shall be paid out of funds and accounted for in accordance with the acts of Congress in relation thereto."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be recognized for the purpose of making a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up his motion.

Mr. MARTIN of South Dakota. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to strike out what is known as the Burleson amendment appropriating $975,408 for interest on the sinking fund, and to substitute the amendment which I now send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I make the point of order that the House just having adopted the matter described by the gentleman, the motion to strike it out and insert something in its place is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

On motion of Mr FITZGERALD, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

TERRITORY OF ALASKA (H. DOC. NO. 1346).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of section 18 of an act of Congress (Public, 334) approved August 24, 1912, I appointed a commission—to conduct an examination into the transportation question in the Territory of Alaska; to examine railroad routes from the seaboard to the coal fields and to the interior and navigable waterways; to secure surveys and other information with respect to railroads, including cost of construction and operation; to obtain information in respect to the coal fields and their proximity to railroad routes; and to make report of the facts to Congress on or before the 1st day of December, 1912, or as soon thereafter as may be practicable, together with their conclusions and recommendations in respect to the best and most available routes for railroads in Alaska which will develop the country and the resources thereof for the use of the people of the United States.

Under the requirements of the act, this commission consisted of—an officer of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, a geologist in charge of Alaska surveys, an officer in the Engineer Corps of the United States Navy, and a civil engineer who has had practical experience in railroad construction and has not been connected with any railroad enterprise in said Territory.

The date when the act was passed was late in the summer season, thus allowing a very limited time for the preparation of a report for presentation at the present session of Congress. Nevertheless, within a week after the act was approved, the commission had been appointed as follows:

Maj. Jay J. Morrow, Corps of Engineers, United States Army, chairman.

Alfred H. Brooks, geologist in charge of Division of Alaskan Mineral Resources, Geological Survey, vice chairman.

Civil Engineer Leonard M. Cox, United States Navy.

Colin M. Ingersoll, consulting railroad engineer, New York City.

This commission has transmitted to me a report, which is herewith submitted to Congress in accordance with the provisions of the act. An examination of this report discloses that the following are among the more important of the findings of the commission:

The Territory of Alaska contains large undeveloped mineral resources, extensive tracts of agricultural and grazing lands, and the climate of a large part of the Territory is favorable to permanent settlement and industrial development. The report contains much specific information and many interesting details with regard to these resources. It finds that they can be developed and utilized only by the construction of railways which shall connect tidewater on the Pacific Ocean with the two great inland waterways, the Yukon and the Kuskokwim Rivers. The resources of the inland region, and especially of these great river basins, are almost undeveloped because of lack of transportation facilities. The Yukon and Kuskokwim River systems include some 5,000 miles of navigable water, but these are open to commerce only about three months in the year. Moreover, the mouths of these two rivers on Bering Sea lie some 2,500 miles from Puget Sound, thus involving a long and circuitous route from the Pacific Coast States. The transportation of freight to the mouths of these rivers and thence upstream will always be so expensive and confined to so limited a season as to forbid any large industrial advancement for the great inland region now entirely dependent on these circuitous avenues of approach.

From these considerations the commission finds that railway connections with open ports on the Pacific are not only justified but imperative if the fertile regions of inland Alaska and its mineral resources are to be utilized, but that with such railway connections a large region will be opened up to the homesteader, the prospector, and the miner. So far as the limited time available has permitted, the commission has investigated and in its report describes all of the railway routes which have been suggested for reaching the interior, including the ocean terminals of these routes. The relative advantages and disadvantages of these routes are compared. The principal result of this comparison may be stated to be that railroad development in Alaska should proceed first by means of two independent railroad systems, hereafter to be connected and supplemented as may be justified by future development. One of these lines should connect the valley of the Yukon and its tributary, the Tanana, with tidewater, and the other should be devoted to the development and needs of the Kuskokwim and the Susitna.

The best available route for the first railway system is that which leads from Cordova by way of Chitina to Fairbanks; and the best available route for the second is that which leads from Seward around Cook Inlet to the Iditarod. The first should be connected with the Bering coal field and the second with the Matanuska coal field. Other routes and terminals are discussed, but are found not to have the importance or availability for the development of the Territory possessed by the two mentioned. Thus the route extending inland from Haines in southeastern Alaska has value for local development, though chiefly on the Canadian side of the boundary, but the distance to Fairbanks is found to be too great to permit of its being used as a trunk line to the Yukon waters. The route from Illanna Bay also has value for local use, but is too far to the southwest to permit of its use as a trunk line into the interior. The proposed terminals at Katalla and Controller Bay are found to be very expensive, both as to construction and maintenance, besides furnishing very inferior harbors. The route inland from Valdez is at a disadvantage because it would not serve any of the coal fields, although, as hereafter noted, Valdez is regarded by the commission as an important alternative terminal in the possible future development of the Chitina-Fairbanks route.

The investigations of the commission indicate that the route from Cordova by way of Chitina to Fairbanks would furnish the best trunk line to the Yukon and Tanana waters: (1) Because Cordova has distinct advantages as a harbor; (2) because this route requires the shortest actual amount of construction, but chiefly (3) because the better grades possible on this route should give the lowest freight rates into the Tanana Valley. The Copper River & Northwestern Railroad is now constructed from Cordova to Chitina and thence up the Chitina River. The commission recommends the building of a railway from Chitina to Fairbanks—313 miles—estimated to cost $13,971,000, with the provision that if this railway is built by other interests than those controlling the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad, and if an equitable traffic arrangement can not be made with it, connection should be made with Valdez by the Thompson Pass route—101 miles—estimated to cost $6,101,479.

The commission finds that Cordova offers the best present ocean terminal for the Bering River coal. The commission also points out that it would not be economical to haul the Matanuska coal to either Valdez or Cordova, and that therefore the logical outlet for that field is Seward. If commercial development of these two fields should disclose that the quality of the coal is the same in both, the Bering River field would have the advantage of greater proximity to open tidewater. A branch line from the Copper River Railway to the Bering River field—a distance of 38 miles—at an estimated cost of $2,054,000, is recommended to afford an outlet for the coal on Prince William Sound and into the Copper River Valley and the region where there is at present the largest market for Alaska coal.

The commission finds that a railway from Chitina to Fairbanks will not solve the transportation problem of Alaska, because it will not give access to the Matanuska coal field, the fertile lands and mineral wealth of the lower Susitna, or the great Kuskokwim Basin. This province properly belongs to an independent railway system based on the harbor at Seward. The commission recommends a railway from Kern Creek, the present inland terminal of the Alaska Northern Railway, to the Susitna River—distance 115 miles; estimated cost $5,209,000—with a branch line to the Matanuska coal field—distance 38 miles; estimated cost $1,618,000—and an extension of the main line through the Alaska Range to the Kuskokwim River—distance 229 miles; estimated cost $12,760,000.

The entire railways thus recommended will constitute two independent systems involving 733 miles of new construction at a cost of $35,000,000. Eventually these systems will be tied together and there will be earlier demands for branch and local lines as the country develops. One of these systems will find an outlet to the coast over the Copper River & Northwestern Railroad, the other over the Alaska Northern. If these new lines are constructed by others than those financially interested in these two railroads, respectively, satisfactory traffic arrangements would have to be made with them. If the new railways recommended should be constructed by the Government, the question is necessarily presented as to whether the Government should acquire the whole or any part of the existing lines or either of them or should endeavor to make appropriate traffic agreements. Much would depend upon whether the Government would operate its own railroads or would make operating agreements with those operating existing lines. The commission has not discussed these questions for the reason pointed out in its report that the act of Congress omits questions of this sort from those upon which the commission was instructed to report.

The report of the commission contains the following statement:

Its instructions from Congress do not contemplate that any recommendation should be made as to how railroads in Alaska should be constructed—i. e., by private corporate ownership or by one of the many forms in use whereby Government assistance is rendered. The commission disavows any intention of making such recommendations, believing that Congress in its wisdom desired to reserve to itself the solution of that problem; but it has been impossible to form any estimates of costs of operation without some assumption as to the interest rate on the capital required for construction. This interest rate would obviously differ in two cases—construction by Government or bond guarantee and construction by private capital. Moreover, were construction carried on by private capital unassisted, the necessity of earning sufficient income to pay operating expenses and interest on bonded indebtedness might make it the duty of the directors of the corporation to impose rates on traffic that would seriously retard the development which the Territory so greatly needs.

The commission has therefore been forced to base its studies upon two hypotheses, viz, that the capital necessary for construction is obtained at 6 per cent interest, assumed as possible if construction is carried out by private corporate ownership unassisted, and that capital is obtained at 3 per cent interest, assumed as possible if the construction is done either by the Government itself or by private capital, with bonded indebtedness guaranteed both as to principal and interest.

On similar grounds the commission did not feel justified in discussing the use of the Panama Canal machinery and equipment or in including in its estimates the effect of such use, but a list of the machinery and equipment available at Panama is given in an appendix.

Upon the assumption that the railroad from Chitina to Fairbanks is built by private capital, eliminating promotion profit, but assuming the necessity of earning 6 per cent on the capital invested, it is the judgment of the commission that on estimated available traffic the road could be operated from Cordova to Fairbanks without loss at a passenger rate of 7 cents per mile and an average freight rate of 8 cents per ton-mile. This would mean a through freight rate of $36.94 per ton from Cordova to Fairbanks and a through passenger rate of $31.15. It is the opinion of the commission that—an average freight rate exceeding 5 cents per ton-mile and passenger rate in excess of 6 cents per mile would defeat the immediate object of the railroad, namely, the expeditious development of the interior of Alaska, and, furthermore, would introduce the question as to whether or not the Seattle-Cordova-Fairbanks freight route would be able to compete with the present all-water route via the Yukon River system, except on shipments in which the time element is of such importance as to warrant the payment of a higher freight rate.

To meet the requirements of expeditious development and water competition, the estimate of the commission involves a through freight rate from Cordova to Fairbanks at $22.25 per ton and a through passenger rate of $26.70. The report further says:

Were the road to be constructed by the Government, or by private corporate ownership with a Government guaranty of principal and interest on bonded indebtedness, the capital required should be obtained at a much lower rate of interest, thus materially reducing the annual expenditures.

Using 3 per cent on the investment as fixed charges, and omitting mileage tax of $100, on the assumption that this tax would not be levied in the case of a Government owned or aided road, the commission estimates that the road would pay on the basis of a passenger rate of 6 cents per mile, and a freight rate of 5.49 cents per ton-mile, making the average through freight rate from Cordova to Fairbanks $24.43 per ton and the through passenger rate $26.70. I give these figures as illustrations. The report contains similar estimates of freight and passenger rates and traffic for the road recommended from Seward to the Kuskokwim.

After recommending the construction of the two principal systems and their extensions already mentioned, the commission states, in conclusion, that it—is unanimously of the opinion that this development should be undertaken at once, and prosecuted with vigor; that it can not be accomplished without providing the railroads herein recommended under some system which will insure low transportation charges and the consequent rapid settlement of this new land and the utilization of its great resources.

The necessary inference from the entire report is that in the judgment of the commission its recommendations can certainly be carried out only if the Government builds or guarantees the construction cost of the railroads recommended. If the Government is to guarantee the principal and interest of the construction bonds, it seems clear that it should own the roads, the cost of which it really pays. This is true whether the Government itself should operate the roads or should provide for their operation by lease or operating agreement. I am very much opposed to Government operation, but I believe that Government ownership with private operation under lease is the proper solution of the difficulties here presented.

I urge the prompt and earnest consideration of this report and its recommendations.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 6, 1913.

The SPEAKER. Evidently this message ought to be referred to the Committee on Territories. It is accompanied by many charts and a large number of documents. Unless there is some suggestion the Chair will order not only the message printed, but the other charts and documents.

The SPEAKER. The message is ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Territories, together with the maps and documents, with the understanding that the Committee on Printing will examine into the maps and documents before they are printed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 28283) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914. Pending that motion, I will ask the gentleman from Iowa if we can agree upon a time for general debate. I suggest that we have an hour on a side, if that is agreeable to him.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, there have been several requests for time, and I would very much like to have two hours on a side, though I appreciate the very great pressure for time.

Mr. LAMB. I will ask the gentleman if he will be satisfied with an hour and a half on a side?

Mr. HAUGEN. Very well.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, with Mr. BEALL of Texas in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HUGHES].

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I beg to return thanks to the gentleman from Virginia who has so kindly granted me time. Owing to the fact that I shall be absent for several days I was anxious to present my views on a bill which I reported on behalf of the Committee on Military Affairs on April 4, 1912. That bill is known as H. R. 11397, and is known generally as the Armes bill.

Mr. Chairman, it has been intimated that those who oppose that bill were determined that it should not appear before this House during this session. I do not know whether that be true or not; but if it be true, it clearly indicates the fact that they are not willing to trust to the wisdom of this House the passage of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11397) authorizing the appointment of Maj. George A. Armes, United States Army, retired, to the rank and grade of major general on the retired list of the Army, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it be amended as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint George A. Armes, now a major on the retired list, a brigadier general in the United States Army and place him upon the retired list with the rank of brigadier general, and with the same pay he is now receiving, viz, that of a major on the retired list, to take rank from the date of the approval of this act, the retired list being increased for that purpose only.

Also amend the title so as to read: "A bill providing for the appointment of George A. Armes as a brigadier general in the United States Army and placing him upon the retired list."

As thus amended, the committee recommends the passage of this bill.

Mr. Chairman, the records of the War Department show that Maj. Armes was retired from active service on September 15, 1883; that he was on sick leave from September 12 to 15—three days.

The same officers and element which court-martialed him still remained in the service, and your committee, after a full investigation of the records presented to them, are of the opinion that Maj. Armes should not have been retired from the service on September 15, 1883, but allowed to continue in the service, as his character and ability to command and do his duty as an officer of the Army was beyond question.

Mr. Chairman, I wish I had time to discuss this bill at length; but it is impossible for me to do so owing to the limited time granted, but I do wish to call the attention of the House to the following facts:

On October 10, 1882, Maj. Armes asked to appear before a retiring board, his health having been impaired by prosecutions and persecutions by maligners pregnant with revenge.

But whereas this is true, remember the record shows that within four days he withdrew this request, and asked that the application be held for further notice from him. This application was never renewed or acted upon.

On April 14, 1883, he was ordered to move with his troop to meet and combat a desperate band of Indians who were committing murder and depredations upon the settlers.

This he did with such effect that he received high commendation and special mention from his superior officers.

On the 28th of June, 1883, Maj. Armes was ordered before a retiring board with the view to retire him from active service.

Now, on this board were two members who had been on previous courts-martial who had sentenced him to dismissals.

I wish to impress these facts, viz:

October 10, 1882, Maj. Armes asked to be retired. On October 14, 1882—within four days—he withdrew his request for retirement; on same day, request returned indorsed "No action taken."

I ask you to note that on April 14, 1883, six months after Maj. Armes had withdrawn his request for retirement and two and a half months after Maj. Armes had been ordered with his troop to fight the Indians, he was retired by a partisan board. He was at that time on the frontier, on active duty, scouting the country for Indians at the time he was ordered before a retiring board.

Maj. Armes protested at once by wire against his retirement, without avail. This gallant, brave officer, who had regained his health, was retired by this board without hearing or representation.

Under these facts I ask, Was Maj. Armes justly retired?

Mr. Chairman, Maj. Armes may have been at times indiscreet, and doubtless every Member of this Congress would have to plead to the same charge of guilt, but I wish to say this—that Maj. Armes possessed a characteristic which all true men admire. He never received an insult unchallenged whether tendered by an inferior or a superior. Mr. Chairman, Maj. Armes even as a boy was a boy of decision. In the war between the States he felt that it was his duty to follow the flag of the Union. Feeling that was his duty he dared to perform it under the protest of every member of his family and all of his neighbors. Mr. Chairman, he had a brother who was also a man of decision who followed the flag of the Confederacy; one wore the blue and the other wore the gray; one was on the staff of Gen. Hancock and the other upon the staff of Gen. Jeb Stuart. These two gallant brothers won honors worthy of two brave soldiers in their respective commands. Maj. Armes joined the Army when he was a mere lad, and was a member of the Union Army throughout that bloody struggle between the North and the South. He went in as a private and he retired at the end of the war as a captain, perhaps the youngest captain in the Army of the United States.

After the war Maj. Armes joined the Regular Army. He was sent to the frontier to combat and fight the Indians who were committing murder and robbing the citizens of the country. By his valiant deeds of daring and bravery he rose rapidly to the front over his superiors, and, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, here is where his troubles began. He was persecuted, he was prosecuted by robbers, thieves, assassins, and in one comprehensive term, cowards. They were led in their damnable purpose by rage from jealousy intensified by the blue vapors of vitriolic hate. They were determined to remove that gallant soldier from the Army, and they pursued him relentlessly until finally they accomplished their diabolical act. Mr. Chairman, some of his persecutors who had chained him to the vulture's rock fell from their high estate and some were sent to the penitentiary and others shot as highway robbers. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of this House, should this bill come before this body I do not believe that this House will agree to condone such perfidy, but I do believe that they will give justice to this brave and gallant soldier who, as did that patriotic statesman and gallant warrior, John B. Gordon, of Georgia, wears all of his wounds in front. I sincerely hope that if this bill comes before this body it will give to this distinguished soldier justice and deserved honor by passing this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. LAMB. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] to use part of his time.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. AKIN].

Mr. AKIN of New York. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of Congress I have never hired a man in my office to compose any letters for me. I have been the author of all my own correspondence. I have never hired a press agent to write my speeches or to write voluminous articles for the newspapers booming myself as well as trying to convince the reading public that I have been here in Washington attending to business while at the very time such letters went out I was a thousand miles away from Washington. With the exception of a few days, I have always been in attendance at roll calls and answered to my name. No press agent of mine having the privilege of the floor has ever instructed me when to vote and when not to vote, nor have they ever told me how to vote, and no man has ever been able to ride on my coattails while I was making an aeroplane flight from the floor of this House, for I never duck a vote. I did not come down here for that purpose. I have no excuses to offer nor any apologies to make for my conduct since I have been in Washington as the Representative of the people of my district. As far as I know and can recollect, I have kept every promise and every pledge I have made to the people of my district.

Mr. Chairman, the time has arrived—and I notice that those who do not intend to return to Congress are making their farewell speeches, sometimes known as swan songs. This will not be my swan song, Mr. Chairman.

There is a bird known as the laughing jackass. It is a cross between the swan and the gilli-gilli-galoo bird. The swan-song singers have misnamed their bird.

I intend to introduce a resolution in the House of Representatives touching on expert interbreeding of turkey buzzards and humming birds, which I incorporate as a part of my remarks. The resolution provides that—

The Secretary of Agriculture be, and he is hereby, authorized to expend not exceeding $1,000 in the purchase of 6 high-grade, thoroughbred male turkey buzzards and 99 thoroughbred humming birds, each to be passed upon by Dr. A. D. Melvin, Chief of the Bureau of Animal Industry, as to the soundness of limb and heart strength, in order that a test may be made as to the value of the offspring, be they gnats or fleas, for agricultural purposes, and to report to Congress whether the experiment is more valuable to the American farmer than the one now going on in this bureau, where thousands of dollars have been expended in buying zebras in Africa and transporting the same to the District of Columbia, where they are joined in wedlock to Missouri mules, the offspring of which seems to be a cross between a North Dakota jackrabbit and an Australian kangaroo; and the sum of $1,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House to carry out the purpose of this resolution.

I do not think that resolution goes far enough, Mr. Chairman. I think that the Government experts should investigate the feasibility of making crosses between the common sperm whale and the spitchcock. Would it not be well also for the Agricultural Department experts to investigate the feasibility of interbreeding the orang-utan and the goat with a view to producing a species of human being that could be used as experts in the Bureau of Animal Industry who would have no selfish ambitions, would be devoid of all grafting propensities, and whose highest ambitions would be to serve the people honestly and economically during their official tenure in the Agricultural Department?

The Washington Times of February 1—I include an editorial taken therefrom, which I desire to incorporate in my remarks—speaks beautifully of Elder McCabe:

VALE, M'CABE.

The Hon. George P. McCabe, too long—altogether too long—Solicitor of the Department of Agriculture, has resigned, to take effect March 4. In view of very excellent reasons for belief that the copper toe on the Wilson right boot was placed there with special reference to detailed plans for separating the Hon. McCabe from his solicitorship, we can but regard his resignation as a formality.

It is good to know that Mr. McCabe is going. It will be the most notable act of public service he has rendered since he became an ornament to the salary list and an obstacle to enforcement of the pure-food laws.

Further, it is pleasing to know that he will live hereafter in Portland, Oreg. That is about as far away from Washington as he could get.

With Ballinger in Seattle and McCabe in Portland, the division of honors between the two great rival cities of the Pacific Northwest will continue balanced to a nicety.

We have no doubt that Portland will be glad to have him, and at the same time his absence here will create a most joyful feeling in the hearts of every man who has a personal acquaintance with his official performances since he has been Solicitor—at one time for the Department of Agriculture and at another time solicitor to the Secretary of Agriculture. But I do not intend to make any further remarks in regard to the old father Neptune of the Agricultural Department; he is politically dead, and the least said about a dead man the better.

Mr. Chairman, in this bill Congress is appropriating almost $20,000,000, to which must be added $3,000,000 for meat inspection and other millions for various purposes, and all chargeable to the Agricultural Department. And we who are the guardians of the Public Treasury should have a care that in the expenditure of these vast sums of money the public is receiving its just deserts, and that extravagance and waste are not permitted to run riot through the various bureaus, either on account of ignorant and incompetent officials or because of favoritism to employees, officials, or sections of the country. Affairs may run smoothly for a while in all branches of the service, but if out of joint at any one place a slip of a cog may expose the weak spot, and then complacency and standpatism give place to revolution and reform. New York City for years has boasted of her police force, but a cog slipped, and the population of Sing Sing is on the increase.

In many respects I am proud of the grand work performed by many employees in the Agricultural Department, and to all such I say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." But for the misdeeds and blunders, to speak mildly, of a few—a very few—officials in the Agricultural Department, who have been unworthy of the responsibility and salary given them, I hang my head in shame, for they have disgraced the service and brought ridicule and condemnation upon the Government which they agreed to faithfully serve. However, their days are numbered, for Woodrow Wilson will give them the toe of his boot, and their connection with the public service will end forever, and with them will go inefficiency, incompetency, and waste.

One of the extravagant items in this bill is $200,000 increase for the Bureau of Animal Industry, ostensibly for meat inspection, but as confessed in the report—for increase in salaries. The Government is already expending $3,000,000 for meat inspection, and all of this vast sum, save a trifle over $100,000, goes to salaries—the best paid labor for the services performed in the whole Government service. This appropriation is a lump sum, and the tyrannical methods of its disbursement, as is the case in the expenditure of all lump-sum appropriations, condemns this method of appropriating money.

Suppose John Doe is chief of a bureau and distributes a lump sum of $3,000,000 in salaries to those under him, what is to prevent him from having a cringing, sycophantic roll of employees doing his bidding, whether right or wrong, in order that increase in salary will always go to him who sticks closest to the heels of his master? I am opposed to lump-sum appropriations in the Government service. Let the laborer be worthy of his hire, place him upon the statutory roll at a wage commensurate with his work, and save a scandal that is already imminent. In lump-sum appropriations the temptation to annually increase it is always present, and the excuse given for such an increase is not always creditable to those who make the request. Only last year President Taft was imposed upon by the Department of Agriculture in this manner, but, thanks to Congress, no harm was done. Several years ago a good deal of money was expended by the Bureau of Animal Industry in examining, microscopically, pork to detect trichina. After a thorough test the bureau decided to discontinue the examination, both on account of the expense and its inefficiency. "Experience has shown that under practical conditions a reliable inspection for trichina is not possible," page 13 in Twenty-fourth Annual Report, Bureau of Animal Industry. Yet last year, when the minister from Switzerland compalined to our Government that inhabitant of Switzerland had died from the effects of eating American pork, the Department of Agriculture, in the face of its statement to the world that microscopic examination of pork failed to produce the result desired, prevailed upon President Taft to send a special message to Congress asking for a lump sum of $1,000,000 for this very purpose. The trick was discovered and the appropriation failed to materialize. Of course, that $1,000,000 was evidently intended to swell the salary list in the Bureau of Animal Industry. In this bill the mask is off and only $200,000 increase is requested, yet those who know claim that meat inspection could be handled by one-half the large force now employed and with better results. We respectfully refer this bureau to President Wilson for reformation and purification.

Another item in this bill attracts my attention. Almost one-third of a million dollars is appropriated for free seeds. We move to strike out the word "seeds" and insert in lieu thereof the word "bunk," for if there ever was a case of highway robbery this free-seed proposition belongs to that category. It is a species of cheap graft and generally used for campaign purposes. We are passing laws limiting the size of campaign contributions, yet Congress goes on year by year increasing the appropriation for free seeds in order that the statesman from Bunkville may grab a few more votes at public expense. If free seeds, why not free coal, free lumber, or free chickens? Why be parsimonious with Government money, when it can be so easily had in the name of agriculture? We have expended thousands of dollars through the Bureau of Animal Industry for zebras from Africa. Upon their arrival they are joined in wedlock to Missouri mules, and thus far we have not produced either a North Dakota jack rabbit or an Australian kangaroo. Then why waste the money? Possibly, if the money holds out, the department hopes to produce a new kind of automobile. Uncle Sam is rich; let the game go on.

I also note that a solicitor and a score and a half of law clerks are performing labor that properly belongs to the Department of Justice. Two full-grown lawyers and a stenographer could perform all the legal work that develops in the Agricultural Department, but we must have jobs, and Uncle Sam has the money, so why complain?

In time every bureau will have a solicitor; an editor, who is really a publicity agent bent on earning his salary by "booming" his bureau and its chief; a chief clerk; an architect; a carpenter; a dentist; and a cook. This situation is not peculiar to the Agricultural Department. We find it everywhere. This extravagance is only equaled by the money wasted in printing trash, which finds it way to cellars or bonfires. Annually the Government is wasting millions of dollars in printing, and the Agricultural Department is one of the chief offenders along this line. Reform in the civil service is badly needed, but not half so badly as in the printing business at Government expense. Some fool is liable to devise a method of printing thoughts as well as words if a halt is not soon called.

This bill is not all bad. In fact there is more good than evil in it, but when it is bad it is awful bad. As I said in the beginning, the Agricultural Department is full of intelligent, conscientious employees who are reflecting credit upon themselves and their country by the service they are giving the American farmer, and as a farmer I love to sing their praises. My only regret is that the few exceptions make the department malodorous.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH].

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, the subject I have to consider will take a good deal more time than five minutes in order to treat it in the way I wish. I desire to extend some remarks in the RECORD concerning what I believe should be the policy of this Government in regard to authorizing the construction of dams across navigable rivers, and particularly the policy in regard to water powers, and I also wish to ask leave to extend some remarks in regard to the direct election by the people of Presidents of the United States; and also on the proposition of whether or not the President should be eligible to more than one term. On those two propositions—water powers and election of President—I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, each separately.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LINDBERGH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subjects indicated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LINDBERGH. Mr. Chairman, the Connecticut River Power Co. seeks authority from Congress to dam the Connecticut River, and at an expense of $5,500,000 to develop one of the greatest powers in the country. It is proposed to give to the company the first 8 per cent profits and to divide the excess up to 9 per cent equally with the Government, and above 9 per cent give the Government an increasing ratio.

If this Congress permits the execution of such a contract, the people in the future would wonder what sort of statesmanship prevailed here. It would commit this Government to a policy that by its very laws would encumber the people with an unbearable burden. Consider this monstrosity for a moment.

The geometrical progression of accumulated dividends at the minimum, 8 per cent on $5,500,000 the first 100 years would be over $12,000,000,000. It is proposed to grant to the individuals the legal privilege to proceed to extort from the people on that basis. To be sure, it would have only a 50-year charter, but the policy is the same. But the proposition here is not to stop with the 8 per cent, for an inducement is held out to the corporation to extort more, so that it may divide the excess with the Government, while the latter supports the legalized robbery.

What do we understand by the government of the people? It is presumably a government by themselves for themselves. Why should they first permit a company to rob them of 8 per cent and then offer the company an inducement to rob them some more, if they will be permitted to divide in the robbery? Suppose the company and the Government should succeed in extorting from the people 12 per cent; the geometrical progression of accumulated dividends on that compounded annually, and that is the rule, would in 100 years consume the total present real and personal valuation of all the people more than three times over. That is the policy to which it is proposed to commit the Government.

I shall not assume that this is a temporary government. I assume that our fathers, who fought the Revolutionary and the Civil Wars, the test struggles of our national existence, did so with the purpose of making it as lasting as mankind. I would not knowingly commit the Government to any economic or social policy that can not be fairly carried from one generation to another as a principle.

I realize that some people will say that there will be no complete centralized accumulation of the dividends so as to have the rule of geometrical progression apply to the extent I have stated. They will claim, of course, that the profits will be scattered by those who get them. That would be true to a greater or lesser extent. There would be extravagance of one kind and another to prevent the complete accumulation; but the extravagance itself would be a tax upon us. The real point, however, that I make is that we would by passing Senate bill 8033 commit the Government to a policy which, if applied literally, according to the proposals of the Secretary of War, would become a burden that would in the end break down by its own weight.

I do not oppose granting the company the right to construct the improvements. The water power is there, going to waste, while it should be a service to humanity. Therefore, whenever any of the water powers may be utilized to the public advantage I am in favor of giving the right to make the improvements, and I am opposed to levying an extortion on the people for the service. Let us give the right with the power reserved to the Government to regulate from time to time the charges to be made for the service, but in doing so let it be reasonable and subject to revision by the reasonable construction of things measured by the common necessities. I am not in favor of making any charge against the company above that which is incidentally required to maintain proper regulation, and I will not consent to establishing a vested interest in any person or corporation to levy a toll on future generations. I would simply give assurance of protection to the parties who make the improvements that so long as they are reasonable they shall be entitled to operate them with such return as the general patronage entitles them. When men come to Congress to ask for privileges they must be content to trust the people, whose Congress this is, to treat them consistently, and they must expect that Congress will not pledge future generations to policies that can not be literally or practically carried out in the common interests of humanity. We of this time are operating under disadvantages that are the results of some of our predecessors' failures to look beyond the immediate necessities of the day of their service. Let us not commit such errors ourselves.

Mr. HUGHES of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND].

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some resolutions and comments relative to the exemption of coastwise vessels from the payment of tolls through the Panama Canal.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to above is as follows:

NEWSPAPER COMMENT AND RESOLUTIONS UPHOLDING THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES IN GRANTING FREE TOLLS THROUGH THE PANAMA CANAL TO AMERICAN SHIPS IN THE COASTWISE TRADE.

DECLARATION IN PLATFORM OF NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY UNANIMOUSLY APPROVED AT BALTIMORE ON JULY 2, 1912.

We favor the exemption from tolls of American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the Panama Canal. We also favor legislation forbidding the use of the Panama Canal by ships owned or controlled by railroad carriers engaged in transportation competitive with the canal.

DECLARATION IN PLATFORM OF NATIONAL PROGRESSIVE PARTY UNANIMOUSLY APPROVED IN CHICAGO ON AUGUST 7, 1912.

The Panama Canal, built and paid for by the American people, must be used primarily for their benefit. We demand that the canal shall be so operated as to break transportation monopoly now held and misused by the transcontinental railroads, by maintaining sea competition with them; that ships directly or indirectly owned or controlled by American railroad corporations shall not be permitted to use the canal, and that American ships engaged in coastwise trade shall pay no tolls.

[Extract from letter of Theodore Roosevelt in Outlook, January 18, 1913.]

I believe that the position of the United States is proper as regards this coastwise traffic. I think that we have the right to free bona fide coastwise traffic from tolls. I think that this does not interfere with the rights of any other nation, because no ships but our own can engage in coastwise traffic, so that there is no discrimination against other ships when we relieve the coastwise traffic from tolls. I believe that the only damage that would be done is the damage to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Moreover, I do not think that it sits well on the representatives of any foreign nation, even upon those of a power with which we are, and I hope and believe will always remain, on such good terms as Great Britain, to make any plea in reference to what we do with our own coastwise traffic, because we are benefiting the whole world by our action at Panama, and are doing this where every dollar of expense is paid by ourselves. In all history I do not believe you can find another instance where as great and expensive a work as the Panama Canal, undertaken not by a private corporation but by a nation, has ever been as generously put at the service of all the nations of mankind.

KNOX'S REPLY TO ENGLISH GOVERNMENT.

American public opinion is so fully convinced that this country is in the right in the canal-tolls dispute with England, and has such well-grounded suspicions that the whole English contention is in the interest of the English stock and bond holders in the Canadian Pacific and other Pacific railroads, that popular interest in the notes exchanged between the foreign offices of the two countries is not keen.

* * * * * * *

That will has been expressed by the act of Congress freeing American ships from tolls, and if "diplomacy" tries to veto that decision diplomacy will get a bad upset.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Times.]

Secretary Knox, in presenting the American argument relative to Panama Canal tolls, has demolished some of the British contentions. It is a complete answer to the objections raised by those who think American coastwise vessels should be compelled to pay for using a waterway which Uncle Sam has built for their own convenience.

[From the Baltimore American.]

KNOX RIGHT; GREY WRONG.

Diplomacy should suffice to adjust the points of difference between this country and Great Britain in respect to the abrogation of tolls for American coastwise shipping. This is the underlying note of the Knox response to the objections entered by Sir Edward Grey in his note to this Government. The proclamation of President Taft so altered the situation as to have vitiated the British contention.

* * * * * * *

There is no disposition to credit England with plotting to drive an entering wedge into the canal through its note of objection so as to force the way for interference in American domestic affairs. The precedent sought to be established would give recognition to further interference of Great Britain in other ways in case this country should supinely permit it to dictate modification of the laws and usages bearing upon the domestic coastwise traffic. Yet, while this view is not entertained, the fact exists that such would be the effect. A hundred years ago the United States and England definitely settled the matter for all time of British interference with American commerce, and that settlement can not be revamped at the present day, so that any course of arbitration would have to assume at the outset the full right of Americans to make any laws they see fit for their own shipping.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Knox has made the American position irrefutable, and the Taft proclamation made this possible.

[From the Marine Journal, New York, N. Y.]

THE REAL OPPOSITION—INFLUENCES THAT ARE HOSTILE TO FREE CANAL TOLLS FOR AMERICAN SHIPPING.

The real opposition to this proposal is not likely to show its head in public at Washington. This opposition is made up in part of short-sighted officials of some of the transcontinental railroads—though to their credit be it said, many of the railroad managers are manfully accepting free tolls as a policy destined to benefit the entire country, and thereby the railroads themselves in the long run. Another element of opposition, powerful and sinister, is doubtless the influence of the European steamship corporations in the United States. Foreign ships are entirely barred from coastwise carrying through the canal, and the granting of free tolls to American ships in foreign trade would no more than put them on an equality with their foreign competitors.

But these European steamship corporations and their agents and attorneys hate and dread any form of national encouragement to American shipping.

These European companies, which control nine-tenths of our ocean carrying, are a fighting power all over the United States. There are many quiet ways in which they can make their influence felt. Some of their representatives are American citizens, and these men will usually be found lined up aggressively against every proposal to strengthen the national merchant marine.

They see in the Panama Canal a possibility of future growth of the coastwise shipping of the United States which might menace the ocean-going shipping of other countries. A great American coastwise fleet developed by the canal might gradually encroach upon the European monopoly of our over-seas carrying. This great coastwise fleet would constitute a valuable naval reserve for the United States.

[From the Statesman, Yonkers, N. Y.]

OUR SHIPS IN THE CANAL.

The foreign trade from American seaports will be greatly stimulated by the completion of the canal, but a provision exempting American vessels from toll is necessary if they are to engage in it, paying, as they must, the higher wages which sailors on American vessels demand and receive.

[From the Baltimore Sun.]

CONCERNING PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

From an article by an Englishman in an English magazine we learn that under the treaty of 1815 between Great Britain and the United States no higher duties or charges may be imposed on United States vessels in British ports than are paid by British vessels in the same ports, notwithstanding which Great Britain has always discriminated in favor of her coastwise vessels.

[From the Detroit (Mich.) Free Press.]

PROPER ENOUGH BUT BADLY TIMED.

Senator ROOT'S attempt to repeal the exemption clauses in the Panama Canal tolls act is badly timed and is practically certain of defeat by Congress. It comes into conflict with diplomatic argument of the Government. It can hardly fail to prejudice the position of the State Department in British relations and prove a difficult handicap to Secretary Knox in his exchange of notes with the English foreign office over the protest against the American position.

* * * * * * *

No other nation has any right to interfere in our treatment of our domestic shipping, and every true American must resent the effort by Great Britain to intrude in such a purely national matter. While the proper authority is rejecting the claims to such interference there should be no weakening of our attitude, and the legislative branch ought to be backing up the executive branch of the Government instead of interposing obstacles to patriotic effort. The Root bill should not have been presented at this time. Having been presented, it should be withdrawn by its author or overwhelmingly rejected by Congress.

[From the Lincoln (Nebr.) Star.]

It is not difficult to imagine that it is not so much the thought of Uncle Sam's bad faith as it is the thought that free tolls for American ships through the canal might provide competition for the big transcontinental railway combinations.

It is the men and the combinations who own the stock in these railroads who are appalled at the enormity of offense in this free-tolls proposition. They are not all in this country. Many of them are in England. Their presence there accounts for the protest entered by the English Government against this proposal of Uncle Sam to put life into his shipping industry by putting his ships into actual competition with the railroads between his east and west coasts.

It is the first time in history that anyone has discovered dishonor in a proposition of any government to provide encouragement to its own shipping, and the peculiar thing about it all is that those who profess to consider it a monstrously dishonorable proposition are the same ones who have for many years been clamoring for ship subsidies in the form of cash out of the people's Treasury.

Perhaps they do not like this plan because the ship-subsidy plan would be so much more profitable to them. But to the man who pays the freight—the historic "Jones, of Texas"—the free-tolls plan looks mighty good.

[From the Denver (Colo.) News.]

Whatever its faults, the Taft Congress must be given credit for courage. It means to die as it lived, disdaining any weak thing like a deathbed repentance. As if in very defiance of the public opinion that has crushed them, the Tories have decided to devote their remaining minutes to the service of the Railroad Trust in connection with the Panama Canal regulations.

The money of the American people bought the Canal Zone, that every cent of expense came out of the American Treasury, and that our investment in the great ditch approximates a half billion dollars.

England's "feelings" are hurt by the action of the United States in trying to encourage our shipping and our commerce by remitting the tolls on American ships engaged in coastwise trade. It is a discrimination against British ships that is in no manner justified by the fact that we bought the land and built the canal and own the whole business in fee simple.

There was a time, not so many years ago either, when the people might have been deceived by balderdash. But we have come to an appreciation of the intricacies of monopoly.

* * * * * * *

They know that free tolls for American ships and the barring of railroad-owned vessels from the canal are at the bottom of sudden passion for arbitration. As long as these regulations obtain, the canal stands as an obstacle in the way of monopoly and insures competition in transportation rates.

* * * * * * *

There is, of course, small chance of the bill's amendment or of its submission to any sort of arbitration. Even in the Senate there are not enough men sufficiently bold to defy the wrath of a Nation and to court infamy and disgrace.

[From the Nashville (Tenn.) Tennesseean.]

PANAMA CANAL CONTROVERSY.

Reply to the protest of Great Britain regarding the proposition to exempt our coastwise shipping from Panama Canal tolls has been made by Secretary Knox.

* * * * * * *

English expert opinion of the merits of the controversy is divided, as it is in this country, which will be a shock to those who roll up their trousers because it is raining in London, or who sneeze because the British King takes snuff. Two articles appeared in a recent number of the Law Magazine and Review, a London periodical, both bearing on the Panama Canal status. In summing up, one writer says:

"(a) That the United States can support its action on the precise words of the material articles of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty; that its case is strengthened by reference to the preamble and context; and that its case is difficult to challenge on grounds of general justice.

"(b) That there is no international obligation to submit the construction of its legislative act to any process of arbitration; and

"(c) That the aggrieved party has an appropriate, an impartial, and a competent tribunal in the Supreme Court of the United States."

The second writer expresses this view:

"The treaty could never have been intended to prevent the Federal Government from arranging and regulating its domestic or coastwise commerce and in the use and enjoyment of its own property as it saw fit."

* * * * * * *

As the granting of free tolls to coastwise vessels is a part of the last Democratic platform the chances for the incoming Senate to recede from its present position do not appear to be flattering.

[From the Springfield (Mass.) Union.]

CANAL TOLLS AND OUR NATIONAL HONOR.

It strikes us that the hue and cry about our national honor being sullied by the tolls-exemption clause of the Panama Canal act is being a little overdone in some quarters. One is moved to wonder if the agitation proceeds in every case from motives as lofty and patriotic as appears. We would cast no general aspersion on those who insist that this clause should be repealed on that ground. But it is well to remember that there is an important interest in this country that has good reason, purely on private grounds, to foster this agitation. That interest consists of the great corporations engaged in transcontinental business. The tolls-exemption feature is expected to afford a new element of competition by which rates from one coast to the other may be substantially reduced. The same act which proposes to remit the tolls in the case of our coastwise shipping also prohibits railroad companies from owning steamships. Thus it is sought to deprive concerns engaged in the two fields of transportation between which competition is sought from combining in a manner to keep rates up and rob the public of the anticipated benefits of cheap water transportation.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Post.]

SETTING WILSON RIGHT.

The more conservative Democrats of the Senate and House are none too soon in making a concerted effort to offset the wrong impression which their ultraprogressive brethren have created as regards the Wilson program.

* * * * * * *

The stereotyped method of misstating the President elect's attitude is for a speaker or an editor to assert that there are "excellent reasons for believing" that this or that diatribe represents Woodrow Wilson's views on the subject. Thus the spokesman for the Interstate Commerce Committee is emboldened to declare that the first thing Mr. Wilson will do upon coming to Washington will be to secure the repeal of the Panama Canal tolls law, as if the President would at once set out to repudiate his party's platform and his party in Congress.

MR. KNOX'S CRUSHING REPLY.

Secretary Knox's note in reply to the British request for arbitration of the Panama controversy throws a flood of light upon the matter. It shows that a state of facts exists quite different from the hypothetical situation imagined by Sir Edward Grey, and that upon this state of facts the United States is not discriminating against British shipping; that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is not violated in letter or spirit, and, therefore, there is nothing to arbitrate. Mr. Knox makes the somewhat humorous suggestion that if there should be a dispute over the facts it might be well to refer the question to a commission of inquiry, in the manner provided for in the arbitration treaty of August 31, 1911.

[From the Oshkosh (Wis.) Northwestern.]

BASED ON SUSPICION.

The reply of Secretary of State Knox to the British protest against the exemption of American coastwise shipping from Panama Canal tolls furnishes a clear and comprehensive exposition of the American side of this dispute.

* * * * * * *

As to the right of this Government to favor its coastwise shipping by a remission of canal tolls, this is a point the Secretary insists is beyond question. Nor should the British complain on this score, so long as American ships engaged in the foreign trade are placed on exactly the same basis as British ships, which is exactly what is proposed by the canal regulations already approved.

[From the Elmira (N. Y.) Advertiser.]

The British Government does not make as strong claims that the treaty is violated by the Panama act as do the American champions of this view on this side of the water. Most of the British objections are already answered by the schedule of tolls prescribed by President Taft and which the British foreign secretary had not seen when he wrote his note of protest. As for the rest, it is not the exemption of the coastwise vessels that he complains of so much as the possibility that this exemption may somehow be used surreptitiously to the disadvantage of British ships. When this occurs Great Britain will have a real cause of complaint, but until it does occur, it does not appear, according to the secretary's own showing, that his Government has any grievance whatever.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer.]

AN AMERICAN ENTERPRISE.

The Panama Canal is an American canal—an American enterprise pure and simple.

And it is American in spite of the fact that there are some persons who appear to think that it is English.

There are the transcontinental railroads, for instance. They are a unit in arguing that the United States has no right to control its own property.

And there are the representatives of the railroad corporations in Congress. They quite agree with the railroads.

[From the Philadelphia (Pa.) Star.]

THE CANAL AND TOLLS.

While the fight continues in the Senate regarding the question of free passage for coastwise ships bearing our flag or of submission to the English idea that she has just as much right in the canal as we have Secretary Knox has made an important communication to the British foreign office.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Knox points out to England that the United States regards as coastwise vessels those which ply from port to port of this country only and that it is only such as would be free from tolls in using the canal. That is to say, vessels flying our own flag and sailing from one part of the United States to another would not be obliged to pay toll in going through the canal.

Surely there can be no right on the part of any to object to such an arrangement as this. It is purely domestic, a matter relating to our own housekeeping, and it would seem to be utterly absurd that any outside party or country could be permitted to say what we shall or shall not do in such a relation.

* * * * * * *

In addition to communicating these facts Secretary Knox has informed England that the exemption of such coastwise vessels as described will not make it necessary to increase the tolls charged to others. And this eliminates the last possible excuse for any sort of foreign intervention. It takes away the last possibility that this matter is the business of any country but our own. It is to be hoped that the matter will end there and that we shall soon hear no more about it.

[From the Mobile (Ala.) Register.]

COUNTING UNHATCHED CHICKENS.

The efforts of Great Britain to have the matter of free toll for American coastwise vessels through the Panama Canal submitted to arbitration have been neatly met by the reply of Secretary Knox. In effect he says that this is not a matter now germane to the issue. The admission of these vessels to free tolls is not yet a fact. There has been no law passed to that effect. It is yet in the making. What the United States may do in the future is not a subject for present arbitration.

Possibly it may be handled in diplomatic correspondence as to the merits or demerits of the idea as affecting existent treaty regulations. Possibly it may be proper to discuss it now with a view of getting a better understanding of the situation, but to submit it to arbitration now is not to be thought of, for there is nothing as yet to arbitrate.

When this law is a fact instead of a possibility, or probability as it is at present, there will be sufficient time in which to consider whether arbitration is the remedy for an apparent irreconcilability of viewpoint. Until that time has arrived it would be most foolish for the United States to submit a largely abstract question to a court composed of representatives of nations at one with the position of Great Britain, and from which court an adverse verdict to the United States is largely a foregone conclusion. Mr. Knox has neatly avoided a pitfall set for him by the wily Britishers.

[From the Navy, Washington, D. C.]

RECRUDESCENCE OF CANAL-TOLL DISCUSSION.

The formal British protest against the remission of Panama Canal tolls has aroused renewed discussion of that much thrashed-over subject.

* * * * * * *

To restate the present American contention:

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty was adopted when it was supposed that the canal was to be built in foreign territory. The acquisition of the Canal Zone from Panama rendered the treaty voidable, due to a radical change in the conditions existing at the time it was made. The contention that the treaty was thus rendered voidable is well supported by both English and American authorities on international law.

Mr. Hannis Taylor in a recent magazine article quotes from his work on International Law, as follows:

"A treaty may become voidable through subsequent events. After the validity of an international agreement has been firmly established by the concurrence of such antecedents it may become voidable through the operation of subsequent events which might not have such an effect in the case of private contract. So unstable are the conditions of international existeace and so difficult is it to enforce a contract between States after the state of facts upon which it was formed has substantially changed that all such agreements are necessarily made subject to the general understanding that they shall cease to be obligatory so soon as the conditions upon which they were executed are essentially altered."

Mr. Hall, an English authority, thus states the case:

"Neither party to a contract can make its binding effect dependent at his will upon conditions other than those contemplated at the moment when the contract was entered into, and, on the other hand, a contract ceases to be binding so soon as anything which formed an implied condition of its obligatory force at the time of its conclusion is essentially altered. If this be true, and it will scarcely be contradicted, it is only necessary to determine under what implied conditions an international agreement is made. When these are found, the reasons for which a treaty may be disregarded will also be found."

When the authorities on international law of both Nations admit that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is voidable, any protests by either party having for their object the enforcement of the terms of that treaty seem unnecessary. * * *

* * * The United States has built the canal at an expense of nearly $400,000,000, thereby opening new routes of commerce to the world. The canal tolls have been fixed by the President of the United States, in accordance with the Panama Canal act. These tolls will not pay interest on the cost of the canal for an indefinite period, if ever, which fact eliminates the claim made by owners of foreign shipping that their ships are called upon to pay an unjust proportion of the charges for the maintenance of the canal.

The root of these protests is the fear of English and other foreign shipowners that there will be an increase in American merchant marine, which will interfere more or less with foreign carrying business. Furthermore, it is questionable if it is thoroughly understood that tolls are remitted only to vessels engaged in a trade from which foreign vessels are barred. To summarize from an American standpoint:

The Hay-Pauncefote treaty has become voidable, owing to a radical change in the conditions existing at the time of its enactment.

The canal is built in American territory.

Its construction has cost the people of the United States $400,000,000.

The maintenance, neutrality, and defense of the canal is guaranteed by the United States.

Tolls will not for an indefinite period (if ever) pay for the maintenance of the canal and interest on the cost of construction.

As a slight encouragement to strictly domestic trade, tolls on ships engaged in coastwise trade are remitted.

REPLY OF SECRETARY KNOX.

It is a strong reply that has been made by Secretary Knox in answer to the request of Great Britain for arbitration in regard to the controversy over the Panama Canal matter and will go far to correct a faulty idea of the situation that has existed in some quarters and which has led to assertions that the United States, by exempting our coastwise shipping from the payment of tolls, is violating a treaty.

The Commercial has taken the position that Congress has acted wisely in providing that the free-tolls provision should be extended to our ships in carrying out the principle of favoring coastwise trade carried in our own bottoms, and that any other position would be unfair to certain sections of our country—as, for example, a toll charge for coastwise shipping would discriminate against the great Pacific coast in its carrying trade with the Atlantic ports. As the Commercial has stated, the Pacific Coast States are taxed to pay for the canal, and it is not fair to say that American vessels from Pacific ports shall pay special charges to take a cargo to New Orleans or Galveston, for instance, when shipping from Boston or New York to those ports are not required to do so. Secretary Knox in his reply bears out the statement of the Commercial that a treaty with Great Britain does not repeal an act of Congress relating to coastwise shipping which has been long in force.

* * * * * * *

There would be but scant opposition to the giving of free tolls to American coastwise shipping if it were not for the attitude of people in New York and elsewhere who are interested in the great transcontinental railroads. As has been remarked, if the coastwise shipping from the Pacific should be obliged to pay tolls, it would place a tax of $1.10 a ton on natural coarse products for the benefit of the transcontinental railroads, which would be enabled to add just that much more to their freight charges.

[From the Wichita (Kans.) Eagle.]

ENGLISH VIEWS OF THE CANAL TOLLS.

Certain English newspapers profess to be greatly disturbed over the plan to make American shipping free of tolls for use of the Panama Canal, and they complain that this would be a distinct violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which, as concluded between Great Britain and the United States, provides that the use of the canal shall be enjoyed on equal terms by all shipping.

* * * * * * *

Incidentally, it might be asked what right Great Britain had to exact such terms. That country had no rights on the Isthmus and took no part in the construction of the canal. The waterway is a purely American enterprise, financed and owned by the United States, and subject to no other jurisdiction.

[From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.]

THE CANAL TOLL QUESTION.

The Panama route has been the basis for regulating the transcontinental traffic schedule and the Panama Railroad has been the determining factor in that rate. An all-water route from one coast to the other might afford a chance for real and disturbing competition. It will be hard to convince the country that this is not a pertinent reason for making the canal free to American ships. Certainly the public will not agree that the question of toll or of the rate per ton shall be determined on the basis of the transcontinental railroad interests.

[From the Toledo (Ohio) Blade.]

PANAMA TOLLS.

There is power in bluff, particularly when nations bluff. The stir raised in European courts over the proposal in the United States that American vessels be charged a lower toll than other vessels is based almost wholly upon the hope that a little snarling, a few protests, an imposing document or two, and the speech of a cabinet officer may cause this country to exact as large a sum from those who have helped to pay for the canal as from others.

The administration contends that the canal, having been built by the United States, ought to be used for our benefit. One benefit we should reap, if we possibly can, is the restoration of the American merchant marine. To open the canal to every nation upon the same plane would be to sacrifice an opportunity. It would amount to a gift over and above the great gift of a shortened waterway for the commerce of the world. It would also be a gift that Europe can not and surely does not expect, though taking a long chance at frightening us into granting it.

The Panama Canal is ours. Why should we not do what we wish with our own?

[From the Baltimore (Md.) Evening Star.]

AN UNFAIR REQUEST.

England's diplomats have known for months that the prevailing sentiment in this country, both in and out of Congress, is in favor of free passage through the canal for American ships, but reasonable tolls for foreign vessels using the new route.

[From the Knoxville (Tenn.) Sentinel.]

A TOLL-FREE CANAL.

During the last generation the United States Government has expended about half a billion dollars in the improvement of our rivers and harbors. By law we have adopted as a national policy that all our waterways shall be toll free. We are expending somewhat less than this on the Isthmian Canal. It will be a national waterway, a prolongation of our coast line. Why not free it of all tolls just as we have done all public canals, harbors, and other waterways? New York is now investing $120,000,000 in the Erie Canal. * * * It will be satisfied, it will feel itself more than repaid if the Erie Canal carries an abundance of traffic diverts freights from the St. Lawrence route, and keeps down railway freight rates. The commercial rôle of the Panama Canal should be the same as that of the Erie Canal. It will join two great bodies of water on which our coastwise traffic is carried. And in addition it will open to our Atlantic and Gulf ports all the harbors of the vast Pacific.

The Panama Canal was not undertaken as a money-making enterprise.

* * * * * * *

The South is interested in a toll-free canal because it is interested in the widest possible use of the canal.

[From the Baltimore American.]

ENGLAND AND THE CANAL.

England is not more interested than any other country in the question of the abrogation of tolls for American ships. Under the treaty of 1903 it was, indeed, specifically agreed between the two countries that the canal should be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations without discrimination with respect to charges of traffic or otherwise. The fact remains that in certain respects this agreement is found inapplicable. It does not apply to coastwise traffic, as this would be in the case of American shipping. Other considerations have left no doubt in the minds of American international lawyers as to the sound position of this country should it abrogate tolls for its vessels. This action would simply be a counter to the subsidies that are granted foreign vessels by their governments. The abrogation of tolls is the only method by which the United States can equalize traffic advantages of its own ships. Great Britain seems bent upon assuming a captious stand.

[From the Salt Lake City (Utah) Herald-Republican.]

YANKEE VESSELS SHOULD GO FREE.

If the provision in the canal treaty with the Republic of Panama guaranteeing the use of the waterway on equal terms by all nations means that American vessels shall pay whatever tolls are fixed for general observance, then Uncle Sam should arrange himself to pay those charges on American ships. It is a ridiculous absurdity that this Nation, after having gone to prodigious expense to construct this great artery of commerce and to maintain it, should assess tolls against ships of American register owned and operated by citizens of this country.

It is understood that the Spanish Government will assume the tolls for canal use by all vessels that fly the Spanish flag, and that Great Britain will undoubtedly perform the same office for English vessels. The Nation which built the canal can scarcely afford to be less alive to its own commercial interests. Such policy will not only encourage the use of American vessels by shippers, but it will stimulate American shipbuilding.

[From the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Citizen.]

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

Despite what has been said on both sides regarding the British protest against the exemption of American coastwise vessels from tolls in the Panama Canal, there is no occasion for any hostile expression, still less for any hostile feeling on either side. Of the right of the United States to do as it will with its own there should not be dispute in any quarter. It owns the territory and the waterway through it.

[From the Boston (Mass.) Post.]

TOLLS AT PANAMA.

Objections have been heard from the other side of the Atlantic to discrimination in tolls to be charged vessels passing through the Panama Canal—giving free passage to those sailing under the United States flag and requiring payment from all others. It is not likely that such a claim of equal privilege will be strenously urged.

The basis of the representation, as alleged, is that such discrimination would do violence to the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty. This, however, does not seem to hold. By the terms of that convention the United States is bound to maintain uniformity and impartiality of treatment toward the shipping of all foreign nations. It by no means follows that we must not admit our own shipping to the enjoyment of larger and special privileges in the use of our own property, erected, paid for, and maintained at the expense of our people.

[From the Pittsburgh Bulletin.]

THE PANAMA PROBLEM.

Basing her protest upon the provisions of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, which guarantee that no discriminations shall be practiced against the ships of any nation in the administration of the canal, England has protested against the exemption planned. America's contention is that the terms of the treaty forbid discrimination only between foreign nations, while England insists that even America, the owner of the canal, may not be favored.

To the casual observer it would seem that America is right. Surely the owner of an international utility should be able to enforce whatever regulations, not incompatible with the just law of right and wrong between nations, it desires. The contentions of the two great Nations may result in some bitterness and some controversy, but there is little probability of anything more serious. England and America can be trusted to work their differences out amicably if heatedly. It is safe to predict that America will retain full control of the canal and at the same time satisfy the contentions of the empire across the seas.

[From the Lowell (Mass.) Courier-Citizen.]

CANAL TOLLS.

The President is of opinion that the United States has ample power to remit the tolls that will be charged for use of the Panama Canal in the case of our own shipping. He points out that the canal is ours, was built by us at our own cost, and can certainly be made the subject of charges for use. He also points out that just as other nations subsidize shipping the United States may do the same, proportioning its subsidiary in this case to the amount due from the shipping for canal tolls. It has the look of a lawyer's device, but it is difficult to see any flaw in the reasoning. In essence, of course, no matter how we manage to do it, it amounts to giving our ships a freer use of the canal, whereas foreign vessels must pay the tolls without rebate. We can see no objection to the idea, in any case.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer.]

NO TOLLS FOR AMERICAN SHIPS.

Both of the great parties have expressed a desire to aid American shipping. We are about to put the Republicans and Democrats of the Senate to the test.

If we permit American ships to go through the Panama Canal free of tolls, we shall be giving the best of inducements for the building up of the merchant marine.

* * * * * * *

We are expending something like $400,000,000 in the canal enterprise. Are we to get nothing out of it? Are we to hand it over to foreign nations? England takes the view that we must. But what do the American citizens connected with the United States Senate say?

We are obligated by treaty to treat all foreign ships alike. But with our own shall we not do as we like?

There will be Senators to say that we can not. But such Senators will be found to be among those who are opposed to the development of an American merchant marine.

[From the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Chronicle-Telegraph.]

THE CANAL DISPUTE.

The protest of Great Britain is based on the contention that the proposed free transit of American vessels through the canal will be a violation of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, under which the canal was built. On its face this objection is untenable, since the guarantee of no discrimination in tolls which the treaty embodies can not in reason be interpreted as requiring that our Government, which owns the canal, shall be placed on the same footing in regard to tolls as foreign Governments using our property.

[From the Houston (Tex.) Post.]

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

In view of the fact that the canal is being constructed wholly with American money and on soil belonging exclusively to the United States, public sentiment in this country seems to be practically a unit in favor of fixing a system of tolls that will give the advantage to American shipping making use of the canal.

* * * * * * *

Lagging, as the United States does, behind other countries in the extent of its shipping interests, Congress should leave nothing undone within the scope of its legitimate powers to insure that Americans derive the largest possible benefit from this great waterway constructed with their money.

[From the Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard.]

The remonstrance of England in the matter of the Panama Canal tolls hinges on the clause in the canal treaty which provides that all rules shall apply equally to all users of the canal. That American coastwise shipping ought to be exempted from such a ruling will be the general feeling, we think, in this country.

[From the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Citizen.]

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

It suits some people to speak of this exemption from tolls as a subsidy, but it is not worth while to define the difference between it and the appropriation called for to build ships. It is enough to know that the revenue to be derived from the canal is to be provided by the tolls to be charged on vessels belonging to nations which have borne none of the expense of constructing the waterway, and without the toll charge would bear none of the expense of its operation.

In that view of the matter it has seemed from the first utterly ridiculous for anybody to question the right of the owners of the canal to exempt their own vessels from tolls while charging them to others, provided the revenue derived from the same is what it should be. That, more than the competition of the Suez Canal or other routes, is the question for us to settle.

[From the Brooklyn (N. Y.) Citizen.]

CANAL TOLLS.

As to the power and right of the Government to exempt American ships from payment of the canal tolls, in spite of treaties with other nations, that is a point that admits of no dispute. The canal and the territory it traverses belong absolutely to the United States, and the Nation has a perfect right to do as it will with its own.

[From the Portland (Oreg.) Journal.]

Every State along the Great Lakes, every State along the Atlantic, every State along the Gulf, every State on the Pacific slope, has a direct and vital interest in free tolls. Every State within reach by a waterway or by easy rail haul of the Great Lakes, the Atlantic, the Gulf, or the Pacific has a direct and vital interest in free tolls for domestic commerce.

Every State in the Union has, if not a direct, a strong indirect interest in free tolls because of the beneficial effect free tolls will have in promoting American shipping and because of the powerful influence free tolls will have in the promotion of the commercial interests of a common country.

NOTHING TO ARBITRATE.

Secretary of State Knox politely tells England there is nothing to arbitrate in the Panama Canal matter. In this respect he is right.

PANAMA TOLLS.

How about the livest question now on the international carpet? Have we a right to decide for ourselves whether or not our own ships shall be handicapped so badly that they have no chance of winning in a field that we had set forth originally for our own advantage, and for which we willingly paid more than $300,000,000? Was the Panama Canal solely a piece of Quixotic altruism, and are we compelled to be restrained by the dead hands of John Hay and Sir Julian Pauncefote from gaining any advantage to ourselves thereby? That is the nub of the contention between Great Britain and ourselves. The British, who speak for nine-tenths of The Hague tribunal, say it must be so; that we are bound hand and foot by the terms of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty and the folly of our own legislators, who would not permit us to encourage our ocean shipping, as other nations do, by paying them a bounty. Since that is so, says Great Britain, we dare not even relieve them of the canal tolls, and they and their agents here say we must submit the question to The Hague tribunal.

Perish the thought! We can stand a good deal in the interests of peace, but we can not permit a packed tribunal to dictate to us how we shall or shall not utilize a public convenience that we ourselves created.

CANAL MONOPOLY AND TOLLS.

As to coastwise commerce, which is carried on solely in American ships, it should be free from canal tolls. Foreign ships can not engage in such commerce, and there is no good reason why American ships should be taxed while going from one American port to another. No tax is laid by the United States upon any shipping using the internal waterways of the country, although more money has been spent upon improving these waterways than in the building of the Panama Canal. It is no discrimination against any other nation to exempt American shipping in the coastwise business, for no other nation can engage in it. No other nation has ever suggested that the United States has not a perfect right to pass its own coastwise shipping through the canal free of tolls.

[From the Charleston (S. C.) News and Courier.]

MR. KNOX ANSWERS ENGLAND.

We scarcely expect that the reply of the Department of State to the British protest in the canal matter will influence public sentiment in this country materially, for very few of those who have been crying out about our "betrayal" of our treaty obligations know enough of the question to be able to follow Mr. Knox's argument intelligently. It is difficult, however, to see how the English Government will be able to sustain its position longer in the face of the clear exposition made by the Secretary of State of the groundlessness of the objections which England has raised. The showing made by Mr. Knox that the canal rates were really computed upon the basis of the inclusion of all American ships engaged in the coastwise trade as well as of all other vessels would seem to dispose effectively of the only argument upon which England could base even the semblance of a claim that she was being discriminated against. * * *

[From the Newark (N. J.) Star.]

CANAL TOLLS AND SUBSIDY.

If an American coastwise vessel trading between New York City and San Francisco, and sailing the whole distance in American waters, is subsidized because it passes free through an American canal across American territory, then an American coastwise vessel trading between New York City and Galveston is subsidized. In both cases British and other foreign ships are discriminated against in favor of American ships, for they are forbidden to engage in the coastwise trade. Whether the American vessels pay tolls or not does not in the least affect the foreign vessel. If the Panama Canal was on foreign soil and not a part of our coast line, the same as the New Jersey coast is, and we had the administration of it for all the world, the claim of Great Britain under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty would be valid, and it might justly be said that free tolls was a subsidy. But nations do not subsidize their domestic commerce, and our coastwise trade is wholly domestic.

* * * * * * *

The question should not be permitted to be befogged with the subsidy issue. The twaddle about the "national horror" has been made ridiculous. Let Congress see in the question simply the naked right of this country to regulate its domestic commerce without foreign dictation.

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) Herald.]

TOLLS IN THE PANAMA CANAL.

The reply of Secretary Knox to the British protest against the exemption of American coastwise shipping from Panama Canal tolls, presented by Sir Edward Grey, foreign secretary of Great Britain, was given to the public just in time to answer at every point the effort of Senator ELIHU ROOT in behalf of the combined shipping companies and transcontinental railroad companies who desire to throttle the canal. These companies do not desire to pay tolls out of love for their country, but they do want a toll sheet that will keep tramp and occasional steamers and independent lines from interfering with rates from one ocean to another.

[From the Wheeling (W. Va.) Intelligencer.]

PANAMA CANAL TREATY.

In his reply to the British protest against the exemption of American coastwise shipping from Panama Canal tolls, Secretary Knox says that domestic coastwise trade will not be permitted to extend into competitive fields and that increased tolls will not be laid on foreign shipping to balance the remission to American ships. Surely this is fair. It would seem that it is going too far. If the canal tolls as originally fixed do not pay expenses with the exemption of coastwise trade, then the tolls laid on foreign shipping should be increased to cover the deficit. By Secretary Knox's proposition a deficit could, and naturally would, be charged to the fact that American coastwise trade pays no tolls, but no increased tolls could be laid on foreign shipping to make up the deficit.

[From the Detroit (Mich.) Free Press.]

PROGRESS OF THE CANAL DISPUTE.

The diplomatic contest over the Panama Canal tolls proceeds with reasonable speed. Secretary Knox has delivered his reply to the British protest and Senator ROOT has rid himself of the speech that has been accumulating in his system for some weeks, as the dispatches have been informing the public.

* * * * * * *

Congressman DOREMUS, who was prominently active in the adoption of the disputed exemptions, has very clearly pointed out in the Free Press certain vital and fatal flaws in Mr. ROOT'S position, and it will be unnecessary here to elaborate on what he has said. Most Americans, we think, will agree with him and differ with the Senator as to the international part of the argument and will, from natural instincts of patriotism, refuse to consider the possibility that a foreign nation can by any construction of a treaty secure the right to intrude upon such a matter as the treatment of American shipping by the American people in a canal constructed with American money by American skill and enterprise.

[From the American Banker, New York.]

Is there any good reason why the United States should build a canal for the benefit of other countries? The cost of the isthmian waterway is so great that a substantial interest charge, together with sinking-fund payments, must be made each year, and it is simple justice that the burden of these payments should be placed upon the commerce of other countries which have contributed nothing toward the construction of the canal. This is a question wholly outside of the field of partisan discussion, and the proposal to make the canal free to American ships should have the hearty support of every Member of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

[From the San Francisco Call.]

NO CANAL TOLLS REPEAL WITHOUT A BATTLE ROYAL.

Say this for the transcontinental interests: They never quit trying. For years they fought against the building of the Panama Canal. Next they exhausted every resource of corporation power and ingenuity to nullify or minimize its effect upon their monopoly of domestic transportation and by adjustment of canal terms and tolls to preserve their control of the coastwise traffic borne by sea. Again they lost. Now they are busier than ever in Congress and throughout the country seeking to repeal the exemption of our coastwise shipping from canal tolls.

It is a shrewd fight, waged in masterly fashion. There is absolute silence about the provision of the canal bill excluding ships owned or controlled by the railroads. The issue is cunningly made one of national honor and international morals. Nothing is said about the plain commercial questions involved. The appeal is entirely to sentiment.

Thus it has been easy to enlist on the side of repeal the sentimentalists, but your sentimentalist is an uncertain ally. He can be depended upon to talk too much and go too far. That is happening now to the embarrassment of the interests laboring for the undoing of justice. The sentimentalists are trying to persuade the country that its future as a world power depends upon more and more intimate relation with Great Britain. They point to the menace of Germany on one ocean and of Japan on the other, and hint broadly at a defensive alliance—all this coupled with near-treasonous talk to the effect that we have not the right, under the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, to subsidize our own coastwise shipping by remission of its canal tolls.

But the battle does not seem to be going exactly as the British shipping interests, the Canadians, and the American railroads desire. It is suggested that to repeal the exemption clause is not really a backdown, but would put us in a position to negotiate with England. Thus, the Cleveland Plain Dealer:

"That there is at least basis for British dissatisfaction would probably be denied by very few Americans. Under the circumstances it would be no 'backdown' and no betrayal of national honor for Congress to pass the Root bill and postpone final action on the disputed issue till the international lawsuit has been decided."

But there is a sturdy opposition to any such construction of "national honor" as would permit Great Britain or any other nation to dictate the terms on which, if we choose, we shall subsidize our domestic commerce by sea and prescribe the manner in which we shall administer our canal, constructed with our money.

Senators O'GORMAN and NEWLANDS have answered Senator ROOT'S pro-British harangue in language that must appeal to the patriotism as well as the common sense of thoughtful Americans. In the House Mr. KNOWLAND, of California, whose efforts to protect our domestic shipping in canal legislation have been heroic and effective, is keeping up his good work.

There will be no repeal without a battle royal. And in that struggle we shall see the same railroad lobby at work that fought so bitterly last year against exemption; we shall hear some of the same Members of Congress that opposed preferential treatment for our own domestic shipping shouting for the preservation of the national honor by surrender of the Nation's greatest enterprise.

It is the same old fight waged from another angle.

[From the Philadelphia Inquirer.]

NO BUSINESS OF ENGLAND'S.

England has no interest whatever in our coastwise trade. She, like all other foreign nations, is barred by law from participating in the coastwise steamship traffic of the United States.

This being the case, what possible interest can she have in the question of canal tolls which affect coastwise vessels only? To put it another way, what possible right has she to dictate to the United States regarding the control of the United States over American coastwise ships?

Secretary of State Knox, in his reply to England's argument, informs England in the polite language of diplomacy that it is none of her business what this Government does with its own ships.

And Secretary Knox is entirely right.

[From the Manchester (England) Guardian.]

THE PANAMA CANAL BILL.

The amendment limiting the exemption from tolls to coastwise traffic is important for this reason: By the American navigation laws (as by all navigation laws) coastwise traffic is reserved to American registered ships. As none but American ships can make a voyage, say, between San Francisco and New York there can be no question of discrimination against other ships. This coastwise traffic was an American monopoly before the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, and a monopoly it remains, for no one has alleged that the treaty suspends the navigation laws. As America retains the monopoly, we fail to see how any question of discrimination can arise against a second party who does not exist, so far as coastwise traffic is concerned. The real grievance against the bill in its amended form is not against its morality, but something much narrower. It may with fairness be said that the American definition of coastwise traffic is so wide that it includes practically all American shipping. An American vessel may leave San Francisco, touch at Hawaii in the Pacific, double Cape Horn, call at Porto Rico, and finally discharge its cargo at New York without ever losing its coasting character. Our foreign office, when it concluded the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, should have foreseen this practical difficulty, and it could then with reason have pressed for the restriction of the American definitions of coastwise traffic to those limits which hold on European courts. There may still be a chance of so restricting the definition of coastwise traffic, and every effort should be made to use it. But if we are to hope for success we must at any rate give the United States Congress the credit for wanting to do the right thing. We must not begin to call names or stir up passion.

[From the Washington Post.]

MR. KNOX'S CRUSHING REPLY.

Secretary Knox's note in reply to the British request for arbitration of the Panama Canal controversy throws a flood of light upon the matter. It shows that a state of facts exists quite different from the hypothetical situation imagined by Sir Edward Grey, and that upon this state of facts the United States is not discriminating against British shipping, that the Hay-Pauncefote treaty is not violated in lettter or spirit, and therefore that there is nothing to arbitrate. Mr. Knox makes the somewhat humorous suggestion that if there should be a dispute over the facts it might be well to refer the question to a commission of inquiry in the manner provided for in the unratified arbitration treaty of August 3, 1911.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Knox's note is a crushing answer to those Americans who have jumped to the conclusion that this Government has deliberately violated a treaty, to the injury of a friendly nation, for the sake of favoring coastwise shipping, and has then refused to arbitrate the dispute. Sir Edward Grey, whose protest unquestionably was inspired by the Canadian railroads, is clearly shown to have protested against an injury that has not been committed and which he has no right to assume will ever be committed.

THE EIGHT REASONS AGAINST FREE CANAL PASSAGE FOR OUR COASTWISE TRADE.

The eight transcontinental railway lines—the Great Northern, the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Southern Pacific, the Missouri Pacific, the Santa Fe, the Canadian Pacific, and the Milwaukee & St. Paul.

They fought the canal during the period of its inception and growth. Now that it is built they are fighting its service to the people who built it.

Our coastwise vessels mean the carriage of our American products from one coast of our country to another—from one side to another side—from San Francisco and the West to New York and Boston and Philadelphia and the East. We can carry those products by water cheaply and economically, and the East and the West can sell cheaply to each other if each can transport cheaply what it raises and what the other wants. This is the great compelling reason why at an enormous cost we built the canal.

The transcontinental lines never carry cheaply unless competition compels them to do so. They do not dread competition with other continental lines, because they can combine to charge the rates they prescribe. What the transcontinental lines dread is water competition. Water competition, unless they own it, compels cheap rates. When the Government owns the vital link in water competition they can not combine with it to oppress the people. Therefore the transcontinental lines dread Government-owned water competition, and they fight it in each of the many ways they know how to fight.

They are fighting now with all their might the Government's proposition to allow its coastwise vessels to pass free through the Government's great canal.

As long as they can prevent the Government from giving the freight of our coastwise vessels this exemption of $1.25 a ton through the canal, just so long can the transcontinental lines impose this $1.25 a ton upon their freight across the continent. Is it plain?

The transcontinental lines under water competition carry freight cheaply from San Francisco and Portland and Seattle to New York. But these lines charge or have charged as much to carry freight to Denver, which is halfway across the continent and has no water competition, as they charge to carry it 1,500 miles farther on to New York.

Under water competition through the Lakes and the St. Lawrence the vertical continental lines carry freight from Chicago through Atlanta and 300 miles on to Jacksonville, Fla., cheaper than they carry it to Atlanta.

When the Government put a duty on lemons to protect the fruits of California, the transcontinental lines immediately added a freight charge exactly equal to this duty on lemons and thereby destroyed the Government's consideration for a struggling industry on the Pacific coast.

And to-day the transcontinental lines are fighting to make sure that through the canal the Government has built our coastwise vessels can not bring a cargo of California fruit any cheaper than England can bring a cargo of her Asiatic goods.

These are the eight reasons against passing our coastwise vessels free through the canal. These are the eight great obstacles that have laid themselves sheer across the canal to bar free passage to our ships. These are the eight opponents that are joining with England to thwart the purpose of the Government in this vast enterprise.

The transcontinental lines—their owners, their stockholders, their agents, their officials, and their gigantic lobbies—are making the greater part of the clamor that is opposing the people in the canal and the coastwise trade.

Every reason is a selfish reason. Every argument is a selfish argument. Every plea is tainted with self-interest and insincerity.

Corporations have more selfishness than soul. They think less of patriotism than of profit. They put profits above all things, and patriotism can come in if it can find a place.

Don't misunderstand the sentiment against the canal and our coastwise vessels. Don't fail to remember the source from which it comes. Don't fail to trace the eight reasons against the canal to the eight reasoners and their railway rates.

And don't fail to refute and rebuke them all at the ballot with the simple answer of patriotism and common sense.

GREAT BRITAIN AND THE CANAL.

The protest of Great Britain regarding Panama Canal legislation * * * is entitled, of course, to most respectful consideration. It is but natural that that great maritime country should desire to have a voice in the final arrangements for the administration of this important waterway.

The vital fact should be kept in mind that the canal is an exclusively American undertaking. It is being dug by our money under the direction of our citizens, and it is only reasonable that we should provide legislation safeguarding whatever advantage accruing from the piercing of the Isthmus can properly be secured to United States citizens.

The proposed exemption from tolls is not in favor of American shipping as such, but only in favor of shipping plying between American ports. If British vessels were engaged in traffic between American ports they would, by the proposed legislation, be just as much entitled to the exemption as American vessels were engaged in traffic between such traffic, and hence can not hope for the exemption, is because of a shipping law of ours a century old which embodies a national policy. Can we reasonably be asked to abandon that policy and repeal that law on account of the Panama Canal? What Great Britain is really asking is not protection against discrimination at Panama alone but admission into our coastwise traffic on terms of equality.

We may listen to the British appeal, of course, with due courtesy, but it does seem that what is really asked is rather extravagant. Indeed, it will very likely be found that Great Britain is more interested in the bills concerning railroad-owned ships.

FREE TOLLS.

It is possible that Congress may commit an unpardonable blunder with reference to canal tolls.

* * * * * * *

The canal is one national opportunity to benefit almost every State. The East wants Pacific coast lumber, fruit, and other products. It can not get them now at living prices, because the railroads can not afford to haul them at rates to justify their shipment.

The Pacific coast wants eastern manufactured products at prices that do not make them prohibitive. There is scarcely a section of the Union that will not profit in lowered freight rates if the canal tolls are made free to American coastwise shipping. There is scarcely a community in the Union that will not suffer if the tolls are placed so high as to make the canal noncompetitive.

The East, the North, the South, the Middle West, and the Pacific coast are all vitally interested in free tolls. Free tolls will be stimulus for a country-wide development of waterway commerce. They will favorably affect the Lake States, the Mississippi States, the Gulf States, the Atlantic States, and the Pacific States.

* * * * * * *

Public sentiment, voiced by public bodies and otherwise, should thunder at the doors of Congress. That body should not be permitted to make the paramount blunder of imposing tolls at Panama that will drive the remnant of our coastwise shipping from the ocean.

PANAMA CANAL TOLLS.

The only workable point in the claim that the United States must make no discrimination as to tolls through the Panama Canal is in this, that it must make no discrimination as between the vessels of other nations, whatever it may do with regard to vessels of our own. That is all that the world is entitled to claim of us on any fair or businesslike basis. The notion that we can be barred from doing what we will with our own after an expenditure of $400,000,000 to construct that canal is both unreasonable and fantastic. It would, indeed, be a serious assault upon common sense for any nation to come forward with the plea that it had just as much right in the Panama Canal for its vessels as we have there ourselves for our own. It would seem as though the mere statement of the case ought to be enough to refute the claim of common use on equal terms by all the nations of the earth.

CANAL TOLLS AND PLATFORMS.

Within the past few days, we are glad to note, the supporters of the Panama Canal act have been coming to its defense. For a month or more its opponents have been exceedingly busy. The clause exempting coastwise commerce from payment of canal tolls has been vigorously attacked in public addresses, in tracts, and by personal letters. Its enemies are well organized and their campaign seems to be well financed. Its defenders paid little attention to the attack until Senator ROOT delivered his philippic in the Senate and Representative ADAMSON journeyed to Trenton with the hope of winning over the President elect to the Root view.

Since then the discussion has not been so one-sided. Senators O'GORMAN and MARTINE made vigorous reply in the Senate to Mr. Root. Secretary Knox, in his note to the British Government, corrected the misstatements upon which the antiexemption propagandists have builded much of their argument. President Taft reiterated his belief that the exemption should be retained and is not a violation of the treaty.

* * * * * * *

It was Senator O'GORMAN, we believe, who called attention to the fact that the easement to coastwise commerce was a part of the Democratic Party's contract with the voters. The Baltimore platform specifically declared for "the exemption from tolls of American ships engaged in coastwise trade passing through the Panama Canal." So did the platform of the Progressives. The Republican platform was silent upon the issue. So far as the question has been submitted to the people, then, the popular expression has been overwhelmingly in favor of the exemption. There have been no new developments since that expression. The allegation that the exemption would be violative of the treaty was exhaustively discussed in both Houses. There is room for an honest difference of opinion on that point, but it is one to be dealt with for the present through diplomatic channels. Meanwhile it is pleasant to note that the effort of the antiexemption propagandists to stampede public opinion by extravagant speech and by parading mere expressions of opinion as facts is being met by careful and well-considered arguments from the champions of exemption.

[From the Los Angeles (Cal.) Times.]

SENATOR ROOT ON THE TREATY.

The distinguished statesman-Senator from New York has deserved so well of his country and performed so many valuable services to it that much may be tolerated from him. But the Times regrets that he has taken very advanced ground and used very strong language in support of his demand that Congress shall either repeal the Panama Canal law or submit it for arbitration to The Hague tribunal.

The Senator is evidently carried away with his subject when he intimates that the United States is "false to its agreements and false to its pledged word," and is "astute, cunning, and slippery."

* * * * * * *

"On the representations made in the Hay-Pauncefote treaty," continued the Senator, "Great Britain relinquished her right to all control over the future of the Panama Canal."

"Her right." Where did she get any right to control over the future of the Panama Canal? What member of her foreign office ever negotiated with the United States of Colombia or the Republic of Panama with respect to the construction of a canal? What surveyor employed by her ever planted a theodolite in the swamps of Colon? Did she ever expend a shilling in a preliminary examination of a Panama route?

* * * * * * *

Congress, it is to be hoped, will not repeal the Panama Canal law. President Taft, the Times trusts, will not undo what he has done, and it is not believable that President Wilson will smite all the traditions of Democracy in the face and crouch at the feet of Sir Edward Grey. At all events the Times insists that it would be a piece of folly to submit the question to the arbitrament of The Hague—a jury packed against us. That would be self-stultification on our part, and self-reversal would be infinitely preferable. We can not arbitrate whatever we may do in this case.

[From the Wichita (Kans.) Eagle.]

The real competitors to American coastwise shippers are not British ships but American transcontinental railroads.

The whole United States has sanctioned and rejoiced in the enormous expense of building the Panama Canal on an idea that the west coast and the east coast would be united by a cheaper interchange of traffic than is being afforded by the transcontinental railroads.

Great Britain's mighty marine, built up by a subsidy, traverses the high seas of the world. But this coastwise traffic is of infinitely less concern to international traffic than it is to the movement of freight from one domestic border to another.

[From the Buffalo (N. Y.) Enquirer.]

MISDIRECTED FIRE.

If Sir Edward Grey can not think up all the points to offer in reply to Secretary Knox he can discover the remainder by studying the columns of sundry American newspapers. These journals supply all that Sir Edward's ingenuity and acumen may lack.

Instead of massing their argument behind the British foreign secretary, the American opponents of the exemption of American coastwise shipping from the payment of Panama Canal tolls would do better to concentrate on points more likely to have effect on Congress. Prating that the national honor will be sullied by running our own shipping in our own trade through our own canal in our own way will not have overwhelming effect on national policy.
